IN the recently published letters of Matthew Arnold is a sentence which would be appropriate if transformed into a resolution for the new year, and for all after years of life. "To make habitual war on depression and low spirits, which in one's early youth one is apt to indulge," he says, "is one of the things one learns as one gets older. They are noxious alike to body and mind, and already partake of the nature of death." This is strikingly said, and it is perfectly true in human experience. Cheerfulness is a Christian duty we say, but it is a privilege as well, and like many other privileges not to be attained without thought and effort. Depression and despair are enemies to be fought against—elements of the evil world over which faith wins its victory. They "already partake of the nature of death," and our Lord came that we might have life and have it abundantly. In literature pessimism is the precursor of oblivion. It is weakness, and the world loves and follows strength to its clear airs and far-seeing mountain tops. In philosophy the higher instinct of the race is arrayed against the leaders who insist that its pathway leads it swiftly to the pit. In religion the very essence of Christianity—too often denied, but fundamental in the creed of church or individual—is "glad tidings of great joy." A resolve to live in the pure light of Christian cheerfulness, carried out through a life of faith and prayer, will bring us growing joy, and make our witness for the Master effective in the world.

In our issue of Dec. 12 we spoke of the remarkable influence of Rev. J. T. Gulick of Japan in leading the late eminent Professor Romanes back to Christian faith. Dr. Gulick's reply to Professor Romanes's question how he retained his belief in the midst of his scientific researches is published in the Bibliotheca Sacra for the present month. It is a very interesting statement and appeals to the candid consideration of every thoughtful man. It was hardly necessary that Professor Romanes should have had the profound respect he professed for Dr. Gulick's scientific attainments in order to be deeply influenced by this reply to his question. He had himself published six solid volumes on the theory of evolution, yet he declared that the generalizations which Dr. Gulick had reached during his twenty years' thought were of more importance to that theory than anything that has been published in the post-Darwinian period. More than that, Professor Romanes found in Dr. Gulick a counselor, who helped him to a trust in God which he had surrendered. Here is a happy illustration of the influence of faithful missionaries far beyond their fields of labor, and not less of the fact that the fruits of a Christian's diligent study in any direction may not only strengthen his mind and cheer his life, but may be used to bring spiritual blessings to others whom apart from these studies he would never have known.

The First Congregational Church in Denver is to be congratulated on having secured as its pastor Rev. Dr. J. H. Ecob of Albany, N. Y. Dr. Ecob is a graduate of Andover Seminary and was for several years pastor of the Congregational church in Augusta, Me. His pastorate of the Second Presbyterian Church in Albany has been one of strong and beneficent influence. He withdrew from the presbytery four years ago on account of the action of the General Assembly, though he says that action was the occasion rather than the cause of his assuming an independent position. But he was so strong in the love of his people that they gladly retained him as their pastor, and they have ever since stood loyally with him. He regards the action of our National Council at Syracuse, in its declaration concerning Christian unity, to have planted itself on the only rational and practical basis of church unity yet propounded, and returns to the Congregational fold with the purpose to devote himself to the work of federation among the denominations as a step toward unity. We anticipate for Dr. Ecob a spiritual and successful ministry in Denver.

An American Anti-Saloon League was formed in Washington, D. C., Dec. 18. The convention was attended by representatives of a number of temperance organizations throughout the country. Its purpose is thus expressed in its constitution:

> The object of this league is the suppression of the saloon. To this end we invite the alliance of all who are in harmony with this object, and the league pledges itself to avoid affiliation with any political party as such and to maintain an attitude of neutrality upon questions of public policy not directly and immediately concerned with the traffic in strong drink.

Its president is Hon. Hiram Price of Iowa, Rev. H. H. Russell of Columbus, O., is superintendent, James L. Ewin of Washington, secretary, and F. W. Walsh of Boston, treasurer. Among its officers are Hon. Elijah A. Morse of Massachusetts, Bishops Galloway of Mississippi and Kephart of Maryland and other well-known men. The league will co-operate with the National Temperance Society in efforts to secure the passage of its bill for a commission of inquiry as to the alcoholic liquor traffic and has other important measures in view. The attendance represented temperance workers throughout the country, and its avowed purposes show that it may accomplish great good and that it is worthy of hearty and generous support.

A hopeful method of concentrating the strength of a group of churches upon problems of the vicinage is that to which the Evangelical Alliance is just now calling attention. In a series of brief but forceful leaflets it sets forth the advantages of local alliances organized on an evangelical doctrinal basis, but laboring especially for the social improvement of the community through better enforcement of law, the rescue of the unfortunate and depraved, better observance of Sunday and larger interest in educational and civic matters of common concern. Other benefits of such an organization would be the cultivation of Christian fellowship and the avoidance of waste and competition between the denominations. The plan has the hearty indorsement of men like Drs. Parkhurst, F. E. Clark, J. H. Barrows and J. H. Vincent, and practical aid in consummating the endeavor in any city or town will be gladly given by the secretary of the alliance, Rev. Josiah Strong, D. D., 511 United Charities Building, New York.

THE RETURN OF THE JAPANESE DEPUTATION.

There is widespread rejoicing among all who have held in prayerful thought the four men who early in September left San Francisco to carry sympathy and counsel to our Japanese brethren that this deputation is once more in this country, having sailed in through the Golden Gate on Christmas Eve. Dr. J. L. Barton and Hon. W. P. Ellison of the Prudential Committee are expected in Boston this week and the other two members of the committee, Dr. J. G. Johnson of Chicago and Dr. A. H. Bradford of Montclair, are probably just now also reaching their respective homes. The deputation has been abundantly favored in its journeys over land and sea, accorded the heartiest of welcomes by both missionaries and native Christians in Japan, has made thorough and patient inquiry into conditions there prevalent and has reached decisions with great unanimity of opinion.

Just what are its ultimate conclusions on questions at issue, most of which relate to matters of internal administration, will not, of course, transpire until the deputation makes its official report to the Prudential Committee, which appointed it. This account of stewardship will probably be rendered in the course of a fortnight. At present we need to do little more than chronicle the fact of their return, though it is safe to infer from the cheerful tone of their letters that their mission has not been a fruitless one. Certainly the sojourning in Japan for three months of these four wise, genial and able representatives of American Congregationalism could not but bring fresh courage and enthusiasm to our workers there, who have felt so keenly for the last few years the exceedingly complicated nature of the task upon their hands. And we are sure that the advancement of Christianity in this young empire will be more rapid and permanent because of the labors and influence of this commission.

In this connection it may be of interest to recall the circumstances of previous deputations sent out by the Board. There have been only two in all the long history of its operation in foreign lands. In 1854 Secretary Anderson and Dr. Thompson went to India, stopping on their return in Turkey. In 1883 Secretaries Clark and Alden and Mr. Elbridge Torrey of the Prudential Committee visited Turkey, being joined on the other side of the water by the late Dr. A. L. Chapin of Beloit and Prof. C. M. Mead, who aided the official representatives of the Board in their investigations on missionary soil.

The Board has certainly not erred in sending too many deputations to foreign lands. The outcome of their work abundantly justifies the incidental expense, but as respects the cost involved in this duputation to Japan it should be understood that it was met entirely by private subscription by a few individuals. Gentlemen in Chicago provided for Dr. Johnson and Eastern givers of like-minded generosity assumed the expenses of the other three members of the committee. Thus there has been no drain upon the regular resources of the Board, but even if this had been the case we are confident that no item of expense could be more legitimate or productive of more valuable results than that involved in the occasional sending of well-equipped deputations to our various mission fields.

1895—THE RELIGIOUS WORLD.

Great advances have been made of late in writing contemporary history. The thoughtful student of his own times will not fail now at the beginning of the year to spend a few hours in some library looking over the files of selected newspapers and magazines to refresh his memory of the course of events in 1895. He will find that no science has progressed faster than that of writing history, till the world's life has come to be reproduced by the press with almost photographic accuracy.

In our review of the year we give religious events the first place. The unprejudiced student recognizes the fact that they were never more clearly entitled to it than they are today. The interest in the Eastern question turns on its religious aspects. The restraining hand on the rising passions of Americans and Englishmen facing each other is the hand of Christian fellowship. The unity of nations which men hope for has for its basis religious sympathy. In whatever direction we look over the paths trodden by human footsteps through the year just closed the influence of religion is prominent, and that alone suggests any controlling purpose giving direction to their tangled mazes. No more striking fact appears as we look backward than this growing recognition of the permanent element of religion as the most vital force in history, in political, social and personal life. Scientific, philosophical and speculative thinkers alike accept it as a fact that the foundations of moral and spiritual truths, though beyond the bounds of exact observation, are always essential factors to be included in their researches. Materialism is yielding to the claims of the spiritual in human experience.

Widespread disturbances in the East have brought the subject of missions into new prominence and made it of chief interest in religious circles. The ideas of individual responsibility, of exalted humanity, of brotherhood and liberty introduced into ancient nations by Christian teachers and preachers of necessity have been potent factors in creating these disturbances. They have kindled new ambitions in Japan, have quickened thought in India, have roused bitter opposition in China and Turkey. In the two latter countries massacres of missionaries, suspension of the work of Christian colleges and schools and destruction of their property have been only incidents of great political movements, but they have shown how closely the missionary efforts of the United States and England have been united in the birth throes of the new life that is coming to Eastern nations. Financial depression has reduced greatly the income of missionary societies. Japan is foremost in discussing the self-government of Christian churches, and the American Board has wisely sent a deputation to consult with Japanese Christians concerning its future policy in that country. It has returned and its report may soon be expected. Similar questions will soon demand attention in other nations, and their appearance is a hopeful sign. But they indicate a new stage in the history of missions with great and pressing problems.

Christian unity has continued to hold the attention of leaders in the various denominations. The Pope's invitation to the Eastern Catholic Church to unite with the Roman has called forth from the authorities of the former a warning against the proselyting efforts of the latter. His encyclical calling on Protestant bodies to return to the mother church shows that the Roman Church contemplates no union with other Christian bodies except by absorbing them. Episcopalians, by the declaration of their national convention at Minneapolis, have practically receded from the Lambeth propositions, and demand also acceptance of their prayer book and ritual as conditions of union. Unitarians have offered to unite with everybody who will profess as great liberality as they do. Congregationalists have proposed as a basis of union belief in Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord, in the church and in the Bible, which each may interpret according to the dictates of his own conscience. It was just that liberty of interpretation which created divisions in the Christian Church, and it will continue to do so till that liberty is freely admitted by all and the results of such interpretation are accepted for what they are worth. Yet one can hardly fail to see in these things a real movement toward unity in aim and spirit, only to be maintained with diversities of administration. Investigation of the basis of religious beliefs is more free than it was a year ago, but it is also more reverent. Christians have come nearer to one another. Christianity is more inclusive. It gives more generous and intelligent recognition to diversities of operations in different races and nations which yet it acknowledges as wrought by the same Spirit. Christianity also recognizes more than ever before the value of aspirations and faith in other religions.

Yet the forces are still mighty which would tear Christians asunder. Nations which claim to be Christian have for more than twelve long months stood by to look on the most barbaric and extensive martyrdom of Christians by Muslims in the whole Christian era, and yet have been so jealous of one another that they have not lifted a finger to stop the wholesale slaughter, and the new year opens with hundreds of thousands of starving survivors in Armenia, and money not offered to buy them food. It is a strange comment on the progress of humanity that the greatest massacres of Christians in the Christian era occurred in the year 1895. In America many Protestants are promoting political organization against Roman Catholics. If hatred of the Jews is less rampant in Russia, it is growing in Germany and Austria.

Efforts to force conformity within religious denominations have met with varying success. Presbyterians in the United States have pressed further the attempt of their General Assembly to secure control of their theological seminaries, but have gained nothing so far. The letter of six Episcopal bishops last winter declaring authoritatively the church doctrines of the incarnation and inspiration probably raised more questions than it settled. The Liberal party in England made Canon Farrar Dean of Canterbury and Canon Freemantle Dean of Ripon, but when the party was overthrown Welsh disestablishment, which seemed near at hand, was defeated. Perhaps these movements are only eddies in the stream of Christian progress toward that harmony of Christian life whose ideal is freedom because force is unnecessary and uncalled for.

The revival of patriotism which the churches have diligently labored for seems to have had its share of influence in bringing forth an ambition to fight other nations which has just found expression in an outbreak of war talk between the United States and England. But this, let us hope, is only an incidental evil in the development of that loyalty to country which would make it, not the most belligerent toward other countries, but the most helpful to them all.

The younger Christian life of the churches is in favor of closer affiliation of all followers of Jesus Christ and the realization of Christian union in practical measures for the uplifting of mankind. The great convention of the Y. P. S C. E. in Boston last July, and the conventions of Methodist and Baptist young people's societies in Chattanooga and in Baltimore, made impressions which were felt throughout the entire country. In the spirit which they exhibited the whole Christian church may face the present year with courage, though with grave consciousness of great problems to be solved only by steadfast faith, unceasing prayer and whole souled service of Christ.

1895—THE WORLD OF SCIENCE, STATECRAFT AND INDUSTRY.

During the past year the people of the United States have reaped bounteous crops of the staple products; have taken from the mines vast quantities of gold, silver, copper and iron; have suffered much from flood and fire; have received fair prices for the fruit of their co-operation with nature, and higher wages than in 1894 for the labor of their hands—whether done in the field, in the home or factory. The shrinkage in values has abated, capital has again dared to take risks in investments, truer conceptions respecting national monetary standards have found lodgment in the minds of the masses, and, as the new year opens, naught bars the way to national prosperity save our national legislators' persistence in refusing to treat the subjects of tariff and currency reform as questions of national economy and statecraft. The national debt has increased since the national revenue has not equaled the expenditures, and the drain upon the gold reserve of the Treasury has compelled the Administration to issue bonds. The year can scarcely be counted one in which the cause of bimetallism has made marked advance, either here or abroad. The facts refuse to conform to the theories of the friends of silver. The enormous increase of gold output during the year is by no means its least significant phenomenon.

The popular will, as recorded in the municipal, State and congressional elections, is clearly against both the Democratic and Populist parties. The Fifty-third Congress, which expired in March, died with a record of imbecility and inanity beyond that of any of its predecessors. The Fifty-fourth Congress is controlled by the Republicans and may be expected to act consistently and vigorously, if not always wisely. New Jersey, for the first time in many years, and Maryland and Kentucky, for the first time in their history, have Republican governors. The disintegration of the Bourbon Democracy of the South has proceeded at a rapid rate, and it is doubtful whether it ever will be solid again on other than racial issues. In the North the American Protective Association has done much to add to the perplexities of the Republican party, and complicated local and State issues.

Although the cause of municipal reform received a setback in New York city when Tammany won in the fall elections, the reform as a whole has made great strides during the past year. With honest police commissioners in New York city it has been found possible to suppress the Sunday saloon and eliminate most, if not all, of the blackmail upon which the police formerly grew rich. Chicago has elected a reform mayor and indorsed by a popular vote the principle of a civil service based on merit. New Orleans, Baltimore and Philadelphia have seen the beginnings of movements calculated to redeem them from misrule. Boston has secured a better charter, and in municipal elections throughout the land the tone of the campaign has been raised much, and in many instances the candidates of citizens rather than the tools of politicians have been elected to office.

The cause of woman's suffrage has not marched on with strides, though it has gained somewhat, chiefly in the West and South. Massachusetts has declined to instruct its legislators to grant even municipal suffrage to women. The South Carolina Constitutional Convention considered the project of granting suffrage to women, but finally spurned it, even though some men, otherwise conservative, thought they saw in it a method of insuring white supremacy. The Canadian House of Commons, by a vote of 105 to 47, rejected a woman's suffrage act. In Utah, however, the Constitutional Convention has made the organic law of the future State so inclusive that women from the first will have civic rights and duties similar to those of men. Bismarck has intimated that German politics would be much nobler if women were voters, and throughout Christendom women have influenced electors, officials and statesmen more than ever before, even though they have usually had to do it by indirect methods.

The Federal Supreme Court once more has full ranks, Justice Peckham taking the place of Justice Jackson, deceased. It is doubtful whether the court stands quite as high in public esteem as it did before its decisions affirming the unconstitutionality of the income tax section of the Wilson-Gorman Tariff Law. Not that its final verdict was not popular, but some of the features of the court's treatment of this important case were such as to lessen confidence in its infallibility and exemption from the partisanship to which laymen are subject.

Two decisions of the Illinois Supreme Court, one denying the constitutionality of the Eight Hour Law and the other shattering the Whisky Trust, are worth noting. The Iowa Supreme Court has upheld the constitutionality of the Mulct Liquor Law under which that State—formerly prohibition—is now operating its traffic in intoxicants. The United States Circuit Court has denied the authority of the State of South Carolina, under its Dispensary Law, to shut out of the State liquor manufactured without the State and brought into it in original packages, and the same court refused to interpose a judicial decree forbidding the holding of the South Carolina Constitutional Convention, notwithstanding it was alleged that representation in it was to be determined by methods which denied suffrage to many of the black voters of the State.

The Federal Supreme Court's reaffirmation of the authority of Federal equity court judges to issue injunctions and punish, without trial by jury, all who in labor troubles they, the judges, adjudge guilty of disobedience or contempt of the judicial decrees has given the stamp of highest authority to the policy which the Federal authorities—judicial and executive—pursued in 1894, and has determined once for all the right of the nation to insist on the maintenance of order, the continuity of traffic and transportation, and the authority of Federal officials when State officials prove recreant or incompetent. To those who deplore this extension of the authority of equity court judges and the denial of the right of trial by jury there is but one recourse left now, viz., to annul the authority upon which the Supreme Court now relies. That the organized laborers of the country, as well as many others not of their ranks, deplore this extension of Federal authority has been proved by the way in which they have shown their sympathy for Mr. Debs, the most prominent sufferer of the penalty for contempt of court.

Compared with 1894 it has been a quiet year in the labor world. Brooklyn and Philadelphia, the former in January, the latter in December, have been the scenes of great strikes among the employés of the street railway companies In both instances, until they indulged in violence and attacked non-union laborers, the strikers had the sympathy of the public—thanks to the persistent exactions of the monopolies. But in Brooklyn, where the contest lasted for weeks and seven thousand of the State militia were summoned to secure and preserve peace, both the strikers and the city officials lost the public sympathy, the latter by their supineness, the former by their malicious injury of fellowmen, and the company's property. New Orleans has seen a labor riot, complicated by the caste hatred of whites for blacks. In New York the victims of the "sweating system" have twice won victories over the contractors, who desire to maintain that vicious system of manufacturing clothing. In several other labor controversies in the metropolis, Bishop Potter has won honor as a man and servant of God by successfully serving as arbitrator.

Great Britain has seen two great strikes, one among the operators in the shoe factories, which was finally settled with honor by the arbitration of the Rosebery ministry; the other a great strike among the shipmakers on the Clyde which is still on, all efforts to induce the owners to arbitrate having failed. In Great Britain, as well as in the United States, there has been a reaction among the trades-unionists against socialism, and conservatives once more control the machinery of the highest trades-union assemblies.

Temperance reform has made no notable variations. Prohibition as a partisan issue is weaker, if anything, than it was a year ago. Local option in limited areas is the only theory that in practice seems to be holding its own. Georgia has refused to establish a dispensary system similar to South Carolina's, which system there, after Jan. 1, will be authorized by the new constitution. The rigid enforcement of the Sunday Excise Law in New York city has lessened crime there, improved the tone of the police force and complicated local and State politics to such an extent that the revision or indorsement of this law will be one of the live subjects discussed by the next legislature. Maine and New Hampshire have seen a somewhat stricter enforcement of their prohibitory laws.

Congress, by passing the Anti-lottery Bill in March, made it possible to attack the lottery companies in such a way as to practically put an end to their use of the mails, and enhance the peril of using the express companies as carriers. New Jersey, Massachusetts and Rhode Island have so legislated as to strengthen the hands of those who enforce the anti-gambling laws, and throughout the nation there is a much higher standard of law and law enforcement. Pugilism also has been suppressed, so as to be practically extinct, thanks to the vigorous action of Southern governors and legislators in States that formerly served as safe fighting grounds.

Civil-Service Reform has made notable advances in Washington, thanks to the executive orders of President Cleveland and his department chiefs; in New York State, thanks to the operations of the new constitution and the support the principle has in the organic law of the State; in Chicago, where, by a popular vote and overwhelming majority, the city's service was taken out of the hands of spoilsmen. Most notable of all in New York city, thanks to Mayor Strong and Mr. Theodore Roosevelt and his associates on the Board of Police Commissioners, neither the Tammany nor the Republican "machines" now have aught to do with the administration of the police or street-cleaning departments.

The report of the British Opium Commission was adverse to the claims of the philanthropists of England and India, who denounce the opium trade as a source of government revenue; and Canada's royal commission reported against prohibition of the liquor traffic.

It has been a year remarkable for phenomena indicating a renaissance of patriotism, a renewal of interest in the nation's history and great men, and the unification of all sections of the country. Patriotic orders have multiplied. Historic spots have been fitly marked. Patriots' Day, April 19, Massachusetts' new holiday, was celebrated for the first time with marked enthusiasm. The dedication of the great military park at Chickamauga and the visits of Northern state officials and generals to the Atlanta Exposition gave opportunities for declarations of fraternal love and devotion to country, marvelous when one remembers that the Civil War ended only thirty years ago. And as the year closed preparations for a great procession of Federal and Confederate veterans in New York city next Fourth of July were under way, and the national Senate has voted to remove the last disabilities of Confederate soldiers and sailors.

Science, especially applied science, has not been wanting in victories. Argon and helium, if not discovered during the year, have been indisputably demonstrated as existent. Anti-toxine as a reliable foe of diphtheria has been firmly established in the hospitals of the world and in general practice. Acetylene as an illuminant, a rival of electricity, and a reducer of the price of one of the necessities of life has leaped into the field. The vast water power of Niagara has been harnessed, set at work developing electricity, which is expected to create a large new manufacturing center in Western New York, light and heat and drive the factories of distant cities in New York State, Ohio and Pennsylvania and furnish the power to propel boats through the Erie Canal, toward the improvement of which the State of New York has just voted $9,000,000. Commerce in and near the metropolis also will profit by the opening of the Harlem Ship Canal. Germany, by opening the great ship canal at Kiel, has united the Baltic and the North Sea, saved mariners many leagues and strengthened her strategic position. Great Britain and her colonies have at last agreed upon a policy which calls for the speedy laying of a Pacific cable. At home we have profited by the Cotton States Exposition at Atlanta, which has made known Southern resources in raw materials and Southern attainments in manufactures to the inhabitants of that section of the country, and as well to many Northern capitalists and prospective immigrants.

A higher standard of æsthetics has prevailed in our municipal life. New York has seen the dedication of the Washington Arch and the site chosen for a soldiers' and sailors' monument which will be selected and perfected by competent art critics. The same city also has seen the beginning of adequate mural decoration of its municipal court buildings. Boston's superb public library building has been opened to the public and begun to do an educational work as an art center—as well as library—which will influence greatly the thousands from abroad who visit it, and in Washington the development of the decorative scheme of the new Congressional Library has begun to impress legislators and citizens with the wisdom shown in giving carte blanche to an architect of high standing in the profession, and in departing from the policy which hitherto governed the nation in its selection of plans for Federal buildings.

Despite the seeming failure of the principle of arbitration in the dispute between Great Britain and Venezuela, it has been a year when arbitration, as a method of settling international differences, has won its way towards general acceptance, and our share as a nation in it has been most creditable. President Cleveland arbitrated in a boundary dispute between Brazil and Argentine Republic, deciding in favor of Brazil. Our Secretary of State and minister to Mexico did much to settle a long-standing difference between Mexico and Guatemala. Japan and China have formally and informally recognized, in a very substantial way, the services our diplomats rendered in making the way easy for a peace between those nations, and that we have not succeeded in inducing Great Britain to arbitrate her dispute with Venezuela is because Lord Salisbury stubbornly refuses to do what Great Britain has repeatedly done in other cases. Sentiment in Europe favoring arbitration is slowly gaining and, during the past year, several hundred members of the British House of Commons have united in petitioning Congress to vote in favor of submitting all disputes between the United States and Great Britain to arbitration, and the French House of Deputies asked the French Government to negotiate a treaty of similar purport.

Canada's refusal to accept Newfoundland on the latter's terms has left the latter colony to struggle on as best it can under a blighting debt and a dwindling local industry. Manitoba's school problem is still unsettled, to the sorrow of Canadian politicians, who hate to commit themselves on an issue so disruptive, and thus far have succeeded admirably in hedging.

Mexico has continued to prosper under President Diaz, its only difficulty abroad, that with Guatemala, having been amicably settled. The dispute between Nicaragua and Great Britain ended in Great Britain receiving the indemnity she demanded, but not until British marines had been landed and the guns of men-of-war trained on Corinto. San Salvador in this controversy did much to aid Nicaragua, and for this and other reasons a degree of harmony now exists among the Central American republics which is quite unusual and is favorable to the promotion of a federation, which would be advantageous both in peace and war.

Cuba has been the arena for a struggle between Spain's army and a rebel host, which has openly and covertly fought Spain with a determination and success never known before, and as the new year dawns the outlook for Cuba's independence is very bright. In Hawaii a rebellion against the new republic has been crushed, not without the shedding of blood, however. Martial law reigned for a time. The ex-queen and not a few former American and British citizens were found guilty of conspiracy, but the moderation of the sentences imposed saved the new republic from criticism, avoided complications with the great Powers and left its authorities free to face and solve the more pressing domestic problems of finance, immigration and education.

South American republics have had their chronic upheavals, but they have not been as numerous nor as serious as in some past years. The dispute between British Guiana and Venezuela over boundary lines and territory rich with auriferous deposits has involved the United States and Great Britain in a discussion of the much larger question, viz., the meaning, scope and force of the Monroe Doctrine, which discussion for a few days seemed to lead logically to a declaration of war between the great leaders of Anglo-Saxon civilization. Fortunately the sober sense of the people found vent before it was too late to avert fratricidal war, and at present it seems as if out of the flurry a greater degree of friendship between the two nations might come forth.

Great Britain has witnessed the revolt of the electors against the Rosebery ministry and the radical Liberal program, the return of Lord Salisbury to power with Joseph Chamberlain as lieutenant, the adoption of a more vigorous colonial policy, the alliance of Anglican and Roman Catholic forces to increase general taxation for sectarian schools, the development of a strong but not overwhelming public demand for interference with the Turk in behalf of Armenia, and a decided setback to British interests in the far East where, in the settlement of the conflict between China and Japan, Russia, France and Germany scored the most points.

France soon found out that Casimir-Perier had feet of clay, and the supposed strong man early in the year abdicated and gave way to M. Felix Faure, who has filled the position of president creditably. That a thorough understanding persists between France and Russia has been demonstrated often, at Peking and at Constantinople notably. The vast African island, Madagascar, has passed entirely under the control of France, to add to her area but not her wealth unless this new possession proves unlike her other colonies. Germany has held her own in diplomacy but in domestic affairs retrograded. The empire as such is weaker than at any time since it was cemented in blood. Prussian dominance is causing much chafing in the other states, and the emperor's reactionary and repressive policy of exterminating socialism is fast alienating from the throne men who believe in a constitutional monarchy but cannot endure despotism.

Italy has bettered its financial condition somewhat. Crispi has retained his place and power as premier. No concessions to the Vatican have been made, and, though there has been no formal sundering of the Triple Alliance, Italy now is Great Britain's only ally in European statecraft. Leo XIII. has invited the people of England to re-enter the Roman Church fold, and tried desperately by ways open and devious to win back schismatics in the Orient, but to no purpose. Spain has added greatly to its already crippling debt, has seen the flower of its youth start for Cuba on what promises now to be a vain effort to save the island. The large Mora claim of $1,000,- 000 has been paid to a citizen of the United States whose property suffered in a prior revolution in Cuba, but no concession has been made to the claims of the A. B. C. F. M. that its missionaries be allowed to resume labors on the Caroline Islands. In Austria, especially in Hungary, a larger measure of civil and religious liberty has been won after a desperate fight in the national legislature against the ecclesiastics of Rome. Norway and Sweden have progressed toward more amicable relations. Bulgaria, now that it has lost Stambuloff, seems to be drifting Russiaward, and its future becomes more and more problematical. Russia, in diplomacy, has won notable victories, and is silently but surely compassing its ends. The young czar has not revealed that liberality which it was hoped he would, but the very latest reports from Russia indicate that he at last is asserting authority and that in the direction of a more liberal régime. The Armenian population has been decimated by the sword of the Turk and Kurd, and the rigors of winter and the lack of food and raiment bid fair to reduce the race to extremities ere spring comes. The sultan has played with the six great Powers of Europe, made their mutual jealousies serve his diabolical ends, and as the year closes Christendom lifts up its hands with horror quite as much at the impotency of Christian Europe as at the ferocity of the Moslem Turk.

China has been brought low by Japan. The former in its effort to place loans wherewith to pay the indemnity conceded to Japan has sought Russian and French rather than British aid, and the concessions made to commerce and manufacturers will benefit Japan, the United States and Russia. Japan has just conquered the island of Formosa, which China was forced to concede to her. She has in her coffers, or will have, a vast sum paid in indemnity wherewith to recoup her expenses and provide a stronger navy. She has found out, through the intervention of Russia, France and Germany, that Europe pretends to and as yet can decide just what the fruits of victory in war—even in the Orient—must be. By her prowess and skill, on land and sea, she has won a high place among the nations, and her competition in the arts of peace is occasioning quite as much alarm as her attainments in the science and practice of war.

The partition of Africa has proceeded at a rapid rate. Uganda has passed under British control, and the agreement between Great Britain and the East Africa Company has still further strengthened the British grip on the Continent. The slave trade in Zanzibar still remains a blot on British rule there. The Congo Free State is not flourishing under Belgian control and a change there is imperative. The marvelous product of the gold fields in South Africa has made enormous fortunes for men who as a rule have no just conception of the mission of wealth, and attracted to Africa a grade of men not best adapted to elevate the natives or build civilized Christian States.

The world of scholarship is poorer because of the death of J. R. Seeley, Arthur Cayley, Henry Rawlinson, J. Stuart Blackie, Gneist, Von Sybel and A. C. Merriam. Science has lost Huxley, Pasteur and J. D. Dana. Literature is bereft of Dumas fils, Freytag, Boyesen, W. W. Story and Eugene Field. Secretary of State Gresham, Justice Jackson of the Supreme Court, ex-Justice Strong, ex-Senator Thurman and Frederick Douglass never again can shape our national affairs, and Bulgaria mourns for Stambuloff, Russia for her great foreign minister, M. Giers, and England notes the absence of Lord Randolph Churchill.

Of leaders of ethical and religious life we miss Julius H. Seelye of Amherst, Rev. Drs. William M. Taylor, John A. Broadus, A. J. Gordon, A. A. Miner, Edward Beecher and Rev. S. F. Smith, author of "America," while Nonconformity in Great Britain lost its greatest preacher and leader when Rev. Dr. R. W. Dale passed on. Veteran missionaries like W. H. Scudder, H. M. Scudder, C. Van Dyck and George C. Knapp have gone to their reward, and our denomination misses the wisdom and gifts of such laymen as Langdon S. Ward, Franklin Fairbanks and David M. Stone, the veteran editor of the Journal of Commerce.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

It is interesting to remember, as the Week of Prayer is observed this year, that it is exactly half a century since the Evangelical Alliance was formed. The circular which this excellent organization has just issued calls attention fittingly to the great progress which Christianity has made during the past fifty years as well as to the threatening perils of our times. Surely we have much to be grateful for and much to encourage us, but also much to convince us that a tremendous warfare for Christ is yet to be waged.

The growth of religious tolerance has been striking during the half-century. This is true in a degree of Roman Catholic countries and far more true of those which are Protestant. Moreover, such facts as the development and success of the International Sunday School Lesson System, the advance in intelligent Biblical criticism of all schools, the growth of Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, the Students' Volunteer Movement and the wonderful history of the Christian Endeavor Society are full of cheer to every Christian heart.

Another fact deserves note. The spirit of Jesus Christ is making itself felt among many who still hold aloof from the churches. Christian character in its purity never has been more honored than now. Many who mistakenly regard the different branches of the church with distrust acknowledge frankly their reverence for Jesus Christ, and some of the most formidable perils of the period are not without signs of possible useful results.

It is a time for Christians to examine themselves in earnest, to bow themselves penitently and humbly before God, to reform their lives, to renew their consecration, and to plan boldly, wisely and hopefully for the future. Let the Week of Prayer remind us all once more of the immense power of sincere and united prayer and recall especially the infinite love of the Almighty and his readiness to hear and answer prayer.

Robertson Nicoll thinks that one of the greatest desiderata of English literature is a really great commentary on the Sermon on the Mount. He states, also, that Dr. Dale intended to prepare such a work, but it was one of several projects which his lamented death left uncompleted. Perhaps on this side the water some one may arise, in due season, who will construct a work that will be considered a monumental piece of literature. When men claim to know just what Jesus meant by that wonderful discourse, and are applying it so jauntily and positively to modern life, there is all the more need for an interpretation that shall commend itself to the Christian mind and the Christian heart.

THE WEEK IN REVIEW.

The National Legislature.

The Senate with but little debate has voted to adopt Senator Hill's proposition restoring to ex-Confederate officers the right to serve in the United States army and navy. Senator Hill introduced this proposition at a time when war talk was popular, when Southern men were vying with Northerners in protestations of loyalty, and the Senate responded quickly to the suggestion that the last trace of disability be removed from men who are as willing now to fight for the Union as they were to disrupt it formerly. In obedience to the suggestion of the President, both in his annual message and in his special message on the financial situation of the nation, the House of Representatives has passed two measures, intended by its Republican majority to be their answer to the President's suggestions, none of which have they adopted. One of these measures, the bill increasing tariff rates for a limited time, calculated to add $40,000,000 annually to the national resources and described by its authors as a temporary measure for revenue increase only, may pass the Senate. The second measure, which met with considerable opposition within the Republican ranks authorizes the secretary to issue short-term, five-year, coin-not-gold, three per cent. bonds and supplements this with authority to issue at his discretion certificates of indebtedness to an extent not exceeding $50,000,000, payable in three years in lawful money with interest at three per cent. This bill cannot pass the Senate as it is now constituted. Whether the first measure, that increasing tariff duties and attempting to improve the situation of the Treasury by increasing revenue, will be vetoed by the President, should it pass the Senate, is an open question. A new issue of bonds for which the Administration undoubtedly has been negotiating during the past week, without waiting for the action of the Senate, would indicate that a veto was to be expected. The President and his Secretary of the Treasury are committed to the policy which insists that currency reform, and that alone, can remedy the situation. The Republican majority believes that naught is practicable now save increase of receipts through increase of revenue. Owing to this difference of opinion the nation bids fair to witness a large increase of the national debt, the maintenance of a banking system confessedly at fault and a continuation of the ruinous policy of borrowing money to pay running expenses. And yet, with such a standing exhibition of the inability of our representatives to rise to the altitude of statesmen, Senator Hoar, president of the American Historical Society, at its annual meeting last week, ventured to censure those American citizens who express their discontent with the situation.

The Manitoba School Question.

Politics in Canada in connection with the Manitoba school question are becoming intensely interesting and exciting. It will be remembered that in July last three of the French ministers resigned because of want of confidence that the government would pass remedial legislation. More definite promises satisfied all but Hon. A. R. Angers, whose resignation was accepted. Now Hon. Clark Wallace has resigned from the ministry because the pledge for which the French ministers contended is to be pressed by the government when the Parliament reassembles early in January. In the meantime three by elections have been held, the results of which may be taken as emphatic condemnations of the government's policy. In Cardwell, on Dec. 24, the Conservative candidate met with a severe defeat, while in Montreal Center on the Friday after a previous government majority of 1,214 was changed into a minority of 336, when Hon. James McShane was elected over Sir William Hingston. These facts are indicative of trying times for the authorities at Ottawa, and then, coming as the crowning event of interest, is the dissolution of Manitoba legislature so that an appeal may be made to the people on Jan. 15. Hon. Thomas Greenway, leader of the legislature, in his address to his constituents of Mountain, distinctly states that the school question is the main issue of the contest. His platform is the maintenance of national schools as set forth in the reply just forwarded to Ottawa in answer to the second order of the Dominion Government.

Great Britain and the United States.

The members of the commission which is to investigate the boundary line dispute between British Guiana and Venezuela have not been selected. Though Great Britain probably will not recognize the commission formally, it now seems probable that informally she will do all that courtesy and necessity demand to place the strongest possible statement of the British case in the possession of the commissioners, especially if the President selects men of the first grade. The tone of the British press has altered within a week; it is far less belligerent, and, coupled with the pacific utterances of such men as the Prince of Wales, Lord Rosebery, Cardinal Vaughn, the appeal of British men of letters to the authors of the United States, and the conciliatory declarations of Scotch chambers of commerce and Scotch presbyteries, it would seem to indicate that there is a firm basis for a body of public opinion in Great Britain which will deal quite as faithfully with Lord Salisbury for his refusal of arbitration as that sentiment which in this country has not winced from criticising our diplomats for their responsibility in creating the ill-feeling. It is only by some such exhibition of the highest form of patriotism and statesmanship that this difficulty can be solved. The criticism and punishment of leaders and the recession cannot be all on our side of the Atlantic. The very men, clergymen and jurists, and journals that last week felt it their supreme duty to criticise the method adopted by the President, Mr. Olney and Congress will be found most resolute in their defense of the general principle that lies back of the Monroe Doctrine. Sentiment in Latin-America of course is enthusiastically arrayed with the United States and against Great Britain. Brazil through its national legislature has sent congratulations to Congress. Venezuela is fêting Americans and threatening Englishmen, and a spark struck forth there may any day ignite the powder and precipitate a crisis. Meanwhile talk of a Pan-American congress to define and assert the Monroe Doctrine and make it American international law is current.

The Situation in the East.

Turkey's internal problems are quite as menacing as her foreign. Turkish troops fought with the Druses on Dec. 21, and though a victory for the Turks is reported the Druses, who are a warlike tribe of mixed blood and restive under Turkish rule, are still militant, and disorder and distrust prevail in Syria as well as among the Armenians of the north. Conspiracy and violence rule within the palace at Constantinople, and the financial situation of the nation is such that the most urgent appeals to the provinces for funds are being issued at the same time that European bankers are being besought to make new loans, to be guaranteed by specified sources of revenue. Zeitoun, reports to the contrary notwithstanding, is still held by the brave, beleaguered Armenian force, and the efforts of the foreign embassies in Constantinople to sceure for these defiers of the Turkish Power such terms of surrender as will save them from massacre thus far have failed, owing chiefly to the unwillingness of the Russian minister to co operate. Russia during the past week has acted so as to warrant the belief that she purposes to interfere and carry out a policy of her own with reference to Armenia. The Black Sea fleet has left Sevastopol—destination unknown. A delegation of Armenians, sent to St. Petersburg some time since to entreat and secure Russian interposition, was told last week that Russia was prepared to act, if three other European Powers would intimate their willingness to have her intervene; and the latest news from England would seem to point to such a concession on the part of Great Britain, who, it is said, will co-operate in the Mediterranean with her navy, while Russia pours her troops over the frontier from the north. It is needless to say that if Great Britain has at last accepted the advice of those British students of history and diplomacy who for years have been urging a Russian alliance, then a step of incalculable significance has been taken, one that means more to the world's future history than it is possible to calculate now. Evidence corroborative of a better understanding between Russia and Great Britain is discovered by some authorities in China's latest concession of four states on the Burmo-Chinese frontier, they holding that Russian influence, now paramount at Peking, would not have permitted such a cession unwittingly.

The Armenian Christians and the A. B. C. F. M. Missionaries.

Testimony from Armenia respecting the brutality, lust and savagery of the Turkish and Kurdish servants of the sultan is pouring in to Great Britain and the United States in a stream that is as impressive in volume as it is heart-breaking in its details. Armenian merchants and workmen in our New England cities and towns are just beginning to get details respecting the destruction of their former homes and the murder of their kindred. The secretaries of the American Board are learning in the most explicit form of the peril of the missionaries, the destruction of the mission property and the unreliability of the Turkish Government's pledges of protection. The State Department at Washington is giving much attention to the question of compelling Turkey to grant adequate and prompt reparation for the damage already inflicted, and it is said to have decided upon a rigorous policy. Let this pressure become stern and sharp and Turkey can at once relax any protection over American citizens and property. For prudential reasons, therefore, the State Department favors a withdrawal of the American missionaries from their posts. But the missionaries are not likely to consent.

During the past two weeks the machinery for organizing American sympathy for the Red Cross Armenian relief movement has been perfected, and with Miss Clara Barton's advent in Boston on the 29th, and the meeting of Boston merchants and philanthropists at City Hall on the 30th, Boston for the first time really faced its duty in the matter and began to act in a way commensurate with that duty. In Cambridge, on Sunday afternoon, the Shepard Congregational Church was crowded with those who sympathize with Armenia's woes. Prof. Charles Eliot Norton spoke, as did Rev. Dr. Alexander McKenzie, and Armenians cognizant of the situation in Armenia gave realistic descriptions of the state of affairs there. Through the American Board's agents $20,000 have been forwarded to Armenia.

NOTES.

The Japanese Parliament has opened, Count Ito retaining the post of prime minister which a few months since he intimated he would resign. He and the government have a compact with the Liberal party, which insures longer life and greater strength to the ministry than it otherwise could have hoped for, and is significant as marking the introduction, partially if not wholly, of party responsibility for Japanese administration.

The pursuit and arrest of Baron Hammerstein in Athens show that the German Government prefers to suffer from any revelations which he may make concerning rottenness in high places in Berlin rather than endure longer the taunts of Socialists. The more recent flight of the leading lawyer of Berlin, with documents which also compromise high state officials, and the revelations respecting his own dual life, have not added to the pride of decent Germans as they review the year just closed.

Mr. Gladstone's opinion of England's duty toward Armenia is very clear. To a great pro-Armenian meeting held in London recently he wrote:

The six great Powers which between them spend more than £100,000,000 yearly upon what is termed their defenses lie prostrate at the feet of an impotent sultan, who, with their cognizance, appears to prosecute massacres at his will, day by day. Which Power or Powers is to blame? I know not. Our country is quite able to cope with five or six Turkeys, and she is under peculiar obligations, but she is not omnipotent. I sincerely hope that her Majesty's Government has not been in any degree answerable for bringing about an almost incredible situation.

The charges made by Lord Dunraven against the honesty of the builders and backers of the Defender, in last summer's races between the Valkyrie and the Defender, have been heard, sifted and adjudicated upon behind closed doors at the New York Yacht Club during the past week. The judges have been men of highest standing here and abroad. Lord Dunraven has had able legal aid imported from England. Without awaiting the verdict, as soon as his own testimony was given, he set sail for home. If the verdict shows the untenability of his charges, as it is thought it will, American honor will be vindicated and British sportsmanship dealt a severe blow.

IN BRIEF.

Big with events was the year of our Lord that has just closed, as our editorial review of the year abundantly shows, and the signs are that 1896 will be equally eventful.

Notice the gratifying lengthening of the General Howard Roll of Honor. The 500 mark has been passed, and a big inroad already made upon that bothersome Home Missionary Society debt.

In these troublous times we would not divert attention from Armenia, but our vision ought not to be so contracted as to leave us blind to the peril to which our missionaries are exposed in the interior of China. Rev. Henry Kingman, on page 13, pictures the situation graphically.

All the great Western railroads have united in an arrangement by which half fare annual permits are issued to clergymen. Blank forms of application are furnished by agents of any of the railway companies joined in this agreement. The blank is to be filled and forwarded, with fifty cents, to B. D. Caldwell, Chairman Western Passenger Association, 721 Rookery Building, Chicago.

Joseph Cook, who had intended with his wife to make a journey round the world, has returned from Japan to San Francisco with the deputation of the American Board. He is suffering from nervous prostration and will probably require a long rest, but it is hoped that his health may be in time restored. Mr. Cook has done valiant service for righteousness, which will not be forgotten now that he is compelled for a while to cease from his labors.

A Brooklyn pastor, commenting in a complimentary vein on our Christmas cover, says that he has detached it from the paper and hung it upon the walls of his study, and adds, "Cherubs and angels are beautiful but this strong and saintly man of God fascinates me. I long to be as clear visioned in looking backward to Bethlehem as he was in looking forward." This is a wish which every honest servant of God, yearning for a clear vision both of the Christ of history and of the Christ of today, will echo from the depths of his heart.

In a list of "veteran ministers" of Massachusetts, given by a veteran correspondent in our issue of Dec. 19, Professor Park is referred to as "not credited with as early an ordination." This is certainly an inadvertence, for Professor Park was ordained as pastor of the First Church in Braintree Dec. 21, 1831, nearly three years prior to the first one on the list. It will be of interest to the venerable professor's many pupils all over the land to know that he passed his eighty-seventh birthday at his Andover home last Sunday. Although in feeble health he walks out every pleasant day, and is constantly engaged in literary work, especially in connection with his life of Jonathan Edwards.

The Boston Ministers' Meeting list of topics for the Week of Prayer has a twofold purpose—first to provide a connecting thought throughout the week, and second to return in a measure to the original idea of prayer for the missionary cause, while at the same time providing sufficient scope for application to church life in general. To those who use the list these books may be helpful: Piersons's Acts of the Holy Spirit, Mathewson's Voices of the Spirit, Phelps's The Still Hour, Candlish's The Work of the Holy Spirit, Torrey's The Baptism of the Holy Spirit, and A. J. Gordon's The Holy Spirit in Missions. Those who prefer to use the list prepared by the Evangelical Alliance will find the sub-topics exceptionally suggestive.

Dr. Barnardo, the famous founder of homes for homeless children in London, was once brought into court by Roman priests, and Justice Coleridge decided the case against him. But he was so deeply impressed by Dr. Barnardo's statement of his work that he afterwards sent him annually a donation of fifty dollars for his homes. Judges do not make laws but only administer them, sometimes, no doubt, contrary to their own convictions of what laws ought to be. An unreasoning populace occasionally insists on placing on courts the responsibility for having enacted laws which they are empowered only to interpret and apply.

A semi-official compilation of the amount of dividends paid in Boston Jan. 1 gives a total of $13,212,004. How much of it will find its way into the coffers of debt-laden missionary societies, or go speeding toward Armenia? The Christian Register pertinently suggests that the Venezuelan philanthropists give to Clara Barton a moiety of the money—the half the cost of a gunboat. "Let us boil down some of our affluent, popular enthusiasm into the form of a little hard cash." The Yokohama branch of the Japan Red Cross Society has determined to send tea to the French soldiers wounded in the Madagascar expeditionary army and to Spanish soldiers in Cuba. Shall American Christians show less regard for the American Red Cross adherents who stand ready to enter Armenia?

An alert Minnesota pastor sends us a communication advocating cogently the holding of a meeting in every Congregational Church in the United States on Jan. 1 at 10.30 A. M. He would have it a strictly business gathering, at which statistical reports should be rendered from all the departments of the church. These in turn should be at once tabulated in regular form and mailed straightway to the proper conference official, with the injunction that the reports be passed on within ten days to the State registrar. He could easily, provided all the churches in the State acted simultaneously, forward within ten days to Dr. Hazen the statistical showing for his State and then we should have fair reason to expect the issuing of the Year-Book by April 1. Our brother draws a glowing picture, which we wish we had space to reproduce in detail, of five thousand church clerks acting in unison at just half past ten o'clock on January first in each year. He thinks the recording angel would rejoice at such a spectacle. While neither he nor we can make positive affirmation on this point, every member of our Congregational Zion would wish any undertaking godspeed that would act as a dynamic upon sleepy and dilatory church clerks.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

Sunday Rest.

The barbers have been fighting a losing battle for the privilege of having one day in seven as a day of rest. A law carried through the legislature last winter gave all that was desired, but this "Cody Law" has been declared unconstitutional, because it is class legislation. Hence "boss barbers" have been compelling their employés to work Sunday or lose their places. But the end is not yet. The barbers propose to secure the decision of the Supreme Court and, as already reported, are seeking to obtain means with which to push this legislative battle and at the same time manufacture sentiment in their favor. Last Monday the ministers of all denominations met to give their testimony in favor of Sunday as a day of rest, not only for the barbers, but for all working men without an exception. The attendance was large and there was much enthusiasm. Dr. Bristol spoke for the Methodists and Dr. Withrow for the Presbyterians. The latter said that no one class of laborers could secure this Sunday quiet unless all classes would unite together for the same end and that, after all, the laboring people had the whole matter in their hand. Dr. Bristol characterized the working of seven days in a week as nothing but suicide. Perhaps the address which was listened to with most interest and was most frequently applauded was by Father Cox, a Roman Catholic priest, who took advanced ground in favor of the sanctity of the Sabbath and Christian morals generally. His positions were a great surprise to many who heard him. If such doctrines as he proclaimed are heard every Sunday in our Roman Catholic churches Protestants have reason to rejoice.

War Talk.

Nothing is more remarkable in the recent religious history of Chicago than the comparatively few references last Sunday to the Monroe Doctrine and the warlike feeling its restatement by the President has excited on both sides the water. There is no question about the patriotism of our pulpit, or the readiness of its occupants to go to extreme lengths to defend the country, but to most it has seemed as if sober second thoughts might not be amiss. War is a calamity which not a few among us remember in all its horrors. War between England and America is not to be spoken of save with bated breath and as a dire necessity. Hence Sunday was given over to thoughts of peace rather than of war, and to prayers that the union of the two nations in whose hands so much that concerns the highest welfare of the world has been placed may never become red in fratricidal blood. Very little of the war spirit has exhibited itself among business men. The feeling has been that Venezuela questions should be settled by diplomacy, and that it is not statesmanship of the highest order which permits them even temporarily to disturb the relations of trade or finance. At the same time there has been a general disapproval of the opinions of Professor Von Holst, and an undue haste perhaps to put one's self on record as disavowing them entirely. Yet it would not be strange if the professor were to be found nearer right in the end than some who condemn him for what has been called the unseemly haste with which he has spoken. It is safe to say that Professor Von Holst has no sympathizers among the faculty of the university. President Harper has taken occasion to express his own opinions, and also to reassert the principle of perfect liberty in opinion and teaching for every professor.

Features of Christmas.

At the Pacific Garden Mission services were held from 10 to 12 o'clock in the morning. Then over 700 men, all of them apparently needy and hungry, received a substantial meal. In Prince's Rink the Salvation Army fed several thousands. Two West Side saloon keepers from 10 A. M. to 6 P. M. fed 4,100 people. On the whole it was a day of generous giving. The inmates of all our benevolent institutions were remembered. Under the direction of the Tribune a fund of over $500 had been collected with which to purchase dolls for little girls who might otherwise have been without any. The distribution to the three or four thousand little ones who gathered in Battery D to receive them was one of the sights of the year. No hearts all day long were happier than the hearts which were made happy here. It was hard for the girls to be quiet even to listen to a short address from Dr. H. W. Thomas, who tried to tell them what the day meant and what it is bringing to us of God's love.

Dr. Roy and the African Congress at Atlanta.

Through Dr. Roy's kindness we can add a word as to the satisfaction with which friends of the African contemplate the results of the congress recently held in connection with the fair in Altanta. The attendance was uniformly large, the last evening impressively so. The program included a letter from Hon. E. W. Blyden of Liberia, an address by the late Rev. Josiah Tyler, an essay by Bishop Turner on The American Negro and His Fatherland, another of great value on The American Negro in the Twentieth Century by Dr. H. K. Carroll of the New York Independent, and two addresses by Mr. C. C. Adams of the New York Sun. Mrs. M. French Sheldon gave some account of her travels and observations in Africa, and the secretary of our African Section of the World's Fair Congress, Mr. F. P. Noble of Chicago, packed a paper full of information about the present condition and prospects of missions in Africa. As Dr. Roy writes: "He laid much stress upon the responsibility of the Baptist and Methodist churches, white and colored, for the evangelization of Africa. It was a revelation to learn that so much was already being done by Negro organizations of America and the West Indies. Mr. Noble brought the array of Mohammedans down to 40,000,000. He made the native Protestant communicants 255,000 and the native Roman Catholic 250,000. The force of Christianity in the total he placed at 5,550,000." Dr. Roy speaks in high terms of the papers and addresses of Mr. Faduma, a native of the west coast of Africa, educated in England, now serving the A. M. A. at Troy, N. C., in preparation for work in his native land. It is needless to add that Dr. Roy's own lecture, with its slides, its apt descriptions, quaint illustrations and pertinent quotations, was no less attractive to the colored people of the South than it has been to the tens of thousands in our Northern churches who have heard it.

FROM LONDON.

Sunday in London.

The question of the observance of Sunday, though it is not yet in the acute stage that it appears to have reached in some American cities, is coming more and more to the front in British towns. A resolute attempt is being made to change the character of what is contemptuously termed the "English Sunday." Advocates of the "new Sunday" have succeeded in opening a considerable number of museums, art galleries, reading-rooms, etc.; in giving for the first time in England on Sunday orchestral concerts not confined to sacred music and for which payment at the doors was taken; in establishing "Sunday Clubland," an association of men and women interested in literature, music and art for providing entertainments in the form of high class concerts, and in various other ways in inserting the thin end of the wedge. A public dramatic entertainment has not yet been given here on Sunday, but one feels that logically that is the next step. The conflict between the Sunday Society and the National Sunday League on the one hand and the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association and the Lord's Day Observance Society on the other grows in keenness. Many sympathized with the motive but few approved the tactics of the latter organization in instituting, under a George III. statute—which imposes heavy fines on keepers of halls used "for public entertainment or amusement, or for public debate upon any subject whatsoever upon any part of the Lord's Day"—a prosecution against the proprietors of halls in which Max O'Rell lectured on the characteristics of England, Ireland and Scotland, and Frederick Villiers on Chicago Past and Present. Such a prosecution as this, which was unsuccessful, can, of course, only lead to the abrogation of what is practically an obsolete law. The best judgment on this side coincides with the view of The Congregationalist that the question of Sunday observance should be determined not on Old Testament but rather on social and economic grounds. Along those lines plenty of support is forthcoming for maintaining Sunday as a rest day. Musical and dramatic workers, cabmen, newspaper sellers and others are already protesting against the tendency towards the increase of Sunday labor. The agitation for the new Sunday certainly proceeds more from the leisured than from the working classes. The latter do not invariably appreciate changes which are supposed to be made primarily in their interest. At Lancaster, for instance, the free library committee, after an experiment of eighteen months, closed the reading-rooms on Sunday evenings, the attendance being merely nominal, whilst a speaker at the recent Church Congress quoted statistics showing that in Birmingham the art gallery attendance is steadily falling off year by year.

Slum Settlements.

The remarkable success achieved by university and other settlements in the poorest and most crowded parts of the city encourages the belief that this is the most potent of all methods of reaching, elevating and saving toiling and outcast London. Toynbee Hall in Whitechapel, Oxford House at Bethnal Green, the Wesleyan Settlement in Bermondsey, Mansfield House at Canning Town (whose warden, Mr. Percy Alden, has been re elected to the municipal council) and Robert Browning Hall in Walworth are accomplishing a work whose effect, gratifying as are immediate results, will be felt more in the future than in the present. Owing primarily to Mr. Herbert Stead's energy and devotion Browning Hall, the newest settlement, is now firmly planted in a neighborhood on one square mile of which 115,000 human beings are huddled together. Every conceivable agency for brightening and developing lives that are for the most part cheerless and stunted is now in full operation. The endeavor is to provide for the whole man and woman and child, a few of the features, taken at random, being happy hour for children, aids to thrift, poor man's lawyer, ambulance class, cookery demonstration, people's drawing-rooms. No attempt is made to attach those who are reached to any religious denomination, though a distinctively Christian aim is kept in view. Mr. Stead is a man of high ideals, boundless enthusiasm and absolute unselfishness, and his present work as warden of the settlement is the fulfillment of a life-long ambition. His urgent plea is for Christian families to raise the level of Walworth by coming to live in it, and as he has himself exchanged a pleasant suburban retreat for squalid surroundings the appeal comes with some force. The formal inauguration of the settlement by Mr. (ex-home secretary) Asquith has drawn public attention to Browning Hall and will, it is hoped, lead to the removal of the debt of £300 incurred in adapting the building to its present use.

Honoring Dr. Barnardo.

Public gratitude to Dr. Barnardo for the splendid work he has carried on for nearly thirty years among the waifs and strays of London, and thankfulness for his restoration to health after severe illness, has found expression in the presentation to him on the occasion of his jubilee of an address and check for £3,417. Beginning as a lad of twenty, when studying medicine at a London hospital, with one homeless boy, the doctor has proceeded step by step in his beneficent work of caring for the destitute young until now he has 5,000 children in eighty-four distinct homes, sends about 700 to Canada and the colonies every year, and dispenses an income of £150,000, raised by voluntary contributions. He claims that the doors of his institution are always open and admission is given without any condition as to age, sex, creed, birthplace, nationality, health, money payment or guarantee. At the public presentation, whilst amply proving the continued need of his work, Dr. Barnardo did not omit to recognize the improvement wrought in the social condition of England by factory acts, school boards, industrial schools act, criminal law amendment act and the adoption by the municipal authorities of the system of boarding out pauper children. Of the reminiscences in which Dr. Barnardo indulged, the most interesting was his description of an unpremeditated after-dinner visit by himself and the late Lord Shaftesbury to Billingsgate when, after the removal of tarpauling from a collection of casks, the offer of a penny apiece enticed 73 homeless and nearly naked children from the barrels in which they had sought a free night's lodging. Dr. Barnardo's methods have not always escaped criticism, but where he has erred, if at all, it has been through excess of zeal in what he believed to be the interests of those he sought to benefit.

Dr. Pentecost at Work.

If any of Dr. Pentecost's old friends, who cherish the vision of a heavy military mustache, failed to recognize him in the clean-shaven pastor of Marylebone Church, they might perhaps identify him by his undiminished energy, fertility of ideas and Christian enterprise. So many church agencies are kept going under his inspiration that the chronicler cannot attempt to specify them. Music, social work, evangelistic services, working men's meetings are prominent features, and in all the pastor is the moving spirit. The church has been compelled to enlarge its material borders and is continually extending the area of its operations. If the Doctor has one failing it is that he does too much. Some of his church members mildly protested at the length of his sermons, whereupon the Doctor took an extra quarter of an hour to prove the iniquity of preaching short sermons. He has begun the weekly separate publication of his discourses, and as on a recent Sunday he preached three sermons, each lasting an hour or more, the printers are not likely to run short of "copy."

ALBION.

An Official Propaganda of Crime in China.

By Rev. Henry Kingman.

It is to be regretted that the American press has not had more clearly before it the chief cause of peril to American residents in China. The primary source of present danger to all foreigners, especially in central China, is not found in any anti-foreign prejudices stirred up by the late war with Japan—that war is, in this connection, almost a negligible factor. It is not found in the widely advertised "jealousy for their own religions," and consequent loyal hostility to any endeavor to impeach the trustworthiness of these fondly cherished beliefs—such a suggestion is scarcely more fallacious than absurd. Nor does it lie in a natural and, so to speak, spontaneous hatred on the part of the people for foreigners as such. A steady aversion to all "outlanders" undoubtedly exists, but it is not this which leads to such mad outbreaks of flaming passion as we have seen in the repeated murderous attacks of recent years.

The present source of peril to every American in the interior of China lies in the organized and persistent prosecution—still unchecked—of the most devilish propaganda of filthy and lying blasphemy that history has record of, all confessedly directed to the one end of the expulsion or the murder of every foreigner within the eighteen provinces.

It has been conducted now for more than a generation. Twenty-five years ago the atrocious mutilations of the murdered Catholic sisters in Tientsin bore witness to the effectiveness of the slanders—charging similar horrors upon the missionaries—that were even then common property. From that day to this money has never been wanting from literati and men in official position for the circulation of the literature embodying these accusations. But within the last decade the propaganda has been openly avowed and developed, has taken for itself a known base of operations (in the capital of Hunan) and has for its self-confessed head a man of literary and official rank—the notorious Chou Han. Its activity is immense and the "war chest" never seems to lack for funds. It directly reaches millions of readers and the poison of its libels and of its fervid appeals to an ignorant thirst for blood is permeating the empire.

Here lies the peril of our nationals in China, and here is the lawlessness on which our Government should lay a heavy hand without scruple or hesitation. No specious pleas are available here to befog the real issue, or to excite the faintest sympathy for the real malefactors. The whole systematized propaganda is earthly, sensual, devilish, for which not one ray of excuse may be found by the most unscrupulous apologist. No friend of China, or champion of her government, can wish for anything other than the relentless and immediate suppression of the whole band of conspirators.

The foreign press in China has been a unit in declaring that the total suppression of these venomous publications and the opening up of the province of Hunan—the inviolate sanctuary of the offenders—is the sine qua non of any attempt to secure adequate protection for foreigners in the interior. And to this undoubted fact our American press has seemed largely to be oblivious. Four years ago sufficient pressure was brought upon the Wungli Yamen by the great Powers to secure an imperial decree, declaring that Chou Han, "by his wild language and insane conduct, had enabled evil-disposed persons to make use of his name and excite the public by fabricated stories." He was therefore to be cashiered and compelled to return to his home, remaining under the supervision of the local authorities. It is now clearly proved that the decree was mere waste paper, as was prophesied at the time—only "dust thrown in the eyes of the British minister and the Foreign Office." Chou Han is as active as ever, and the work under his hand goes steadily forward.

A letter just received from Dr. Griffith John, the famous veteran of the London Mission in Central China, tells of the arrival in Hankow of a large consignment of this literature direct from Hunan. The letter accompanying them contained an urgent request that they should be reprinted and distributed far and near. Chief among the books and tracts he examined were two editions of the infamous Death to the Devil's Religion. Both editions are new and well-printed, one issued in Szuchuan and the other in Knaugsi. On the covers it is stated that all the scholars and people of those two provinces are printing this book and widely distributing it. The author is Chou Han himself, or, as the book styles him, "Chou, a disciple of Confucius and a minister of the Great Pure dynasty." It is the most foul and inflammatory of the Hunan publications and directly urges the massacre of all missionaries; it describes minutely the various horrors practiced by foreigners, and gives the history of Jesus in words more blasphemously filthy than anything that a Western imagination could conceive. This is the book dedicated to our extermination, which a Chinese scholar and official is openly distributing throughout every province of China, aided and abetted by some of the highest officials in the land. It is written in the language of the people, and of it Dr. John says, "I know that it has been read and is being read by millions of ordinary readers in Hunan and in all the provinces."

Here is the peril of our missionaries in China. Here inevitably is the prolific source of riots, outrages, murders and the varied manifestations of a hatred half-insane in its intensity. Here is the manifest duty of our Government, admitting of no evasion, for the indisputable facts of the case are already in the possession of Mr. Denby. What wisdom is there in demanding from the Chinese Government paper pledges of protection for our citizens and their property, when aware that members of the same government are privately engaged in this sowing of dragon's teeth for a bitter and bloody harvest?

All authorities are in agreement as to what should be done. It is idle—it is more than idle, it is inane—to accept the usual lying assurances that "the Chinese Government is earnestly desirous to effect the entire suppression of such publications." It has been written in blood a score of times that these assurances are empty falsehoods. The one thing needful is that Hunan, "that impure fountain of lies," should be opened up and the Hunanese for the first time be brought to see that they are not invincible, and that Chou Han be arrested and punished as an enemy of the human race.

Is it necessary to wait until Americans are added to the long catalogue of murdered men and women—English, Scotch, Irish, French, Swedish, Russian—before our government is moved to take this elementary precaution for the safety of its subjects? We heartily believe that it is not and that the courageous and honorable record of our country in the far East will be sustained by its attitude to this pressing need of the hour.

HOLIDAY WEEK AT THE CAPITAL.

BY LILLIAN CAMP WHITTLESEY.

Washington has recently had installed into office two great men; both are from Maine, both are still young, with superb physical and mental endowments. About the colossal figures of Thomas Brackett Reed, for the second time Speaker of the House of Representatives, and Beniah Whitman, D.D., LL.D., president of Columbian University, just now, respectively, cluster matters political and educational.

Only those who held tickets from some member saw the formal opening of the Fifty-fourth Congress. It was simply and quietly done—the choice of a Speaker representing a majority that had swung from one hundred Democratic to one hundred Republican—but those fortunate enough to be there will not soon forget the scene when, after the announcement of the vote, Mr. Reed for the first time that morning entered the chamber escorted by ex-Speaker Crisp. The applause, so hearty and prolonged, was a contrast to the fact that four years ago, when he left the chair, the usual vote of thanks was omitted. A sentence from his brief but admirable speech indicated that he was no novice to the situation. He said: "Gentlemen, while I thank you, I realize that the honor is but for an hour, while the work will extend through many weary days and nights." Only three weeks since then and Congress has had two presidential messages to think about, while the country has been studying the boundary of Venezuela, has demolished the British Empire, on paper, has sympathized with Cuba and in turn had substantial sympathy extended from Russia at a time when the gold reserve is rapidly slipping away.

Every one is saying that it is the opening of a most unusual and exciting winter. At such a time it is a great moral support to know that there is some one in the Speaker's chair who is a thorough master of the rules for that body; its committees are all appointed and no holiday recess is taken in either House. Habitués of the galleries, which, since opening day, have been free to all, notice some changes. The pages are banished to an ante-room and come soberly at the pressing of an electric button with which each desk is now furnished, instead of playing about the platform and scampering down the aisles to the snapping of honorable fingers. In the Senate one misses the parchment-like face and snowy hair of Capt. Isaac Bassett, for many years its sergeant-at-arms and for over sixty years an employé in some capacity of that body. He began as a page himself and to keep an eye on the boys was one of the duties of his last official position. He was very tall and dignified, and always sat upon a platform a little below and to the right of the vice-president's chair. On the closing day of the session it was a regular thing for Captain Bassett, a few minutes before twelve, to walk solemnly to the clock and with a long pointer turn back the hands, thus allowing a few more bills to be rushed through. But at last Father Time has had his revenge, and in a ripe old age the captain passes from the place that he loved so well and honored so long.

Convention Hall, that easily seats 6,000, was crowded on the night that Dr. Whitman was inaugurated president of Columbian University. President Patton came over from Princeton to make the address and there were large delegations from all the schools in the city. By his fine voice, presence and manner, President Whitman has not only captured the students but he is the favorite talker in the city on occasions. He often speaks twice on Sundays and frequently through the week, and is rapidly winning a wide acquaintance. It was a happy thought of the Congregational Club to secure him as the chief orator at the dinner on Forefathers' Day.

A stock question in conversation is, Have you been to hear Talmage? That many do go is evidenced by the fact that pewholders at the First Presbyterian Church, where he preaches every Sunday evening and of which he is one of three pastors, go in at a side door and many of the people crowding the sidewalk do not go in at all. With the President and Mrs. Cleveland to draw in the morning and Dr. Talmage in the evening, there is no lack of a congregation, though it is largely made up of the floating population.

As many as 400 representative ladies of all denominations gathered in the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church on one of the busy mornings just before Christmas to hear Mrs. Darwin R. James and other ladies from New York talk about keeping the Sabbath; there was very plain sensible dealing with the subject, too, and a desire apparent on the part of those present to better observe the letter and the spirit of the Fourth Commandment. Mrs. Hamlin, who led the meeting, said that she had many letters assuring co-operation in a more careful observance of the day, giving the names of Mrs. Stevenson, Mrs. Hoke Smith and others. Mrs. James and, in fact, all the speakers, were very outspoken in regard to the Sunday secular papers and it is not strange that our local papers had space but for scant notice of the meeting. It was a remarkable gathering; the result has been the formation of a branch of the Woman's National Sabbath Alliance. Miss Morton, sister to the Secretary is the president; Mrs. Justice Harlan and Mrs. John W. Foster are among the vice-presidents, while other ladies prominent in official life have been willing to have their names used. The pledge is a rigid one and reads as follows:

We women of America, recognizing the American Christian Sabbath as our rightful inheritance, bequeathed to us by our forefathers as the foundation of our national prosperity, as the safeguard of our social, civil and religious blessings, as the conservator of the rights of the wage-earner, do hereby pledge ourselves to resist, by precept and example, whatever tends to undermine Sunday as a day of rest and worship—such as the Sunday secular newspaper, Sunday social entertainments, and Sunday traveling and driving for gain or pleasure—and we further pledge ourselves to use our influence to create a right sentiment on all aspects of the Sunday question, especially in reference to traffic of every kind on that day.

The teacher's bazar closed just as the rush of the holidays began. It was similar to one held in Boston not long ago and the object was the same—to establish a fund for the pensioning of teachers for their arduous and poorly-paid labors in the public schools. To the criticism as well as the example of Boston our success may be somewhat due. It was stated in some of the Boston papers that Washington is too far South and too much under the influence of Southern prejudice to have justice, much less generosity, extended to public school teachers. A glance at the catalogue of the art loan exhibit refutes this statement. Señor Mendonca, the Brazilian minister, sent forty-nine of his choicest pictures, among them a Correggio, a Rubens, a Turner, a Troyon and two Corots. Mrs. Hearst and other wealthy citizens were equally kind. Mrs. Burnett wrote and copyrighted a sketch for the affair, Makers of the Twentieth Century, Mrs. Cleveland named a doll, and everybody went. Convention Hall was besieged far beyond its capacity, and had to be thrown open afternoons as well as evenings. Nearly every article in the wagon loads of provisions, flowers, furniture, bric-a-brac, fancy work, toys, candies, etc., that had been contributed was sold out, and on the last night, from the back of a woolen camel that had done service for a fortnight, Superintendent Powell and the chairman of the committee surveyed a triple line of empty booths and 500 weary but happy teachers with ten times as many children and friends.

With the tooting of a few Christmas horns that survived the day, with wreaths alike in the windows of the frame shanty and the wide palace, with Christmas cheer and jollity all about, how can one pass the season without a word. Our colored friends always speak of Christmas meaning the entire holiday week; so far it has been a succession of the balmiest, brightest days. Through open doors and casements one gets glimpses of tantalizing bits of mistletoe and that joy of children's hearts, the Christmas tree. The shops have of course been thronged and the word "Push" on the door had to be obeyed if one entered. I suppose that during these warm, sunny days many poor people have spent their small moneys for that which was not bread, and having wasted it for a "lot of trash," as a dealer in furs told me this morning, will suffer when the biting days come. But it takes a steel-like courage to counsel bacon and greens instead of cranberry and turkey, and gingham aprons and warm stockings for some other person's little girl instead of a jointed doll and a set of dishes.

Most of the Cabinet officers had home gatherings about Christmas trees. The President's little daughters are said to have had an especially fine one. The elder children with their governess distributed scores of packages in the morning, and the President followed his usual custom of giving orders for turkeys to the domestics at the White House. Christmas Day is children's day there as well as elsewhere, but the frolic of the little people must all be out of sight very soon. The functions of New Year's Day are very grown up indeed; one would think that the President and his wife must wish them outgrown. The program of the official reception was announced ten days ago. From eleven o'clock in the morning, when Sir Julian Pauncefote, dean of the Diplomatic Corps, heads that most decorative and august body, till three hours later, when the last perspiring citizen files by, the President and Mrs. Cleveland must stand, bowing and smiling and shaking hands and hear repeated hundreds of times, "I wish you a very happy New Year."

A MONTH WITH JESUS.

BY MRS. C. L. GOODELL.

Turning to The Congregationalist Handbook for 1896, almost the first words that caught my eye were these, A Month with Jesus.

I discovered at a glance that they referred to the daily Bible readings on the life of our Lord contained in the four gospels in which we are invited to unite during the month of January.

The Christlike Character, Jesus Our Example in Prayer, In Service, Christ's Tender Compassion, The Cup of Cold Water, Jesus in the Home, Jesus as a Guest, and other similar titles, suggest the richness and beauty of the themes, and their value to the spiritual life of any one who will avail himself of a prayerful study of them.

How can we resist such a feast as this? What could be more attractive or inspiring? But my thought ran on—if the privilege of actually spending a month with Jesus were now offered us for the first time how overwhelming its magnitude and significance would appear! What an unspeakable honor!

We all know how it is when we receive an invitation to visit in the home of some beloved friend. We accept it and anticipate gladly the coming pleasure. We put aside other things and give the first place to necessary preparations. We picture to ourselves the loving welcome, the matters of common interest which will engross our conversation, the variety of entertainment that will be provided, and, best of all, the heart-to-heart communion and counsel together and the free and happy interchange of mutual affection.

But a wealth of meaning attaches to all this when we think of Jesus our dearest Friend as the one who invites us. To sit at his feet, to look into his face, to behold his beauty and share his blessed presence; to walk by his side, and talk with him day after day, to hear him speaking within our hearts by his gracious inspirations—O, will it not be heaven upon earth!

How then can we plan to make this month with Jesus one of highest profit to ourselves, and especially pleasing to him?

1. We must not so encumber ourselves with cares as to leave no room for living, personal communion with him. The first thought of all is, to take time to enjoy him, and give him time to enjoy us. There is nothing presuming or irreverent in this last, for "the Lord taketh pleasure in his people." He notices when we turn aside to meet him, and draws near to us when we draw near to him.

2. We want to set apart an hour, if possible, each day for the uninterrupted study of the Word, with the earnest purpose of deepening our personal acquaintance with Christ and for calm meditation and prayer. We have little to bring him, we know, but he has the infinite riches of his grace for us whenever we place ourselves in a longing, receptive attitude before him. Upon all such souls he sheds an abundance of his precious balm and sweetness. In the silence of the inner chamber he breathes the choicest whispers of his love into the ear of the lingering, not the hurried, listener.

We all know too little and think too little of Jesus. Affairs of daily life press upon us and crowd out the more vital interests that belong to our higher and spiritual nature, till we grow cold and barren in our Christ love and our religious life becomes hardly more than a dull march over a desert of formalities. O we need to spend more time with Christ alone. We need to study carefully his life and character and blessed ministry among men on earth.

There is no phase of our lives which he has not touched with his own, and with which he is not in tender and loving sympathy. The things that make us glad and the things that make us sad—our temptations, our burdens and anxieties, our hopes and aspirations—he takes them all on to his yearning heart and bears them for us, and shows us how we may rest serenely in his all-encompassing love and rejoice amid the changes of this changeful life. He reveals to us the blessedness of entire surrender to him and the joy of active service and sacrifice in behalf of others. He even admits us to sacred fellowship with him in suffering, and by the sweet enablings of his grace helps us to glorify him in the fires.

These are mysteries that we can learn only at his feet as we linger lovingly apart with him. It is by being much with Christ that we shall become like him. Beholding his glory we shall be transformed into his image. We sit before him and his likeness is printed on our souls.

We can do a great deal more for Christ and to bless the world than most of us are doing. It is well worth while for us to take pains to learn from him the secret of his power and spirit. What a new force and beauty and irresistible influence will shine out from us through the year if with this first month we all begin a closer walk with Jesus who is our perfect guide and example, in whose light alone there is peace and joy and all true progress in the heavenward way.

The Christian World Pulpit prints a paper, read before a recent missionary conference in India, which surveys the results of higher criticism, the study of comparative religions and the social movements in Christian lands, and asks what these changing views and methods mean for missionaries, and how far these changes should affect their preaching and work. The conclusion is that extended systems of doctrine based on selected texts of Scripture ought not to be presented to the heathen as requirements for their belief; that while faith in the presence and working of God's Spirit is to be deepened by showing that God speaks to the enlightened Christian consciousness now as authoritatively as ever he did in bygone ages, fewer intellectual burdens ought to be imposed on those to whom the gospel is presented. The keynote of preaching should be the declaration of pardon through simple faith in him who died, apart from all theories, while missionaries should strive to lead their hearers "to apprehend that wider conception of salvation—the divine economy that covers all the interests of social life." The influence of Christian thought in England and America on missionary work in other lands is of not less importance than its influence at home. This paper indicates that missionaries are keenly sensitive to what is going on in Christian circles in their native land.

FROM THE BAY OF BISCAY TO THE MEDITERRANEAN.

BY S. E. BRIDGMAN.

"Don't race through Spain," said an old resident to us as we crossed the northern frontier. We had planned for a three weeks' tour, but found six weeks full of interest, leaving many places unvisited. Every city has its charm; every mountain top its story of siege and battle; every valley has been trodden by mailed warriors. One is bewildered to select from the mass of material gathered in travel that which will interest the reader most, when each hour has had its surprise.

The Spanish provinces have each some local characteristic and to some extent are entirely different. The sturdy, active race of the Basques in the north have figured largely in Spanish history. Marvelous stories are told of their courage in battle, their heroic deeds and loyalty to their own country. The language is entirely different, and an educated Spaniard is as much at a loss among them as a genuine Yankee is. Their costume is unlike their southern neighbors. They wear a peculiar cap and blouse and as a rule have smooth faces. Many of them are very poor, living in stone huts with no fire in the fiercest weather save in the center of the house. They subsist on the plainest food, an income of forty cents a day for a household being considered quite generous. Good servants are secured for five dollars a month.

As we drove along in the diligence we heard from valley and hillside and on the road by our side a peculiar squeak, combining a screech, the humming of a swarm of bees and a subdued yell, all in one. This proceeds from the loaded carts drawn by dun-colored cows or oxen, with only a pair of big, solid wooden wheels set on wooden axles. They are purposely left unoiled, and the Basque farmer is as proud of his squeak as the old deacon used to be of his new shoes. In San Sebastian it is against the law to drive a squeaky cart through the streets, and some of these independent farmers pay the fine rather than rob their families of the signal of their return home at night!

Last winter a slight fall of not over two or three inches of snow put an embargo on the running of teams out of San Sebastian, and the city had to issue one day 500 rations and the next 1,000. The dear little kindergartners came to Mrs. Gulick's school in thin clothing, their hands so cold and chapped that they couldn't hold a pencil in their fingers. San Sebastian in that storm of two days was like a deserted city, so few came out. Cider is about as abundant as water. It is said that a fire in a village was once put out by its use, as it was easier to find than water.

The wisest men in the country, however liberal or conservative, seem to be one in the opinion that the insurrection in Cuba must be quelled at whatever expense, not because they value its possession so highly, but with them it is a point of honor and they will brook no interference. They say, "Should the Cubans win, the result would be disastrous in the extreme to that island, as internal factions would arise which would make their condition infinitely worse than now." Should the United States recognize the belligerents it would be considered a gross insult. Even now the fact that a few "jingoists" are ready for fight is regarded as representing the attitude of our Government towards Spain. It was rumored a few days ago in a large city of France near the frontier that President Cleveland had recognized Cuba and, because of it, a lady friend of ours had great difficulty in getting money on a letter of credit. The credit of the nation, spending $800,000 a month, is sorely strained and the recent loan by France will last but a short time if the war is continued.

A most impressive scene occurred in San Sebastian today. About 2,000 soldiers, who start for Cuba tonight, gathered at the plaza for the open air mass. The altar, with crucifix, lighted candles, waving banners, arms stacked on either side of the platform, bands of music, vast crowds closing in, the dropping on the knees of the armed men at the elevation of the Host, made a remarkable spectacle. The great white surf rolling in at our feet with its solemn roar, the blue sea beyond, the warm July sun, although at the gateway of winter, the Pyrenees and mountains of France looking down upon the soldiers, as in the days of Napoleon, constituted a scene never to be forgotten. Poor boys, cruel war!

In every city of any importance is the bull-ring and all the paraphernalia connected with this cruel scene, which is patronized by old, young, rich and poor. Said an American lady in our hearing, "O, it was awful fun to see how the bull rushed round with those explosive darts in his side," and went into an enthusiastic account of the scene. Instead of this national spectacle growing less frequent or savage, the people are demanding it more and more. From southern France they pour by thousands into San Sebastian on the frontier and are indignant with their own authorities at being obliged to go out of the country for this pleasure. In Portugal, where the horns of the bull are guarded so that the fight may not result in death to the animal or his opponent, they are also demanding a more savage exhibition of blood.

The cafés are the nightly resort of the multitude. Little of home life is known in Spain or of neighborly sociality or "afternoon teas." These cafés are an institution and millions of money are invested in their elegant saloon music and external attractions. These are mainly under the control of Italians. The railroads are principally owned by foreign capital, also the mines, street lights and trams. We met an English friend at the head of most important mining interests who is hampered and bothered beyond measure by the various hindrances he meets in official departments, "who never do today what can be put off till tomorrow." We were surprised to be told that the third richest city in the world is Bilboa, where great mining interests are centered. The other two cities in rank are Cardiff, Wales, and Frankfort, Germany.

The streets in many cities are in such a condition as would make the cleanly people of St. Petersburg absolutely wild. But, after all, one of the charms of Spanish travel is the unique and picturesque sights in those same narrow streets that run at every angle, leading everywhere and nowhere, crowded with donkeys whose heavy loads almost graze the houses on either side, which tower above with balconies on every story, dating back to the days of the Moors. Long rows of women are kneeling by the river side day after day, doing the laundry of the city, drying the clothes on the ground. Little girls carry water poised on their heads from public fountains in jars that I could hardly lift from the ground. Boys play at bull fight on the plazas. Little children dance the fandango gracefully on the sidewalks to the music of the hand-organ. Rich and poor, student and beggar, wear with dignity the Spanish cloak thrown around their shoulders as in the days of Don Quixote; priests, barefooted, with cassock and shaved heads, are met in the arcades; the black eyes of maiden and mother sparkle under their rich and lovely lace mantillas. We have been under the hands of the Barber of Seville, stared at by the Bachelor of Salamanca until at last we fancied that we had been borne back through the centuries and were really living in the days of Columbus.

NEW YEAR'S HYMN.

BY REV. V. M. HARDY, D. D.

With feet the threshold of the new year pressing,
I turn to look upon the path o'er trod,
So filled with sadness, sweetness, fear and blessing;
I joy to trace in all the hand of God.

His hand I see in friendships' precious keeping,
In trials braved, in tearful eyes made bright,
In life prolonged, in smiles of heavenly greeting,
In sins outlived, in conquests thro' his might.

What shall this year, before mine eyes now holden,
Bring unto me as swift its moments fly?
What shall I bear from all its treasures golden
Unto that life unseen beyond the sky?

Help me, O God! this year to crown with beauty;
Within my thoughts to write thine own best will.
To thee anew I give myself for duty;
Take me, dear Lord, and all thy plans fulfill!

This new year make a year of holy living—
Of joyous deeds in proof of love I owe—
Breathe on my soul a spirit meek, forgiving—
Help me like thee to share my brother's woe.

As Jesus gave himself to me in serving,
So now to him this year I consecrate;
Guide thou my steps till, from thy ways unswerving,
I come to thee; and, in thy likeness, wake.

"Take short views of life," was the advice given by a wise old minister to one who was prone to forecast a gloomy future. It is a wholesome aphorism for everyday living. If the children cluster around the table in health today do not anticipate grippe and diphtheria for them tomorrow. If earning a fair living at this time of financial uncertainty do not let the shadow of the almshouse darken distant weeks. But while "short views of life" are best on the whole there are occasions, like the beginning of a new year, when fresh inspiration and courage are gained by a look to the far off summits, even to the peaks of the eternal years. As the mountain climber plods cheerfully down the valley which leads to a grander eminence because he has sighted it from the one he has just left so we may bravely walk along the days of 1896, taking no anxious thought for its tomorrow, but singing of the Eternal Goodness:

I know not what the future hath
Of marvel or surprise,
Assured alone that life and death
His mercy underlies.

The happiest children at Christmastime were not those who received the largest number of presents, but those who, out of their own savings or earnings or by their own handiwork, were enabled to put thought into their gifts for others. As we witnessed the joy of one little maiden in bestowing a small bottle of ink and half a dozen pens upon her father we were more than ever convinced of the advantage of a weekly money allowance, however trifling, for children. The offering, in this case, represented a loving study of the needs of her father's desk, and an afternoon of careful shopping in order to extract the largest purchasing power from the modest sum which she had appropriated for Christmas tokens for the family. Aside from the pleasure derived in spending money which is one's own, there is a really educative value in its actual use and handling. In no other way can children be trained so easily to a habit of saving for the sake of having something to give. If the rule of a weekly allowance has never been established in your household try it this new year and see how it works.

WHIFFS OF COMMON SENSE.

I. UNPRACTICAL ADVICE.

BY MARION HARLAND.

The little matron was not crying. Sound sense and the breeding which generates "pluck" as surely as the discipline of frost, heat and spring winds hardens spongy tissues into timber, held back the tears. But the corners of her mouth relaxed piteously; her dry eyes were dreary. A suspicion of petulance in her voice thinned and sharpened with the effort to speak temperately:

"Either the people who write these—things!—don't know what they are talking about, or there is no use in a woman with a small income and but twenty-four hours in her day trying to live like gentlefolk. There are no chairs of household economy in girls' colleges as yet, and making believe keep house before one is married, with a mother to appeal to in every difficulty and papa's purse to pull upon, isn't a bit like running a small house of one's very own, with one half-taught servant and an allowance of exactly twenty dollars a week for household expenses. Not that I feel ashamed of our circumstances. I told Harry when I married him that I would never complain of privations while our health and lives are spared. But I do want to live decently. I used to dream of simple elegance and all that, you know, and was quite vain of my petticoated dressing-tables and stained floors and my cheap made dishes that looked and tasted like French entrées. And I thought we were clean. If these women writers, whose end and aim in this world are to make housekeeping easy and honorable, are to be credited, we are weltering in dirt and pest germs."

"My dear!" I expostulated, aghast at her excitement and glancing wonderingly around the tasteful room, shining clean and sweet as nothing but neatness and fresh air can make human habitation, "I think that you are a capital manager and your cottage is a model home. What has injected these harrowing doubts into your youthful mind?"

For answer she read aloud from this week's Christian Spy, just taken from the wrapper:

"Now that summer is upon us, every article of clothing worn near the perspiring skin should be changed every day, and sheets and pillow cases at least twice a week. (It goes without saying that nobody who respects himself or herself ever uses the same table-napkin twice.) Linen, cotton and silk or merino underwear—silk being the best—become charged with the exudations of the skin, which in a few hours change into wriggling myriads of microbes. The same may be said of the light blankets and duvets one draws up to his chin as the night cools into morning. Duvets must be aired and disinfected frequently; blankets washed certainly as often as once a month.

"It is not safe for human beings to sit or sleep in rooms that are not thoroughly swept every morning and then dusted carefully with a cloth dampened with a weak solution of carbolic acid or some other disinfectant. All the wood work should be gone over every week with borax and water. The closet shelves ought to be scrubbed weekly with the same, every article being removed from them for that purpose.

"Another hot weather hint—sterilize the milk and boil the water drunk in the family, not only by children, but by adults.

"Still another—burn all the garbage. The mistress should make the round twice a day of cellar, refrigerator, pantries and pot-closets, to make sure that not an atom of putrefying matter is overlooked. Rancid grease left in the seams of a saucepan or pail may breed cholera; the limpid water from faucet or pump may convey the germs of typhoid. The price of perfect health is perpetual vigilance."

"Now," sending the admonitory sheet half-way across the room with the fillip of an impatient finger, "if I were to undertake to do all that, or one tenth of it, I should land Harry and the baby in the poorhouse-and my emaciated body in an untimely grave in less than six months. What confounds me utterly is the reasonableness of everything she says. Of course I know the danger of filth-bred bacteria and spores and infusoria and bacilli, and all that. The possibility that we may be inhaling and swallowing them by the dozen gross is gruesome always. But so far as I can see we must go on doing it, ad infinitum. Viewed in the light of these revelations, the privations of poverty are as nothing compared with its perils. Yet the poor must live, and the educated poor are so presumptuous as to crave decency, comfort and health."

A bubble of sound fell down the stairs at this instant—an importunate huddle, one upon the other, of inarticulate aspirates that would link themselves into a wail unless speedily checked, proclaiming the awakening of the king of the household. A smile that chased the tired lines out of the mother's face flashed over it and she flitted away to avert the catastrophe, leaving me alone to reconsider and weigh her complaint.

I picked up The Christian Spy and read for myself the columns embraced by the ornate headline, The Inglenook. It contained, besides Seasonable Hints to Housekeepers, Practical Recipes and A Word Spoken in Love, a religious corner intended for the home. After perusing it conscientiously I decided that the department was neither much better nor at all worse than the average of its class. I recognized distinctly, moreover, the disheartening tendency of the leading "seasonable hint." The truth stared me in the face that the writer of each article of The Inglenook had in mind an audience of ignorant and eager rich women. Putting myself in the place of my late companion I entered into her feelings with an energy that surprised myself.

The design of housewifely teachings is to help, not hinder, to raise, not to cast down spirits and aim. It would be nice, I went on to reason, in fact, exceedingly luxurious, to sleep nightly in perfectly clean sheets, laundered, aired and lavendered. I heard a woman say once that she envied Queen Victoria nothing but her ability to have her sheets changed every day. It is delicious to endue the body, just renovated by the matutinal bath, in fair and smooth and clean linen, or cambric, or silken web. Science has tied together the words "dirt and disease" until the wise sweeper makes haste to commit the contents of her dustpan to cleansing fires. The end of sweepings is to be burned. The chamber which is swept and dusted every twenty four hours and scrubbed tri-weekly is undeniably more wholesome than that which is "brushed up" and dusted daily and the wood-work of which is washed only when visibly soiled.

Sterilized milk was declared last year to be the best of artificial foods for bottle babies. Today we are told that the process of sterilizing destroys the beneficent, with the malevolent, germs latent in the milk, whereas to "Pasteurize" it—that is, to check the cooking suddenly, just short of the boiling point—kills the evil elements and spares the good. Apart from the news that vice is less tenacious of life than virtue, the information brings no comfort to the mother who is her own cook, housemaid and nurse, or who has but one servant. With all her desire to provide proper sustenance for her baby, she sees at once that she has not the time to hang over the saucepan, thermometer in hand, awaiting the exact moment when the vessel should be snatched from the fire and plunged into ice-water to insure the survival of the fittest. The sterilizer takes care of itself, and she reflects with satisfaction that baby thrives upon the milk thus prepared.

So with the cremation of garbage, the minute inspection, morning and night, of every kitchen utensil, the boiling and cooling of drinking water—all sensible and sanatory precautions. The truth abides that there are not enough hours in the day to justify the housekeeper of moderate means in trying to do all or one-fifth of the things enjoined upon her as essential to the health and comfort of her family. "Something must be crowded out" is a golden saying that brightens with much using. In too many cases of conscience the thing crowded out is the worker's health and, not infrequently, her life. In a still larger number of instances contentment with a modest lot goes to the wall. Harry's wife is first dismayed, then covetous. If she could hire a full staff of servants and a housekeeper to supervise them; if two dozen pillow cases, twenty-one pairs of sheets, and as many changes of body linen, six dozen towels and fifty-six napkins per week in the wash were the undisputed rule of the laundry, she and hers could be as neat and healthy as anybody. Mrs. Million may well have and keep a home worthy of the name and which can bear the scrutiny of The Inglenook board of health.

Harry's wife errs in the first place in imagining that in Mrs. Million's mansion sanatory dicta are obeyed. Overlookers and high-priced servants are prone to earn their wages with as little labor as is compatible with the glittering generalities of outward seeming. Your microbe is a terrible democrat, who respects silver no more than tin, porcelain no more than stoneware. This has nothing to do with the fact that homes in which housekeeper, butler, laundress and lady's maid are kept are outnumbered a thousand to one by the homes of fairly well-to-do people, where a couple of maids do all the cooking, the housework, waiting, washing and ironing. And these last are, in many towns and villages, less in number than families in cottages and in flats, where a single maid-of-all-work is assisted in lighter household tasks by the mistress, or in which no regular servant is hired.

Then—and here is the gist of this protest—why fill the woman's page of religious and secular journals with direction and advice intended ostensibly for the great majority who cannot be profited thereby? For, mark you, Mrs. Million never consults The Inglenook to learn how she shall order aright her handsome establishment. She leaves all minor and menial details to "the profession" and her corps of trained subordinates. If we would lend a helping hand to would-be pupils our lessons must be reasonable and within the limits of possible attainment.

Among the many disasters that have come to my knowledge as attendant upon the effort of the matronly novice to "do as she is bid" was the loss of a willing and competent laundress to a young wife whose fifteen white skirts per week made the woman throw up the engagement at the end of the first month.

"I wear only two a day as a rule," pleaded the mistress. "Of course, when the weather is bad, an extra one is soiled."

Let us be sensible, dearly-belovéd reader. You know as well as I that with careful bathing, judicious airing of body and bed-linen, by the use of dustpan, whiskbroom and dampened duster, it is altogether feasible to live comfortably, healthfully and daintily without taxing mistress beyond her strength and maid beyond her patience in the futile strain to keep up to the standard raised by so-called teachers of household reform. We know that it is not necessary to the physical and moral well-being of the household to take down every picture from the wall every week to wipe the dust from the back and clean the wires supporting the frame. We know, also, that the mistress who pokes detective fingers and inquisitive nose into every pan and kettle in every pantry every day of her mortal pilgrimage, will soon find that life is not worth living. Why then, O my sister apostle to much enduring, sorely-tempted American housewives, lay burdens heavy and grievous to be borne upon tender consciences and unskilled hands?

POSSIBILITIES OF THE AFTERNOON TEA.

BY M. V. SHALER.

The fashionable function inappropriately called "afternoon tea" has, by its own illusive conduct, brought upon itself a threatened termination. The shallowness and inhospitality of it all could hardly be expected to endure for very long. As soon as its depths had been sounded by the thoughtful ones of the community its days were numbered, for them, at least. They turned from the formality and ceremony with the same feeling of disappointment which must have actuated Thoreau to write: "I sat at a table where were rich food and wine in abundance, and I went away hungry from the inhospitable board. The hospitality was as cold as the ices. The style, the house and grounds and 'entertainment' pass for nothing with me. I called on the king, but he made me wait in his hall, and conducted like a man incapacited for hospitality. There was a man in my neighborhood who lived in a hollow tree. His manners were truly regal. I should have done better had I called on him."

There is neither mental nor moral refreshment in looking at people. The only profit to be conferred on any one at these fashionable receptions is that which the florist and caterer receive. We hold society too cheap. Our talents should be worth more than floral decorations, gastronomic feasts or fine clothes. We hold the coming and going so lightly, forgetting the time and strength consumed, that it is as if we but needed to touch one another to be satisfied. "The value of a man is not in his skin."

The art of entertaining is almost a dead language to a large number of would-be entertainers. There has been no school for such instructions, and our girls of the period are shockingly wanting in the courtesies of polite society. For their sake no less than for social and intellectual reasons there is need of more cordiality in our hospitality. The hostess and the daughter whom she sets upon the social stage for exhibition stand like statues in all the conventional glitter and permit their guests to pass by in ceremonious procession and find their own amusement as best they may mid deafening music and screaming conversation. This is not hospitality nor entertaining. It is an exhibition.

There is a reaction setting in against such unsatisfactory ceremony. It has been demonstrated in the growing popularity of the genuine, informal conversations of the afternoon and evening, which gives an opportunity for the meeting of the sexes upon a social and intellectual basis in the evening and an easy and cordial greeting to one's women friends in the afternoon. It is a thousand pities we have no semblance to that admirable institution the Paris salon where men and women may meet upon a purely intellectual footing. It is to the discredit of women with means and time at their disposal that there is not an American drawing-room.

We need the literary, political, social and all the rest of masculine interests to uplift us to broader views, wider range of thought and point of view, while the men need women to refine them and present them with higher ideals. The science of sociology is not a science of one sex. Man is a social animal, and he has gone to his club because there was not that diversion from business cares to be found at home. Men's clubs and women's clubs tend to keep the sexes apart. We women have made a mistake in not making our homes a rival of the clubs. Our receptions have been meaningless, and some women have finally discovered the fact while all men at the start abhorred them. There is now, with the initiation of so many clubs, some of which are open to both sexes, a fine opportunity for the home to offset the avalanche of outside meetings by opening wide her doors and offering such a hospitality and warmth as will make her the rival of all clubs.

But the hostess must hold no corner of the room sacred to a statuesque greeting of her guests if she would be successful, but she should move about among them, giving of herself to them in return for their efforts to be present. She should take pains to keep formality and ceremony in the background, and by inviting a few young women as aids to entertain be willing to offer the light refreshments which she provides from her own hands if need be. A small expression from the hand of the hostess speaks volumes for cordiality and puts to rout the elfs of cold reserve. Her afternoon "conversazione" can be made a delight to all her guests by introductions and the announcement that something more than a moment's call is expected.

Her evenings afford the masculine members of the family an opportunity to don the "robes of host," and by joining her and her aids offer entertainment to their friends as well as hers. The tea table should be a center where two or three graceful hostesses unite in serving a beverage, dainty sandwiches and so forth. It is a wonderful fait accompli toward the promotion of "whittling wit," "flow of soul" and repartee. The simplicity of refreshments and serving, the artistic arrangement of a few flowers, a free and easy cordiality of the hostess, a frequency of her days at home and the charm of perfect lack of conventionality and ceremony should eventually lead to a desirable mode of entertainment, and let talents take the place of show and formality.

THE NEW YEAR.

BY JULIA H. MAY.

What wilt thou bring to me, O coming year?
Will it be failure? Will it be success?
Wilt thou my mornings light with happiness?
Or will new sorrows fill my nights with fear?
Shall I to my ideals draw more near,
And dreams fulfilled my flowery pathway bless?
Or, shall I lie in bondage of distress,
And on my disappointments drop the tear?
Thou dost not answer. Why should I inquire?
Why should I wish to know the onward way?
If it be joy, the hight of my desire,
A sweet surprise new gladness can convey.
If it be sorrow's crucible of fire,
I am so glad I do not know today.

DOING IT HEARTILY.

BY ELIZABETH GRINNELL.

My neighbor on the south was a sympathetic, ever ready, charitable woman, very kind to every one in her way. She was full of good works from morning till night. Was any one sick or in any sort of distress, she was on hand ready to nurse, or do the washing, or bake the bread, or make clothes for the children. She had to do it. It was a task imposed upon her by her conscience. Her face and manner showed that it was a task. There was a sting to her charity. Her kindness had a prick of its own that "went to the quick" of the recipient.

At home she never shirked a duty. But here, as elsewhere, the "sting" followed or accompanied her works of love. The meals were regular and more than ordinarily good, but they were often imbittered by her "reminders," spoken in a complaining tone, that she "did nothing but wait on the family like a slave." While she sewed a button on her husband's coat she grumbled in an undertone about being "so tired," and she sighed heavily while she spread the butter on Tommy's bread. Poor Tommy, "so dreadful hungry," as boys usually are. Did Willie ask mother to knot his necktie, she wiped her hands and did so, hiding the real pleasure it gave her by reminding the boy that he "ought to do it himself now he was getting so old." Did Mary tear her dress by accident, her mother repaired it promptly, but spoiled her devotion to the child's neat appearance by saying, as if to herself, "It seems as if girls might be more careful when their mothers work so hard."

Sunday morning she was more than ever faithful to home duties, but the children felt "the care" they were and sometimes sighed for the time when they would no longer be "such a care." They went to Sunday school, conscious of the trouble they had been to their mother, while the consciousness looked out of their faces, hiding the happy innocence of childhood. She went regularly to church, for it was her "duty." Her husband's face wore a troubled look, for his wife had refused such help as he might have given her in small ways, and in his heart he felt that he was helpless. "I am nearly working my hands off" she had said a hundred times, and she would go on working her hands off like a martyr to "duty." Had she not read in her Bible over and over again, "Diligent in business, fervent in spirit"? She was both, according to her idea of diligence and fervency, yet she was missing the key to true devotion, as many another mother is missing it. But at last her eyes were opened.

One morning at church the minister preached a sermon especially for her. He did not intend it for her, but he had prayed that he might "help somebody" and that "somebody" happened to be my neighbor. "Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily as unto the Lord," he said, and there followed earnest words, such words as the Lord has promised "shall not return unto him void."

Across the aisle from my friend sat Mrs. DeSmith wondering why the discourse could not have been about the "New Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven." She did "so like to hear sermons from the Revelation." She little knew that the New Jerusalem came indeed down into the heart of another woman sitting near in another pew, nor did she suspect how it would come down to a "tired" family, and, in fact, into a whole neighborhood in consequence of that morning's sermon.

My neighbor sat drinking the sermon in, as she always "drank it in." It was her duty to pay attention to the sermon. But this one had an emphasis of its own. Duty was forgotten in a new inspiration. She sat like one who was hearing a great truth for the first time, a truth for which she had unconsciously "hungered." She was being "filled" now. I knew it by the look on her face, and she told me afterwards all about it. Her face grew as red as "a red, red rose," and then it paled to the faintest tint of a "quaker lady" on a pasture hillside.

"Heartily as unto the Lord"—the Lord whom she loved in spite of her troublesome habit of grumbling—sang in her ears and echoed from the reflecting surfaces of her willing heart until she was a victim to self-reproach, or rather a conquest for new resolve. Did Paul indeed mean that we must do everything "heartily?" Must we wash the breakfast dishes, and brush the children's hair, and darn the stockings, and set the table for dinner, and sit up all night with sick neighbors, and go to church, and dress ourselves in a tidy fashion—all this heartily?

Out of the abundance of his warm and sympathetic heart the minister made it all plain, and what have I more to tell? Nothing only my neighbor on the south complains no more. She never says she is "so tired," nor does she remind her family that she is a "slave to them." She doesn't have to be charitable any longer. Duty has put on a new dress and sits forever singing in white.

The child's grief throbs against its little heart as heavily as the man's sorrows; and the one finds as much delight in his kite or drum as the other in striking the springs of enterprise or soaring on the wings of fame.—H. E. Chapin.

Closet and Altar

Prayer, which we deem so easy, is, when it is real prayer, the passion of an effort, the wrestling of a life.

If he who knows the road and knows our capacity and our needs is but with us, would we wish to take the guidance out of his hands? I trow not. And so welcome to the beautiful New Year; and may we welcome all it may bring us of joy or sorrow and learn the lesson hidden in each.—Caroline Fox.

We ought never to be willing to live any year just as we lived the last one. No one is striving after the best things who is not intent on an upward and a forward movement continually. The circular movement is essential too—the going around and around in the old grooves, daily tasks; yet even in this treadmill round there should be constant progress. We ought to do the same things better each day. Then in the midst of the outward routine our inner life ought to be growing in earnestness, in force, in depth.—J. R. Miller.

If we do not wring our happiness out of the fair, peaceful, humble duties of the present, however great its trials, we shall never find it in the weakened forces, in the darkened rays of the future. Our duty lies, not in regrets, not in resolutions, but in thoughts followed by resolves and resolves carried out in actions. Our life lies not in retrospect of a vanished past, not in hopes of an ambitious future; our life is here, today; in our prayers, in our beliefs, in our daily, hourly conduct.

Ah! let our new year leave the beaten path
The old year trod and sometimes try his wings
In upward flight! And may he end his days
Nearer that day when none shall need to say,
"Know thou the Lord"; when sweet good-morning prayers
Shall belt the earth each morn with rising sun,
And when the glow of setting sun shall be
A signal fire to summon angels down
To guard a sleeping world that trusts in God.

O God our Father, we would make our life a song. We cannot say many words to thee, but we would live so that sweet music should come up to thee from us, because our lives are in perfect union and accord with thy nature. Breathe thy Spirit into us as we kneel before thee, subduing the selfishness that makes discord and uniting our hearts in the one fear of thy name. May circumstances have no power to alter the sweetness and beauty of our inner life. Make us quiet. We chafe and fret and fill our lives with noise and bustle. We expend ourselves on many things that distract and weary us; our voices, motions and impulsive acts often betray the storm and unrest within. Make us still in the depths of our nature, quiet, reposeful and peaceful. May we not assert ourselves unduly. May we go to and fro among others with gentleness and patience and long-suffering, as our Master went about doing good. We thank thee that we are full of need. We have learned that thou givest power to the faint and to those that have no might. Take our weakness up into thy strength; our ignorance into thy wisdom; our changefulness into thy everlasting constancy. Amen.

1. ANAGRAM.

In twilight's hush, where silent falls
The dewdrop from night's tilted urn,
The wanderer seeks home's restful halls,
Where bright the cheerful hearth fires burn.
Before him beams the lighted pane,
That speaks of love and smile and cheer;
While fancied bower and fabled fame
Lose all their borrowed brightness here.

When parted long from home and own,
He from the sunset hills looks back,
Where life has day by day been strown
In shreds 'long memory's 'ventful track;
He sees the fire on WHOLE that burned—
That lit his home and cheered his breast;
And owns—too late the truth is learned—
'Tis only here that ONE HATH REST.

TODAY AM IS WHAT I YESTERDAY
SHALL BE TOMORROW WAS

4 2 9 5 4 2 1 8 7 9 3 1 2

The nine words above (counting "shall be" as one word) are numbered in a regular order, beginning at the center. Taking the words in the order indicated by the numbers, the result is a jumble of words, which has meaning when properly punctuated and contains a puzzle, the answer of which is asked for and given at the close. Read the puzzle.

3. RIDDLES.

He gathered up the toys that lay
Disordered on the floor;
He put them carefully away
And shut the closet door.
"Now which of these," he said, and smiled,
With shrewdest look and slyest,
"No matter how they may be piled,
Will always be the highest?

"And when our army storms the sheds
With wooden sword and gun,
Which is it always proves two heads
Are better far than one?
And though it helps on training days
Our tedious march to sweeten,
No matter on which side it plays,
Is certain to be beaten?"

4. A WORD'S CONTENTS.

(The words italicized are taken from the word which forms the answer to the puzzle.)

O! our wee garden plot with its flowers was gay
When the dew and the sunshine of summer were here;
There no weed tried to grow, and the bird trilled her lay
On the wide-spreading boughs of the apple tree near.

Now the white and red poppies their petals have shed,
And the stems, where they grew, like a reed meet the blast.
Every pansy face hid, all the roses are dead;
And the beautiful summer—alas! it has passed.

O! the seasons of life, how swiftly they fly!
Ere we heed it our beauteous summer departs.
"We all fade as a leaf," like the blossoms we die,
When the cold blast of death chills our warm, throbbing hearts.

5. A BUSINESS TANGLE.

Mr. B , who lived not a thousand miles from Boston, died intestate, leaving a widow, three sons and five daughters. In the settlement of his estate the law allows the widow one-third, the remainder to be equally divided among the other heirs. The administrator finds a note of $500 against the eldest son, an assignment to the widow of $1,500 of the youngest son's interest in the estate, and a note of $1,300 against the second son, who is without means and can pay nothing. For the additional effects of the deceased the sum of $8,300 is realized.

There has been a difference of opinion among the villagers as to the proper settlement of this estate, and the administrator, hesitating to make a division that may prove to be wrong, asks what sum he shall pay to each heir.

6. DECAPITATION.

A little black cloud in the east appeared,
A little black speck in the sky;
It sailed in the blue
The long day through,
Silently, silently drifting.

Right into the sunset gold it steered,
Into the molten gold;
There it lay,
At the close of day,
Lazily, lazily shifting.

TWO glided through with the sunset hue,
It lay in the sunset sea;
Its black ONE banished,
Its grim hues vanished,
Wrapped in the folds of a golden shroud—
Such was the death of the little cloud.

A FEATURE OF GOOD SOCIETY.

Mrs. Shaler's article in another column gives point to what Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney said recently in The Ladies' Home Journal:

I think the good society of the future will not tend to crowds. Great social functions there may be, but there will be a center, a meaning in them; and there will be an orderly participation for all. A gay gregariousness is not society, whatever may be imagined of the bliss of being "in the swim." Herding is not consociating. Indeed, it is chiefly in the early savage state that men go in droves, like buffaloes, or even antelopes. As they emerge from the animal, sensuous condition, they emerge from the mass, and individuality is distinguished; this lifted up, enlarged, evolved, they draw together afresh by a higher law, on a grander plane; yet with a certain fine separateness, like the separateness of planets in a solar order. It is only when a deterioration, through over-civilization in the material, sets in, and the race falls back into the life of the mere material—which is in another way but savagery once more—that it swarms into multitudes again. This is the confession and self-protective instinct of individual insignificance. The unit makes little or no count except as it can attach itself to a long array of ciphers The impositions of an artificial society upon time and personality are destructive of the only real elements of a true association. Little, frittering, life-exhausting etiquets are demanded even between those who are fitted in a genuine friendship, until friendship tires out, faith dies, and there is nothing left but pasteboard certificates and a ledger balance of dues and receipts.

A DOG'S PASSION FOR DOLLS.

The latest sensation in Birmingham is the doll snatching dog. The animal is the property of a lady who resides at Small Heath. Some time ago one of her little girls was very fond of inducing the dog to carry her doll, and the animal acquired quite a passion for relieving the child of her precious charge. The dog would carry the doll about for hours, and oftentimes take it to his kennel and lie down beside it for the greater part of the day. He never harmed the doll, always gripping its clothes, and not defacing it in the slightest. Up to a certain point the dog's tendencies were productive of unadulterated fun, and so popular did he become that the children of the neighborhood frequently came to his owner's house with the query, "Please, Mrs. —— can your dog come and take my doll a walk?"

But by degrees the animal's healthy affection for dolls developed into an absolute passion, and now a more unpopular quadruped does not exist in the whole suburb. Not content with carrying a doll when requested to do so, he began to prowl about the neighborhood and forcibly deprive stray children of their treasured pets. Whenever and wherever he saw a doll in a child's arms he would stealthily walk up to her, seize the prize and run off with it to his kennel. In a single day he has been known to bring four captives home, and the maternal indignation of the neighborhood is something terrible to contemplate.—St James's Gazette.

The Conversation Corner.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR to you Cornerers all! We are pilgrims still, little and large, with a new journey, three hundred and sixty-six days long, before us. We will hoist our old signal at the start, to show that we are ignorant of the future and of many things we wish to know, yet willing to ask for knowledge and help. Let us keep asking all the year —and make good use of the answers!

The first question you will probably ask is: How about that prize, Mr. Martin? It was not an easy thing to decide that matter. There were, I believe, thirty-one in all who sent answers, but counting out those who thought the picture represented two different children and those who knew the answer to begin with, there are left a "baker's dozen" who say, what my visit proved to be correct, that the "Two Little Pilgrims," as Constance P. wrote, "are one boy" and "belong to each other." All their letters were excellent, but the one which on the whole was thought the best by the editorial committee of three who aided me in the responsible task was from Marie R., Hudson, Mich., and to her goes a "Corner Scrap-Book"—I hope in time for Christmas. I ought to add that there was a very respectable minority in the above committee who preferred Jessie A.'s letter from East Orange, N. J., and she may receive an unofficial reminder to that effect. Sarah Noah insists that Frances B. ought to have had the prize, but as S. N. wasn't a regular judge, F. B. will have to be content with her private but hearty approbation.

There was one important member of the T. L. P. family I did not mention last week —the one spoken of by Gordon P. as his "kitty" with a strange name. As I could not understand the name, it was given me on a card, printed in small capitals, COU-ZU KE-BA-BIAN. It sounded like an Armenian name, and I learned that it belonged to a guest of many years ago, who came from Turkey and who wished to be remembered by the household. To insure that they gave his name to the family cat, and the dynasty of the Cousukebabians has been a lasting and honored one, like the Pharaohs of Egypt, reigning even unto this day. The present Cou-zu was reposing serenely on the sofa when I came, but upon seeing me instantly darted off, evidently thinking me a wild Kurd!

NEWTON CENTER, MASS.

Mr. Martin; Dear Sir: I wrote you last summer about my cat whose name was Skeeter. She died last fall, leaving one kitten. He is nearly full grown and has not been named. I want to call him Doodle, the name of a cat I had when I was a baby. One of my sisters was very sick when we first had that cat, then a small kitten, and when she got better she noticed the kitten and said, "Doodle, doodle." So we called the kitten Doodle. My father says Fungi would be a good name, as he is so full of fun and destroyed so many plants last summer. R. O. R. has been mentioned for a name, meaning, "Rough on Rats." Which do you think would be the best name? LUCY S.

I do not like the last one. We are obliged to read the names of patent medicines enough on rocks and fences without imposing them upon family pets. "Fungi" sounds funny, of course, but would you like to name your kitten after a toadstool or a puff ball? If you were to name him today, you might call him Venzie, or Zuela, because the President and Congress and the papers are talking about a war between two great Christian nations on account of an unsettled boundary between two petty states in South America. But I hope that when you read this two weeks hence that absurd talk will have passed away. So I think your name is best, as it hands down a family tradition. Call him Doodle—if any exigency arises calling for honest, peaceful patriotism, you can prefix Yankee!

Here is the rest of little Gladys J.'s letter, a part of which was printed last week:

CLAYMONT, DEL.

Dear Mr. Martin: First of all I want to thank you for the little box of C. E. candy. Then I want to tell you that we have a cat at last. She is one of the red yellow kind. We got her to match our Janet's hair and my mother says she never saw a more playful cat. She stands up on her hind legs and stays so for several minutes while she reaches after strings and bites and clutches so funnily. . . .

The "C. E. candy" was a mystery till I happened to think that what was left of the bonbons at our little Corner reunion at the Christian Endeavor Convention went to the "Three Children in the Basket."

DORCHESTER, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I would like to join the Corner. I am seven years old. I have a little sister Charlotte five years old and she is very sweet. Our kitty and two rabbits have great fun together. I enjoy reading the letters in The Congregationalist from your little boys and girls. Much love from your little new friend, HELEN C.

QUINCY, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am a weekly reader of the Corner. I have never written to it before, but I have always wanted to join. I have no pets now, but I had a kitten last summer who ran away. I am beginning to save foreign stamps, but I have only fifty-two now. Will you please tell me what was the name of the last poem Longfellow wrote? I believe he left it unfinished. Hoping you will let me join the Corner, Yours truly, MARGERY M.

You ought to have named your kitten Fugit. Will some one in the literature class answer Margery's question?

SPOKANE, WN.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am seven years old. I have been wanting to be a member of the Conversation Corner. I read it every time papa gets the Congregationalist. Papa is a Sunday school missionary. Your new member, CARRIE S.

I am constantly learning of boys and girls who were our "active members" not long ago as now being grown up and some of them away at college, so that I am very glad of such letters as the above, which are as constantly coming in. This leads me to say that I have arranged a regular certificate of Corner membership which I will gladly fill out and send to any old members or new members, or those who wish to become members (no fee, but applicants must not be over one hundred years of age), who will send a stamp for it. Be so kind as to give your full name. It has upon it a picture of your Corner Cabinet in my library, the same that is printed in the Corner Scrap-Book and, I might as well say, the same one that the publishers or editors or somebody took the liberty—while the cut was at the office—to put in the paper two weeks ago.

I think I will tell you too D. F.'s practical joke—just like him!—in connection with his printing of the article which the "youthful Cornerer," whom I had innocently invited to visit me and see the Cabinet, sent to the paper. After he had it all "made up" and ready to "lock up" and put to press, he turned the cut wrong side up and struck off a blurred proof of it, including the "youthful" article, headed it, "Mr. Martin in a Cyclone," and sent it to me at my home. I guess I was "surprised most to pieces"! Did he mean that my table looked as though a cyclone had struck its papers? That was unjust, for it had been "all sleeked up" just before that photograph was taken!

Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

The Sultan and His Mouse-trap. According to an article in the Fortnightly Review upon the Sultan of Turkey, he appears like an amiable gentleman in his own home:

Very often, in the evenings, he plays duets on the piano with his younger children. He dresses like an ordinary European gentleman, and is no more formal than the President of the United States in his manner of receiving guests. He places his visitor beside him on a sofa, and himself lights the cigarette he offers him. Quite recently a great lady had the honor of dining with his Majesty, who, by the way, is the first Turkish sovereign who has ever admitted a Christian woman to his table. After dinner the lady noticed a mouse-trap which had been forgotten on one of the chairs. "O," said the Sultan, "that is an excellent trap. It was sent to me from England, and I have caught ten mice in it today."

That sounds very nicely, but it would seem more consistent if this "amiable gentleman" would do something for the defense of hundreds of thousands of his Christian subjects who are wantonly, cruelly murdered, robbed or starved. Will he ask a "Christian woman" from America, viz., Miss Clara Barton, to dine with him? We wish the English Government, or some other, would invent some trap which would catch the Sultan himself, the merciless, murderous monster!

A Rat in the British Army. We condense from a London newspaper the formal report of a military board assembled in Ceylon to investigate a charge of damages to a soldier's clothes, which shows how long and costly a piece of red tape it takes to lasso one poor rat. Dickens could not have invented a more ridiculous story:

It was by order of the commander of the 2d Royal Regiment to report upon the cause and extent of damage done to one serge frock and one pair serge trousers, belonging to Lance-Corporal C. D. He testified that when he took down his kit to air it he found his frock and trousers damaged by being eaten by a rat. The rat jumped off the shelf while he was taking down his kit. Two days before his kit was all right. Another soldier testified that he saw Corporal D. take down his kit on that occasion. The serge coat and trousers were produced before the Board, and the Quartermaster testified that it would cost one shilling to repair them. The Board, after careful consideration, declared that the damage to the serge frock and trousers was unavoidable and should be charged to the public. This finding was signed by the officers, and sent through the adjutant and the other officers to the War Office in London, and then through all the divisions of the various departments till it reached the Royal Treasury!

Dancing Mice. The Youth's Companion has an account of a breed of white-speckled mice in Japan who try to imitate young mankind in waltzing for hours together:

The desire to waltz seizes the mice at the most unexpected moments, especially at night, for they generally sleep during the day. Frequently they whirl in couples, but so rapidly that they appear like spinning rings of white and black. The tendency is hereditary and exhibits itself as soon as the young mice begin to run about.

What the Children Say. Here is another Sunday school text, a revised version, as recited by a little girl in the immediate vicinity of Boston: "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her pants are pieced." L. H. M.

LESSON FOR JAN. 12. Luke 2: 40-52.

THE BOY JESUS.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D.D.

For about twenty-eight years Jesus lived in Nazareth. It has now a population of about 7,500. Perhaps it was never more flourishing than it is today. It was a city small enough so that a young workman whose life had been spent there would probably be well known. The neighbors of Jesus knew him well, and before his baptism he did not make on them the impression that he was essentially different from other young men. When he came home from his experience at the Jordan and in the desert, and unfolded his plans to them, they were astonished because he announced himself to be the deliverer of his people. They said they knew him as the carpenter, and were acquainted with all his family. They could not understand how such wisdom as he then showed had come to him [Mark 6: 2, 3]. He grew up a perfect human child and youth —just what every child should strive to be. In his character as portrayed in this lesson these features stand out distinctly:

I. His was a healthy growth.

1. He grew in physical health. "The child grew, and waxed strong." His growth is described in the same language as that of John [Luke 1: 80]. He had a boy's appetite, a boy's love of sports, a boy's appreciation of nature. We know this to be true by what he said when he was a man. He drew illustrations from children's games and liked to have boys and girls around him. His teachings show that he had, when a boy, sympathetically watched the habits of birds and chickens, that he knew the ways of the fox in his lair, that he had kept company in the field with the sower, the vine dresser and the shepherd. His life among the hills helped to keep him in health. The air of Nazareth is pure. The views from the hills above the town are among the most beautiful in the world. Here his sturdy limbs gathered strength, as he added inches to his hight, year by year. Every child who makes his body as perfect as possible in so far imitates Jesus.

2. He grew in mental health. "Jesus advanced in wisdom." His mind developed like his body, according to natural laws, unhindered by sin. Home, school, synagogue, village life, visits to Jerusalem, work at his trade, increased his knowledge of men and things, of self and of God.

3. He grew in spiritual health. "The grace of God was upon him." His soul opened toward his Father as naturally as his body gained in stature and his mind increased in strength and in knowledge. He pleased God more and more as his ability to please increased.

II. He was obedient to his parents.

1. He followed the customs of his home. His parents went regularly to the synagogue. So did he. It was the habit of his whole life [Luke 4: 16]. His parents observed the feasts of the church. So did he. When he came to the proper age he went up with his family to celebrate the Passover at Jerusalem. I saw, last spring, a procession of 800 pilgrims coming over the hill to the east of Nazareth into the town. A few were on horses, more on donkeys, but most were on foot. Nearly every one carried a change of clothing and a few cooking utensils. Some boys were in the procession. It was a company appearing like that with which Jesus came back from Jerusalem when twelve years old. He brought no element of discord into the home life. What a child ought to do his parents should train him to do. If he enjoys doing it he is a happy child. If it is against his inclination, his parents ought to enlist his conscience and his affections to fix him in right habits.

2. Jesus was self-respecting. As the child grows toward manhood he has an increasingly independent life. But though parents are often slow to recognize this, he ought not to be indifferent to it. The first visit of Jesus to Jerusalem seems to have awakened in him some anticipation of his mission. His mother, when she found him in the temple, implied a reproach for his having separated himself from them, when she asked him, "Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us?" But his answer was a frank, though kind, reminder of his right. It seems not to have occurred to her that he was coming to have motives, a life, and business of his own. His Father's affairs had claims even beyond his mother's wishes and anxieties. Wise are the parents who anticipate and honor the growing independence of the child; and happy is the child whose impulses to independent action are prompted by a sense of his obligation to his Heavenly Father.

3. Jesus ministered to his parents. That visit to Jerusalem probably awakened aspirations and purposes which often absorbed his thoughts. Yet he went down after that experience to Nazareth and remained in filial service to his parents for eighteen years. The child's obligations do not cease when he discovers that he is henceforth to live his own life and pursue his own aims. They are rather increased. For he is no longer only to obey his parents, but to exercise his own thoughts to promote their welfare.

III. Jesus was a studious youth. When he found himself in one of the schools which the rabbis used to hold in the women's court of the temple during the feast, unwonted glimpses of truth opened to him. But he had been preparing himself for that experience. He had studied his Bible, and both his questions and his answers astonished his hearers, for he displayed to them a hunger and thirst for the highest kind of knowledge and an enjoyment in acquiring it which discloses the ideal student. The eager pursuit of knowledge for noble ends of serving men makes a character winsome to the inhabitants of heaven and earth.

IV. Jesus was a religious youth. If any one thinks it strange that this point should be made, it is because he has not well considered what it is for a boy to be religious. His answer to his mother's question laid bare for a moment his child life, showing what were the thoughts which filled his mind in his quiet home in Nazareth. He had discovered that he had a mission to fulfill. From his first utterance, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" till his last, "It is finished," this was the passionate thought of his whole life. It sustained him. "I do always the things that are pleasing to my Father," he said. It directed him. "My Father worketh even until now, and I work," he said. It crowned his recollection of his whole life. He prayed at its close, "I glorified thee on the earth, having accomplished the work which thou hast given me to do."

This is the true religious life. Thus this divine boy stands forth in the gospels to call boys to be his brothers, healthy, filial, studious, religious, using his young life with divine wisdom to prepare for the great work of redeeming the world. Thus as he grew to manhood he gathered a group of young men about him who increased in numbers and enthusiastic devotion till they made the cross on which he died a symbol of victory, and gladly devoted their lives to spread his gospel throughout the world. Thus today he calls boys and girls and young men and women into his service, which will develop all that is best in manhood and womanhood, and give to every life a mission worthy of a child of God and an heir with Christ.

A LOST LIBRARY.

It would seem impossible for a library to disappear but it actually has happened. A correspondent of the New York Sun recently described the Vattemare Library, devoted to Americana and numbering some ten thousand volumes, which has become absolutely lost to sight. It was collected in this country by a Frenchman named Vattemare, who lived here, apparently in Washington, from about 1810 to 1840, and who established the system of international library exchange by which government publications are exchanged for those of other nations. He appreciated the then seldom recognized importance of collecting literature relating to America, and the library alluded was the result.

After his return to France the city of Paris bought it, giving him a life annuity in payment. Up to 1867 the collection was stored in the Hotel de Ville in Paris. Then the mayor of Passy, a Parisian suburb, claimed it because so many Americans resided in Passy and it was placed in his care. Thus it was the only one of the collections in the Hotel de Ville which escaped destruction during the Commune. At Passy it continued until 1877 when it was stored in a warehouse during the rebuilding of the mayoralty buildings. Then, according to the officials at Passy, it was returned to Paris, but in Paris the authorities say that it was sent back to Passy.

No further trace of it has yet been found either in Paris or Passy or any indication that it has been removed elsewhere. That it still exists somewhere is probable, and it may be discovered in some place of storage. But that so large and important a collection should thus disappear is surprising and is not creditable to the French officials. It may have been allowed to be scattered or sold for waste paper, but some information about it sooner or later probably will be gained, if the library itself do not reappear.

BOOK REVIEWS.

MATTHEW ARNOLD'S LETTERS.

Mr. G. W. E. Russell has edited enough of the letters written by the late Matthew Arnold to make two considerable volumes, and they furnish a good idea of the writer. They all are his own productions, none by any of his correspondents being included. They are arranged chronologically and lack something at times in that the ordinary reader would like to know a little more about what they refer to, although those written during his two tours in this country naturally are more consecutive. One gathers, nevertheless, an impression of the man, his work, his friendships, his writings, etc., which has special interest since it comes from the inside, so to speak.

They were written without thought of publication and many are family letters. Nearly all are to his intimate friends. Their frequent freedom of comment therefore was natural and proper. Yet good taste on the editor's part might well have omitted some passages. Probably Mr. Arnold did not really care so much about what he had to eat, for instance, as most readers will infer. But he certainly stands here self-revealed as somewhat more of what he himself used to term a Philistine than we have been accustomed to suppose him.

He had fine qualities of a certain sort and did good work in his generation without ever rising to the supreme grade of excellence, unless in the fidelity of his school work. He was neither a great poet, although he came within sight of greatness, nor a great political teacher, although he held large and creditable views and proclaimed them frankly to his countrymen. He reached his highest level as a literary critic yet it is questionable if his criticism made much lasting impression. He was personally winning and had a host of friends and, although these letters are addressed to a quite limited number of them, many sides of his character appear and the volumes leave the impression of a kindly and noble character and a busy and useful career, which his undoubtedly were. #### RELIGIOUS.

The Divine Life in Man and Other Sermons [Fleming H. Revell Co.], by Dr. F. A. Noble, pastor of the Union Park Church, Chicago, will meet with a warm welcome from his many friends who have long been urging him to give a volume of his discourses to the public. Its fifteen sermons make a volume of only a little more than three hundred pages. The topics treated are the great central themes of the gospel. Under them are discussed the loftiest subjects of human thought. But the discussion is always intensely practical. While the author does not hesitate to give his own interpretation of the gospel, and to give it in no uncertain phrase, there is nothing narrow or arrogant in his attitude, no attempt whatever to pose as a champion of orthodoxy, no failure to recognize the rights of those who differ from him. His aim is to set forth the truth as it has come to himself in his own experience, and in such a way as to be helpful and inspiring to earnest, intelligent Christians and, at the same time, appeal to the consciences of those who have not yet entered upon the Christian life. There is not an obscure sentence in the book. There is a good deal of variety in treatment. Sometimes the plan on which the sermon is constructed is plainly visible, at other times it does not appear. For lovers of nature there are bits of description delicate and beautiful, and so truthful that he who reads may see the landscapes or brooks to which reference is made. For those who are impressed by heroic and self-sacrificing action there are condensed biographies which give the essential facts contained in large volumes, for those who are struggling through deep waters there are promises whose very quotation is indicative of the blessing and comfort they have brought the preacher. We commend the volume to our readers. It will remind many of them of the great preachers of a generation whose names still linger among us. It will do not a little, we trust, to encourage a younger generation to discuss themes in the pulpit which in some places it has become the fashion partially, at least, to overlook. The sermons are manly, strong, earnest, sympathetic, attractive. We do not see how they can fail to be helpful.

In the Prophets of Israel [Open Court Pub. Co. $1.00] Professor Cornill gives us the views of the extreme German critical school. Like its leader, Wellhausen, he makes his statements in the most dogmatic way. Some of the results of Old Testament criticism may now be considered as established, but no man has a right to say that the Ten Commandments, "as can be proved, were written in the first half of the seventh century" before Christ, or that Leviticus was written in 500 B. C. Such assertions cannot be proclaimed as proved so long as any considerable body of competent scholars deny them. Otherwise the book is very suggestive. The characteristics of the individual prophets and of the nation are clearly brought out. The work of the translator is especially well done.

A book in English by a native Japanese is something of a novelty. It is The Diary of a Japanese Convert [Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.00] by Kanzo Uchimura. It is a record of personal experiences and is full of important suggestions to American Christians. Educated as he was in the heathenism of Japan and converted only after reaching young manhood, the author's history has been somewhat peculiar. It was characterized by more intellectual than spiritual intensity of purpose at first and his varied experiences and ideas are narrated with much frankness. The book is perfectly artless and unpretending, and it is a striking example of intelligent self study, and is decidedly stimulating to the reader. In many ways it is a remarkable book and that it should exist at all is as remarkable as anything else about it.

Prof. W. G. Moorehead, D. D., has prepared a book called Studies in the Mosaic Institutions [W. G. Shuey. $1.25]. The principal purpose of the book is to reimpress the fact that Christianity and Judaism are essentially one in important respects, and that the important truths of Christianity are the outgrowths of the rites of the Jewish religion. The book goes, to a considerable extent, into details about the Jewish system, the tabernacle, the priesthood, the sacrifices and the sacred feasts and is a useful treasury of information upon the subject as well as of interest to the student. It is well written and is illustrated.

It is not a new suggestion that the Song of Solomon is a love story in verse. Whether it be destined to final acceptance or not, it is the conviction of most Biblical scholars at present. Rev. T. A. Goodwin, D. D., in his book, Lovers Three Thousand Years Ago as Indicated by the Song of Solomon [Open Court Pub. Co. 50 cents] has attempted to abandon the work of critical exposition for the purpose of giving the text of the poem in a simple and enjoyable form, to which most students have failed to do justice in their comments. His book is terse but graphic and his interpretation and suggestions are appropriate and skillfully presented.

Here are two more books from Rev. J. R. Miller, D. D. One is Life's Byways and Waysides [Pres. Board of Pub. & S. S. Work. $1.00] in which familiar and practical topics connected with the Christian life are discussed in a pleasant and spiritually helpful manner, but the author seldom rises much above the level of the obvious and occasionally his comments are only saved from dullness by their devout piety.——The same publishers also send us For a Busy Day [40 cents] by the same author. It is a study of a portion of the 143d Psalm and it is of better intellectual quality, without being any less spiritual, than the former of the two books.

Prof. R. R. Lloyd, D. D., of the Pacific Theological Seminary has done good service in his little book Baptism as Taught in the Scriptures [Cong. S. S. & Pub. Society. 50 cents]. It is a patient, minute, critical and acute philological study of the subject as taught in the Bible, undertaken with an open mind, carried out in a candid and scholarly spirit, and reaching the conclusion that affusion or sprinkling was the Johannean and apostolic method of baptizing. The book is very short, but very able and all who are in doubt on the matter will do well to examine it.——Another little but thoughtful book is Rev. G. R. Moore's Bible Views on Creation [John M. White & Co. 60 cents]. It understands the Bible and science to be in entire harmony, the Bible being interpreted quite literally, and its five chapters, while disputed by some, will be found by a certain class of readers to possess interest.

Far too few children in our Sunday schools, or older people for that matter, possess an adequate idea of the history of the chosen people. Anything which sets it forth to the eye in a striking fashion is a valuable contribution to Sunday schools and Bible students generally. Rev. E. H. Byington's Chart of Jewish National History [John D. Wattles & Co. $1.00], a large wall map, pictures, with the aid of lines and of blocks of color, the history of the children of Israel from the patriarchs down through their wanderings in the wilderness and the periods of the Judges and the Kings, through the Babylonian captivity, even as far as the rule of the Romans. The approximate chronology of events is indicated, while the books of the Bible in which they are related appear in their proper place, though without any attempt to pronounce upon questions involved in the higher criticism. The average child will be immensely helped by faithful study of this chart and no Sunday school should be without it, as it does for the eye and, consequently, for the heart and brain what the ordinary processes of instruction frequently fail to do. In other words, history is made interesting, and, if people did but know it, Bible history is just as interesting as any other.

STORIES.

L'Avril [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.00] has been translated by Helen B. Dole from the French of Paul Margueritte. He is a French artist who is said to have made in these pages his first venture in the realm of fiction. The book is very Frenchy, but generally in the best sense. A few expressions, however, should have been modified. The principal people are the family of an invalid in search of health in the south of France, and the life of the watering place is well described. Several contrasted types of French character are brought out in pleasant contrast, and an interesting love affair is entered upon and carried so far that it can settle itself alone.

The Grey Lady [Macmillan & Co. $1.25], by H. S. Merriman, deals with modern English men and women and with certain Anglo-Spaniards. The plot is simple yet rather striking, albeit not without grave improbabilities, and the narrative is spirited and, on the whole, entertaining. The book is worth reading, but is not an example of the best literature.

In A Pitiless Passion [Macmillan & Co $1.25], by Ella Macmahon, there is undeniable and considerable power, yet it is so painful in its revelation of itself that some readers will fail to appreciate the literary merit of the book. The theme is the gradual yielding of a young English society woman to the passion for strong drink, and the bitter consequences to her husband and friends as well as to herself. It is a powerful argument for temperance, although we have no reason to suppose it was written with such a purpose. It is also a book of no little literary ability.

The Boy Officers of 1812 [Lee & Shepard. $1.50], by E. T. Tomlinson, continues the War of 1812 series. It is such a book as boys like, full of excitement and adventure, and if it be not altogether probable—in fact it borders on the sensational—the boys will not object to that, and we do not see how it is likely to do them any harm.

Samantha in Europe [Funk & Wagnalls. $2.50], by Josiah Allen's Wife, the modest title under which Miss or Mrs. Marietta Holley temporarily effaces herself, opens with the comment by Josiah himself, "Seems to me, Samantha, you have writ enough prefaces." Josiah appears to be a man of profound sense. His wife's struggles with the English language and with the desire to be funny are painful, yet they will awaken very little sympathy in the average reader, who will begin to be weary of life before he has perused many of Samantha's impressions of it. There are people who like such a book and there are people who like picnic lemonade. They deserve the commiseration of the remainder of the world.

Nim and Cum and the Wonderhead Stories [Way & Williams. $1.25], by Catherine B. Yale, are bound together in a tempting little book and the stories will interest the children greatly, for they are capital stories, spiritedly told. It is bright and fresh from beginning to end. The book is very prettily printed and bound.

EDUCATIONAL.

Means and Ends of Education [A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00] is from the pen of Rev. J. L. Spaulding, D. D., Roman Catholic Bishop of Peoria. The author is one of the ablest and most distinguished of the Roman Catholic clergy in this country, and the larger part of this book is a treatise which all of us can read with satisfaction and cordially indorse. There is nothing in it specially original but it is a manly and telling presentation of valuable and diversified truth. In the latter portion of the book the author's denominational bias comes out somewhat, and, although it is not manifested offensively, the tone and motive of the volume are such as Protestants for the most part will refuse to approve. The author pleads for Roman Catholic teaching, for the Roman Catholic theory of the school, and for an American Roman Catholic university. The book is valuable as exhibiting to Protestants the manner in which the best and most judicious Roman Catholics regard the subject, and, as we have already said, the larger part of it is adapted to benefit everybody.

Knowledge and Culture [A. C. McClurg & Co. 75 cents] is by Henry Matson and points out the distinction between knowledge and culture, and discusses various lines of education and their influence upon character. Knowledge as the source of culture in its various departments is analyzed and suggestions as to reading, study and even religion are offered. The book is a book of principles and it contains much which is helpful and is like the wise talk of an experienced teacher, for example, to his pupils.

A somewhat more specific treatise and in a narrower line is Prof. G. P. Baker's book The Principles of Argumentation [Ginn & Co. $1.25]. He enforces the importance of argumentation and its relation to logic and reveals the elements of culture therein. It is based upon class work and is adapted to help professional thinkers or speakers. Clergymen, lawyers and many others will find it a clearly written and suggestive aid.

Another treatise upon English Literature is The Middle Ages, Part I [Ginn & Co. 30 cents], in An Outline of the Philosophy of English Literature, by Greenough White. The purpose of the writer may be defined in a word as that of revealing the great movement of the Middle Ages, which so often has been overlooked or misunderstood, and in showing the significance of that period of time both in its character as a subject of historical study and its importance in relation to the development of human knowledge. The book has been written and rewritten carefully and answers its purpose finely.——Turning to more detailed works, such as may serve as textbooks, we take up Dr. S. S. Currie's Lessons in Vocal Expression, Course I. [Boston School of Expression. $1.25]. The subject is the principle of thinking in the modulation of the voice. It is technical and at the same time sufficiently general in its practical information and theory as to be intelligible and available for all. Such a book always should be used under the guidance of a competent instructor. Thus used, this one will answer its purpose better than many others.

Having learned to utter himself the pupil is ready to read. Several books which have been sent us are intended to serve for textbooks as well as for private reading.

Roman Life in the Days of Cicero [Macmillan & Co. 50 cents], by Prof. A. J. Church, illustrates well the author's superior facility and felicity in dealing with the heroes and scenes of the ancient classics. He has made a careful study of the days of Cicero and, without attempting to reproduce the great orator's own life or to write a history of that period of the career of Rome, he has given us a book at once scholarly and entertaining and as comprehensive and graphic as it is compact. We commend it heartily.——The same author, Prof. A. J. Church, has made a collection of Stories from English History [Macmillan & Co. $1.00] from the time of Richard the Second to that of Charles the First. Wat Tyler, Jack Cade, The Boy King, Sir Walter Raleigh, Flodden Field, The Great Armada, etc., are the headings of his chapters, and they are sufficient to any one familiar with his books to indicate the pleasure in store for the reader.

Dana's Two Years Before the Mast [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. 60 cents] is a classic in the literature of the sea, and a new edition, with a supplement by the author and a biographical sketch has been brought out tastefully in the Riverside Literary Series. It needs no advertising nor even comment. It will be a favorite for generations with old and young.

Mr. B. S. Hurlbut has prepared a new edition of Daniel De Foe's History of the Great Plague in London [Ginn & Co. 85 cents], endeavoring to supply a correct text and the necessary notes and indicating by extracts from contemporary publications the degree of the author's obligation toother writers.

Froebel's Gifts [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00], by Kate D. Wiggin and Nora A. Smith, is the title of three little volumes on the kindergarten, the republic of childhood, and is the outcome of talks and conferences about Froebel's educational principles extending over fifteen years representing the result of actual services, derived from experience and observation and condensed into a most interesting and likewise most instructive little book. It has its special application, of course, but many outside of those who are peculiarly interested in its subject may depend upon finding within it material of value to them.

Three new numbers of the series entitled Eclectic School Readings are Fairy Stories and Fables and Old Greek Stories by James Baldwin, and Stories for Children by Mrs. C. A. Lane [American Book Co. 35, 45 and 25 cents]. They are issued tastefully and each is a tempting little reading-book.

A Midsummer Night's Dream [Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. 35 cents] has been added to the Student Series of English Classics. It has been edited by Katharine L. Bates and issued in the familiar, simple but pretty style of this series.

The second part of Contes et Legendes [American Book Co. 60 cents], by H. A. Guerber, is a pleasant book of legends and fairy stories and is offered as an introduction to general French literature. The French is easy, yet not too easy, for those who have had a little practice.

Lectures Courantes [D. C. Heath & Co. $1.00], by Dr. C. Fontaine, contains forty lessons in conversation and reading accompanied by exercises for translation, and are well selected and will be approved as answering its purpose successfully.

Molière's Les Precieuses Ridicules [Ginn & Co. 85 cents], edited by M. W. Davis, is entertaining as a play and is well fitted to lead the student along in the acquirement of the French tongue, amusing while it instructs. This edition is supplied with rather more than the ordinary collateral aids and must become a recognized favorite.——Messrs. Maynard, Merrill & Co. also send us Das Deutsche Ordensland Preussen [40 cents], by H. von Treitschke, edited by W. H. Lyon. The type is a little fine for some eyes but is very clear, and the notes are copious and enlightening without being crutches for the lazy.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Scribner's Magazine [$2.25 each] in its two volumes for 1895 makes a beautiful appearance. Its individuality is a little hard to be defined, and yet every one familiar with the leading magazines would determine at a glance the fascination of Scribner's as distinguished from that of any other magazine. We can only say of it, as we have said more than once of it and other publications of the sort, that they are peerless in their way and in both text and illustration they illustrate the highest attainments yet accomplished.

Mr. F. H. Jennings has made a selection of quotations from the Chinese classics and has grouped them in a year-book, which he has entitled The Proverbial Philosophy of Confucius [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00]. Hon. Pom K. Soh has furnished the preface. It is well worth the reading of thoughtful people of any race or nation, and the publishers have issued it very handsomely and appropriately.

Mr. Herbert Ingalls has prepared, and Messrs. Lee & Shepard have issued, a little book called The Boston Charades [$1.00]. They are all in rhyme, and there are 116 of them in all. A blank table is appended to be filled by the reader with the solutions of the charades and the book will prove a source of home amusement for a long time. It is our impression that it appeared first some seven or eight years ago.

The fifth volume of the Critical Review [Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00], edited by Prof. S. D. F. Salmond, D. D., apparently contains four numbers of the publication, bound together as usual. The superior quality of the critical work which these pages contain and its command of the most expert metaphysicians and philosophers as the source of its papers are well understood in the world of readers. The volume puts into compact and permanent form the successive issues of the Review with which the critical public is already familiar.

Mr. C. S. Young has made a tempting little book for lovers of flowers and botanists called Nature's Fashions in Ladies' Slippers [Bradlee Whidden. 75 cents]. It confines its statements to the facts of the Northern and Eastern United States and it contains admirable pictures and short descriptive chapters.

The contents of Heart-Song [New York Observer. 75 cents] are by Mr. R. M. Offord and have been already printed one by one in our sister journal which has published them in this form. They are short poems, agreeably diversified in respect to topics and meters but at one in their tender and wholesome spiritual purpose and tone. They naturally vary in quality but all are good and some rise to a high level of excellence.——Lovers of the classics will enjoy a pretty book of interpretations from the Latin, Echoes from the Sabine Farm [Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00], by Eugene and Roswell M. Field, and their interest will be augmented, although saddened, because of Eugene Field's so recent death. The book offers work well done and temptingly presented.——Celia Thaxter's Stories and Poems for Children [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50] may fairly claim a word here for its stories really are poems in all but their form. It exhibits the facile skill with which she comprehended the children and adapted her thoughts and her words so as to not merely attract but also fascinate them.

NOTES.

—— Ian Maclaren's Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush is in its one hundred and twenty-third thousand, and still sells as fast as ever.

—— At present the leading American publishers are making great efforts to secure strong American novels and short stories.

—— The growing interests of motor vehicles and their manufacture has called into being a new monthly journal, The Horseless Age.

—— St. Nicholas has absorbed one by one The Little Corporal, The Children's Hour, The School Day Magazine, Our Young Folks and Wide Awake.

—— The Scribners are reported to have refused an offer of $5,000 from an English house for the right to the similtaneous publication of Mr. J. M. Barrie's new story, Sentimental Tommy.

—— They say in England now that the poet-laureateship will not be allowed to stand vacant much longer, and that Alfred Austin is likely to fill it. No real great poet seems left in that country upon whom to confer it.

—— The charge which is being made that the new Standard Dictionary published by Funk & Wagnalls gives undue prominence to slang, blasphemies and indecent terms is not warranted by facts and has too much the look of malice.

—— The Bookman chronicles one form of the hardships of authors entertainingly. Mr. Brander Matthews wrote a novel and was about to publish it with the title The Son of his Father, when he discovered that Rudyard Kipling had adopted that for a short story. Mr. Kipling courteously changed the title to Adam, when his story came out in a book. But Mr. Matthews then soon learned that Mrs. Oliphant already had a novel some years old called The Son of His Father, and after he had transposed the title into His Father's Son he was informed that this is the title of a former story by Edgar Fawcett!

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

EDUCATION FOR EDUCATORS.

(Parallel with The Congregationalist's February Topic for Missionary Meetings.)

Out of a strong belief in the inseparable relation between the Christian church and the Christian school and the importance of both as factors in developing a true civilization, out of the constant demand for educated Christian ministers and the urgent need of educational privileges for the young people of the West and South has grown the Congregational Education Society. In it are now united three missionary organizations, the old Education Society, formed as early as 1816, the younger College Society, organized in 1843 and the still younger New West Commission, founded in 1879. Each of these societies had a definite field, each met a pressing need and its own special line of work was not sacrificed when they were merged into one organization. The activities of the Congregational Educational Society are, therefore, divided into four branches, the ministerial student's aid, college, academy and mission schools departments.

The earliest service of the society was in the line of ministerial education and it counts upon its long list of students helped to become ministers more than 8,000 names, many of whom have a high standing on the roll of ministerial honor both in our country and in foreign lands. Without its aid a large proportion of these 8,000 preachers would never have found their way to the pulpit, since the majority of men desiring to enter the ministry come from humble homes. The number of ministerial students now assisted by the society is nearly 450, including fifty of foreign birth who are preparing to be home missionaries to their own people. Each needy and worthy student who complies with the necessary conditions receives seventy-five dollars a year in the form of a gratuity, but many, considering this a loan, afterwards refund all they receive. The C. E. S. stands for a high grade of Christian education and therefore requires that recipients of its aid should have a good scholastic standing in their college classes. Another condition is that those who are admitted to the student list shall have fully decided to become ministers of the gospel.

Far away from the great university centers there have been established in the West and South many Home Missionary colleges and academies, which have been pioneers in the line of higher and Christian education and are today doing indispensable service in producing candidates for the ministry, in preparing teachers for the public schools, in promoting an intelligent and Christian citizenship and educating the leaders in the thought and life of new States and Territories. To assist in the support of teachers in these Christian institutions is an important phase of the work of the Education Society which has now upon its list nine colleges and twenty-two academies. Each institution receives a definite yearly grant towards the support of its instructors and is required to raise the balance of the current expenses on the home field.

Among these colleges none has a more thrilling or romantic history or a juster claim on the generosity of our churches than Whitman, but since the interesting facts concerning it are now widely known, perhaps it would be well to select Pomona or Pacific University as a type of these smaller Christian colleges. The Pacific University, in Forest Grove, Ore., was the pioneer school of higher learning on the Pacific Coast. Founded as an academy, in 1848, it steadily developed in spite of its isolated position, the sparseness of population and the lack of sympathy with the aims of a Christian school of higher learning, such men as Harvey Clark, George H. Atkinson, Sydney H. Marsh, the first president, and Cushing Eells laying the broad and sure foundations for the college of today. Christian Education for December, 1895, contains a cut of the first building of the university, a rough log cabin, with one door and one window, which contrasts strangely with the present fine buildings and grounds. It would be exceedingly interesting to trace in detail the steps of its growth, beginning with the first struggles for existence, and to see unfold the results of the rare perseverance and conscientious devotion which have characterized the men intrusted with its development.

Pacific University undoubtedly has a great future before it, located in a State already populous and powerful and in a region which is one of great natural resources. It has an able faculty, offers excellent college courses to its 175 students, and in general maintains a reputation for Christian character and thorough scholarship second to no other institution in the Pacific Northwest. But the university is by no means able yet to stand alone without increased endowment, and every effort is now being made to secure Dr. Pearsons's offer of $50,000 on condition that friends of the school contribute an additional $100,000 before March 5, 1896.

Notable among other colleges receiving aid from the C. E. S. may be mentioned Pomona in Claremont, Cal., one of the most promising of our institutions, which draws its constituency from a fine class of people; Lake Charles College in Lake Charles, La., located in a very needy region; Rollins in Winter Park, Fla., the only Congregational institution of higher learning in a vast section of the South; Fargo College, Fargo, N. D., still struggling to recover from the results of a devastating fire; and the Wilton German-English College in Crete, Neb., which is doing useful and indispensable service in educating pastors for our German Congregational churches. We should not omit to mention, in speaking of these higher institutions of learning, the fact that the El Paso Mexican Training School in Texas is partly supported by the C. E. S., while the Slavic department of Oberlin Theological Seminary also depends upon the society for support.

The importance of the academy department will be recognized by those who recall the Christian influence and the scholarly inspiration of the old New England academy. Such an institution is being reproduced in the newer portions of our country, where it meets a need which no other class of schools can supply. Among the twenty-two academies under the auspices of the Education Society, Tillotson Academy in Trinidad, Col., might be chosen as a typical one. Since its establishment in 1880 under the leadership of Prof. H. E. Gordon, who still remains its principal, this school has had a career of uninterrupted prosperity and boundless opportunity. It opened in a small adobe house, poorly defended from the rain, but in the course of two or three years was able through the help of Rev. George Tillotson to enter a spacious house. The neediness of its field is evidenced by the fact there are fifty towns tributary to the academy where there are no high schools, and in twenty-five of these there are no adequate grammar school privileges. "Out of fifty-eight students enrolled," writes Prof. Gordon, "only eight are able to pay full price for their board and schooling."

Perhaps the most interesting work of the C. E. S. is centered in their mission schools among the Mormons in Utah and the Spanish population in New Mexico. Many, possibly too many, of our institutions among the Mormons were discontinued when the public schools were introduced, but the society can point with pride to the results of its past work in Utah as shown in the formation of nine Congregational churches and the establishment of centers of social and patriotic influences; while several mission schools are still maintained in the small, destitute towns of Utah whose inhabitants are too poor to pay school taxes. These mission schools, as well as those in New Mexico, are supported largely by contributions from the Woman's Home Missionary Unions. In the latter territory are five schools for the Mexicans, who are an agricultural people, very poor, ignorant and superstitious, some of them pure Spaniards, while others are of mixed Indian and Mexican blood. Here they learn to speak English and together with the elementary studies are taught self-respect and a more civilized manner of life. That desirable results have followed the efforts of the school teachers is shown in the two Congregational churches which have grown out of the schools in Atrisco and San Rafael. The Atrisco school owes its existence to the offer of a Mexican woman to give the use of her house for this purpose. It is also interesting to know that the pastor of the little church in this same town is a Pueblo Indian, who was brought up in Ohio and received his theological training at the El Paso Seminary.

B. FAY MILLS IN COLUMBUS, O.

There was closed recently a month of successful evangelistic services in this city, conducted by Rev. B. Fay Mills and his party. About thirty of the churches, including the leading denominations, participated in the movement. Mr. Mills has preached three times almost every day, Saturday excepted, and his associate, Mr. Biederwolf, has preached twice. Both have proved themselves to be men of God, workmen that need not be ashamed.

Mr. Mills aims to touch the whole religious life of the people. Every day at noon he has preached on the general subject of the Kingdom of God, and from the first the interest in these sermons has increased. After the first week the First Church meeting house was so crowded at noon that the meeting was changed to the Board of Trade Building, which has a seating capacity of 1,500. The congregations were composed largely of business and professional men, and the afternoon sermons were directed to helping the spiritual life of those who were already Christians. The meetings in the evening were designed to reach the ungathered multitudes. They were held in the "Rink"—a building with a seating capacity of about 5,000. On Sundays and special days the building was full to overflowing and, at one time, as many as 1,500 persons failed to gain an entrance.

The membership of all the churches has been quickened and thousands have been brought to a decision for the first time. But the real work of the movement has been done at the noon meetings. The "kingdom sermons," as they have been called, have moved the city to its depths and already a movement looking to the forming of a civic federation has resulted. Mr. Mills's gospel may be summed up briefly: "Let us do the loving thing always and everywhere that our days may be as the days of heaven upon the earth."

Mr. Mills has demonstrated to the Columbus pastors that it is possible to preach what men call the simple gospel and yet be intensely interested in the "forward movements." The work which he has done cannot fail to be of permanent value to the city. While he has been singularly free from theories regarding the nature of the kingdom of God, he has yet been intensely dogmatic. To him life is more than doctrine, and the city will not soon forget his reiterated injunction, "Do the loving thing." EASTWOOD.

It is one of the severest tests of friendship to tell a man of his faults. So to love a man that you cannot bear to see the stain of sin upon him and to go to him alone and speak painful truths in touching, tender words—that is friendship and a friendship as rare as it is precious.—H. L. Hastings.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Jan. 12–18. The Peril and the Power of Ambition. Luke 2: 52; Deut. 8: 11–20.

Ambition—the desire and effort to be somebody and to do something in the world—is one of the divinest faculties God has implanted in the human breast. Like other of his good gifts it may be perverted; it may be cultivated without any thought of the giver, without any regard for others or any consideration of the end for which it was given. Just here, indeed, lies its chief peril—when ambition gets into the carriage and drives, it becomes our master, not our servant. The trouble with Cæsar, Napoleon and Cardinal Wolsey was not that they were ambitious, but that their ambition was not held in check by the sense of duty and responsibility. Here is a young man today who wants to be rich. There is surely no harm in that, but let him beware lest the desire becomes an overmastering passion, makes him stingy and unscrupulous and a prey to the fever of speculation, until he falls under the condemnation visited upon those who make haste to be rich. Here is a young girl who covets a good position in society, who wants, perhaps, to be the queen of her set. That may not be an unrighteous desire, but if it makes her the slave of dress, if she toadies to those whose social position is higher than hers, if she adapts her own honest opinions to those whose favor she seeks to win, only failure and disappointment are in store for her.

On the other hand, the power of a worthy ambition, held in check by the reason and by one's devotion to Jesus Christ, is immense and may be wholly beneficial. Think of Samuel J. Mills, one of the pioneers in this country of foreign missions, and his declaration, when a student at Williams, that no young man ought to live without thinking of making his influence felt around the globe. Think of Maurice, the great English preacher and teacher, and of his covenant with a companion when they were both only fifteen years old: "We pledge ourselves to distinguish ourselves in after life and to promote as far as possible the good of mankind." See that girl using her pencil at odd moments making little sketches on scraps of paper. At work in her heart is the artistic impulse, perhaps unconsciously, but by and by it may take her to Paris and make her name famous. See that lad attending the town meeting, listening intently to the crude, local oratory, joining a debating society, taking his part at first haltingly but perseveringly until he can think and talk on his feet. The halls of Congress may re-echo with the applause that shall follow his speech. God bless the ambitious girls and boys if they consecrate their ambitions to Christ.

The word which we are considering is one of those few words that have gained through use a nobler meaning. Its derivation suggests the self-seeking Roman politician going around after votes, but it may recall to us another going about in those old days, of One who sought not his own advantage, but only opportunities to do good. This is the noblest ambition we can cherish, to be first-class Christians, to make our own souls white, to bring blessing into all the lives that we touch.

Chief-Justice Field of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts made a peculiar admission last week at the dinner of the alumni of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He told the graduates of that institution that while they represented a profession which had made and was making marked progress, he had to confess with shame that he belonged to one that could boast of no similar triumphs or progress. Moreover, he doubts whether there has been much advance in civil government in Massachusetts during the last generation or two.

CURRENT THOUGHT.

AT HOME.

Rev. Dr. A. J. F. Behrends in The Christian at Work, reviewing Prof. W. H. Green's book on The Unity of the Book of Genesis, says: "It must be read. And no one can read it without a strong conviction that the documentary hypothesis of the composition of the Pentateuch or Hexateuch, which finds in Genesis its most fruitful field, is encumbered with so many difficulties that it cannot be regarded as a safe criterion in interpretation. It begins to look as if the International Critical Commentary and the new Hebrew Lexicon, intended to embody the conclusions of the modern critical school, will be utterly useless by the time they are completed."

The New York Evangelist has no sympathy for those who urge the American missionaries to leave Armenia and Turkey. "The history of civilization furnishes no case where unoffending persons, treaty rights and national obligations should or could be made a needless sacrifice for an utterly incompetent cause. It will not do to treat the missionary cause as of so little account that a Kurdish threat or the tardiness of a diplomat might overwhelm it. If governments subserve any purpose beyond the comfort and convenience of their administrators, it is to protect the claims of citizens in peril of their lives and to come to the relief of humanity in its distresses. Moreover if our missionaries retreat at this juncture, what is the gain for all the loss? Suppose that one precious life were to be saved by such a surrender, how many others might be sacrificed? If the field is left now, what vested rights, what hopes of future good are destroyed! Is America so degraded that she will not stand by her children?"

J. C. Kimball, in The Christian Register, says thirty-five years of observation has compelled him to believe that one great source of the weakness of Unitarianism is that many of the societies "have departed from Congregationalism in everything except the name, and in which the trustees, or it may be the corporation, are just as much popes and star-chambers as any that ever existed in Romanism or Episcopacy. . . . In Orthodoxy the church, as distinct from the congregation, took charge of its special religious interests, though even there the congregation for the most part kept control of its larger interests; but in Unitarianism, while the church in this sense has become almost a nonentity, the corporation too often has taken charge of both, leaving the congregation to be only attendants on the services. What we need is to get rid of corporationism and get back to Congregationalism. It is a great deal more than a mere matter of polity. It is a matter of life. The seat of all religious authority ought to be where the seat of all religious life is—in the individual man."

The opinion of the religious press on the dispute with Great Britain over Venezuela and the President's message is practically unanimous in condemning the tone of both Lord Salisbury's communication and the President's message. All unite in asserting that the Monroe Doctrine is a very real, vital issue, not to be sneered at or overridden by Europe. On the one hand, as the New York Observer, says: "Opinion will deepen that the matter is one that can and must be settled without the dread arbitrament which the President suggests, and that in so far as his utterances tend to make such a solution impossible they are unfortunate. Sound as his position on the vital principle involved will be regarded, any assumption in advance of the report of the commission that Great Britain is in the wrong must seriously weaken the American case in the eyes of the world and tend to discredit any impartial inquiry. It places the United States, not in the position of a mediator, but of a dictator, and assigns to the commission, not the work of impartial inquiry with a view to further diplomatic negotiations, but that of ratifying a position already taken." The Nashville Christian Advocate says: "It can hardly be maintained with any seriousness that it is the duty of the United States to assume a guardianship over all the petty so-called republics in Central and South America. We yield to no man in a genuine patriotism. At the same time, we can think of nothing so appalling as a war between the two greatest nations on the earth." The Churchman says: "The Monroe Doctrine is simply a tradition—a sacred, patriotic tradition, and when properly and wisely invoked appeals to the national mind as nothing else can. This fact reflects honor upon us as a people, and no true American will try to belittle it. But we do not think it has been either wisely or properly invoked in this instance." The Watchman feels "the weak point in the President's message is that he not only assumes that Great Britain is wrong, and asks for a commission to ratify that judgment, but threatens Great Britain with war if the decision of that commission is not acceded to by the British Government. That threat was entirely uncalled for, against all recognized diplomatic usages, and calculated to imbitter the relations of the two countries so as to render the amicable adjustment of their differences much more difficult. The circumstances did not call for bluster and threatenings. Our position was much stronger and more dignified when we assumed that the dispute was not, and could not possibly go, beyond the resources of self-poised and self-respecting diplomacy." The Christian Advocate thinks that "if, as some maintain," the President proposed "to threaten war in order to accomplish his purpose by peace, he took several great risks: the risk of prostrating the business of the country; the risk of making it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to secure arbitration; the risk of making it difficult, if not impossible, for the Senate and the House of Representatives to avoid a declaration of war in a probable contingency. There has been one, and only one, president from whom such rashness of language might have been expected. His name was not Grover Cleveland, but Andrew Johnson. Hereafter, as in that case, so in this, no human being can forecast what may be said."

ABROAD.

The London Chronicle once more expresses its astonishment and shame that the British Government has systematically suppressed the reports of its consuls in Armenia, and it urges a determined inquiry why, as soon as Parliament assembles. It wishes that "any words—any acts—of" Great Britain "could convince Russia that we desire simply the good government of Turkey, that we should welcome with open arms her complete co-operation in that task, nay, more, that we should cheerfully assign her any part in its execution to which her destiny in the East, her manifest share in the heritage of the Turk, calls her. But in any case England cannot let Armenia be exterminated."

Rev. Dr. J. Guinness Rogers, in The Independent, records the belief that "Congregationalists are so apt to show a kind of liberality which comes so perilously near indifference to church principles that there are not a few ready to assume that they have none. . . . Positive teaching, in which the true character of the primitive church is set forth, is one of the needs of the times, and in order to give it we need to be faithful to our Congregational ideal—that is, we must be denominational. . . . It is possible to be firm in our own principles and loyal in our service to them, and yet to have a Christian chivalry which shall be generous in its judgments and brotherly in its temper, and so fulfill the law of Christ."

"GOD BLESS THE NAUGHTY TURK."

BY MRS. ALBERT BRYANT.

It was the hour of our morning family prayer. The head of the household was pleading in tones which he could not keep from trembling, "God bless and protect our noble missionaries, those glorious men and women, many of them so dear to us personally. Stay the cruel slaughter of the Armenians and avenge thy slaughtered saints." Little "Goldilocks," one of our penates, not quite three years old, listened with bated breath and eyes not much closed behind her chubby fists, then, creeping away from her little chair to her grandpa's side, she whispered in his ear, "And please say 'God bless the naughty Turks,'" then bent her little head and closed her eyes to join in the prayer which she knew would follow.

Instantly there came to my mind the picture, so vividly drawn in the life of J. G. Paton, of his father at family prayer praying that God would convert "the sinner from the error of wicked ways and polish him as a jewel for the Redeemer's crown," and the wretched woman, "who was a sinner," listening under the window to the petition which led her to the Saviour.

In these terrible times, when indignation at the horrible atrocities of the Turks so stirs all our households that even the babies feel the sorrow in the air, are any of us remembering to pray for the naughty Turk? This is no sickly, sentimental plea for sympathy for murderers, but it is a plea for most earnest prayer by the church of God that one result of these fearful horrors may be the salvation of the terrible Turk. Because he has shown in these last few weeks how low a soul in God's image could sink, does he not need all the more the touch of him who said, "He that believeth on me though he were dead yet shall he live?"

If I could have my way I would begin today to answer this prayer by sending a body of marines into the heart of Turkey to stop the bloodshed and prevent the Turks from loading their souls with any more guilt. I do not believe a life would be lost on our side, for the Turks are cowards before heroism. They have not been brave conquerors of the Armenians, but butchers of unarmed, defenseless people. Miss Brewer of Sivas, who could walk into the mob and rescue an Armenian woman, is a sample of the missionaries, whose bravery and courage are a match for many times their numbers.

Despite the Hatti Humayun it has always been death for any Moslem to embrace Christianity. If for any reason they did not dare act openly, in some way or other any one who professed conversion usually soon disappeared. As in our own land the awful sin of slavery was washed out in blood, so from this terrible reign of fire and bloodshed may not only one but all the Turks learn the answer to the question of the Sassoun murderer, "Who is this Jesus on whom the Christians call?"

LATE TIDINGS FROM CONSTANTINOPLE.

This moving picture of the situation in that city of the East to which the whole civilized world is looking comes from a well-known and highly esteemed American resident:

Last Thursday, Dec. 12, our city was thrown into a fearful panic. The origin was a quarrel in the bazar in Stamboul between two Armenians, and several shots were fired. The sound of the firing started up the people, and the streets of Stamboul and Pera were filled with a rushing crowd trying to get to their homes. All the shops were shut and all the Armenian schools were closed. Hundreds took refuge in the embassies and other public places, and the most intense fear was manifested everywhere. To allay the fears of the people the sultan sent criers through the streets of Pera to say that a lion had escaped from the royal menagerie and caused the fright, but that he had been killed and there was no further occasion for fear! So absurd and childish an explanation of the affair was worthy of the present reigning government. The real facts of the case were that a massacre was intended. The sultan had threatened the Powers that he could not answer for the people should the guard ships come in, and accordingly the Softas were all ready to attack the Christians, but the time planned for the beginning of the outbreak was an hour and a half later than the quarrel occurred, so that the accident of the quarrel and the consequent panic upset the arrangements of the Turks and saved many lives. Several Armenians had been warned by friendly Turks of the plan for the attack. The affair is a striking illustration of the state of fear prevailing here.

Those who have lately seen the sultan report that he appears unusually cheerful and triumphant. He has outwitted all Europe, and has done much toward exterminating a Christian nation that he hates. It is well proved now that orders for the massacres in the interior have gone directly from the palace, in all cases, and the reports from different parts of the country grow more horrible every day. Forced conversions to Mohammedanism are everywhere demanded, and martyrdom is the penalty for refusal. It is estimated that 400,000 Armenians are left without food, or any means of support, now at the beginning of winter; their houses have been burned and their lands appropriated, and they must become Mohammedans or die before spring. During the recent massacres many young girls, to whom life must have had attractions, calmly chose to die rather than yield to the Turks and accept life in a harem. In Cæsarea an eyewitness reports that many young girls from twelve to fifteen years of age bravely chose death, and were mercilessly cut down. From Harpoot the word is that there is a general effort to turn the people to Mohammedanism, but that so few, comparatively, deny their faith, that the prospect is that few Armenians will be left in that region by spring. From Oozoon-ova, a village near the Euphrates, a large number of villagers were being taken to a Turkish village near by to be compelled to change their faith, and while on the way the road passed near a river and fifty-five rushed into the water and were drowned rather than to meet a worse fate at the hands of the Turks.

The missionaries all through the interior have proved themselves heroes. The government evidently expected that they would leave the country on the outbreak of serious trouble. Their presence has been in many places a powerful check on the cruelties planned, and in all cases their reports to the press, their help to the sufferers and the protection they have been able to afford to many have done incalculable good for the cause of humanity. In Trebizond alone, the missionaries are feeding daily 4,000 people from the relief fund. The pressure is so great, however, from the crowds of suffering refugees coming to the coast that only about ten cents per week can be allowed to a person.

HARTFORD SCHOOL OF SOCIOLOGY.

In October, 1894, the Society for Education Extension of Hartford, Ct., opened a school of sociology under President C. D. Hartranft, offering a three years' course leading to the degree of Bachelor of Sociology. The school had in view four objects—research, instruction, publication and the practical application of the principles discovered to the problems of actual life.

The school has now begun its second year of work. As before, the courses are open to men and women alike. For regular students a college education or its equivalent is required, but all who are interested are admitted to the lectures. The lectures and recitations continue to be held in Case Memorial Library, Hartford Seminary.

This year two courses of study are offered students. The course of the first year, which is designed to lay the foundations for future work, is substantially the same as last year. Among the topics treated are the philosophy of sociology, the family, considered in its various relations, population, ethnology, the evolution of law and custom, the growth of cities, the status of woman, food and shelter. The course of the second year, which is offered this year for the first time, includes the study of occupations, inventions and commerce as they affect society; the history and theories of economics, production, exchange and distribution; employers, employed and unemployed; the economic and industrial history of the United States; social education, life, morality and religion. The course of the third year will include sociology proper. The deteriorative and remedial forces and the different phases of socialism will be fully discussed.

In the two curricula fifty-eight courses are included. The teaching force, as printed in the prospectus, includes forty-eight of the professors and investigators of the country, and the teachers of nine courses are yet to be announced. Among the specialists may be mentioned Hon. Carroll D. Wright, Professor Ashley of Harvard, Professors Gould and Sherwood of Johns-Hopkins, Professors Chapin, Gardner, Poland and Wilson of Brown, Professors Libbey and Sloane of Princeton, Prof. Austin Abbott of New York, Dr. S W. Dike, Professor Bemis, late of Chicago, Professor Mason of the National Museum, and Professors Andrews and Keasbey of Bryn Mawr.

The courses are carried on by means of lectures, recitations and examinations. In many courses a thesis is required and a seminarium is attached. Sociological conferences, practical as well as theoretical, are held two or three times a week by D. I. Green, Ph. D., formerly of Johns Hopkins and now of Hartford. Practical work is assigned the students in connection with the different missions and charities, of which Hartford has a large number, and also in connection with the Sociological Club.

This club was organized by President Hartranft last winter to interest the women of Hartford in the different sociological problems. It was divided into sections that the whole field might be the better covered. The section on social settlements immediately undertook the task of establishing a social settlement in the tenement house district of the city. A small beginning had already been made by the hiring of a room on North Street, in the midst of Hartford's foreign population, where a boys' club had been organized and other work of that sort had been started. The section of the Sociological Club took this work under their charge and in the early summer a social settlement was begun on North Street. This last autumn the settlement was fortunate in securing for its head worker Miss Eaton, who was formerly professor in Rockford College, Illinois, and who had had experience in settlement work at Hull House, Chicago, and also in New York. This settlement furnishes the students of the School of Sociology with every opportunity for studying the needs of the poor at first hand and gaining a fuller understanding of their habits of thought, their virtues and their vices than could be obtained in any other way.

The number of students in the school is not large, but it deserves the hearty support of all those who are interested in the problem of reaching the masses of the people and solving, on a Christian basis, the great social questions which confront the nation; for the school is distinctively an institution which looks at the problem from the point of view of the Christian, and believes that these issues can never be finally settled save in accordance with the teaching of Christ. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT.

Churches as well as clubs have had a busy time of late with celebrations. From North, West and South the eyes of loyal New Englanders and their children were turned toward Plymouth on the distinctive day of our denomination. The day of great observance of all Christian peoples is also past and now many individual churches are enjoying their own special anniversaries.

A prophetic superintendent in Connecticut, whose Sunday school has just celebrated its centennial, encourages his school with the fact that, at the same rate of increase for another century, the enrollment of scholars will be over 31 000. If such immense proportions are in prospect, church and school extension cannot be too soon planned.

The enlightening influences of an American Christian church have certainly made an impression on at least two classes of foreigners who could meet together under fraternal relations, as in that interracial Christmas celebration of a New England church, while their kinsmen at home are at such enmity with each other.

The term "lawyer evangelist," though at first it has an uncertain sound, is on the contrary full of meaning when the harmony of its suggestions is assured. The abilities of a lawyer added to those of a Christian worker would surely not be amiss.

We may sometimes wonder why our churches do not multiply even faster than they do. A secretary of one of our societies explains: "We could multiply our churches almost indefinitely had we money to support pastors for them." Would it be wise?

The descendants of the "foremothers" had it all their own way at one Congregational club, although it is intimated that they shared their opportunities to some degree with their male guests.

Already one Endeavor Society has planned to be represented at the World's Convention. Its announcement to the pastor must have been as good as a Christmas present.

FROM MISSOURI.

An important meeting of the executive committee of the Missouri H. M. S. was held in Joplin, Dec. 11. Some idea of the size of the State may be gained from the fact that ten members of the committee and two superintendents traveled an aggregate of 6,261 miles going to and from the meeting. Busy pastors and business men were away from home a day and two nights, entailing weariness to the flesh and extra exertions. In this way the national society is wisely doing its work in several of the Western States, using all the wisdom to be gotten on the field and following, as far as practicable, the suggestions of those best fitted to understand the local situation. The meeting was for the purpose of examining the list of dependent churches, so as to ask from the parent society the least possible amount for the next year. It is painful work and calls for heroic responses.

Here a church has finished a new building and ought to be stronger than last year; there is one that has had the same amount of aid for five years, and it should ask less; one is giving all it can; another might be stimulated to give more if the right motive could be applied. Added to all the rest is an incentive from New York, in the shape of a circular, stating that in the present exigency the society expects every church to ask for a smaller sum than it received last year.

The meeting in this instance was brightened by the condition of the church with which it met. This church is an example of grit and devotion worth following. After a series of discouraging experiences, covering many years, not many months ago it was left homeless by the burning of the tabernacle, which although not an ornament was the best it could afford. In addition, the insurance companies refused the payment of the policies on the pastor's library, which was in the burned building, charging that he was responsible for the fire. This caused divided opinion, and the case has been in court so long that although the pastor has secured judgment for the full amount of his policies it has come too late to do the church any good in the matter of public feeling. The church recovered its own insurance, and has deposited it for a future building. Then, in great weakness, it called a council to advise on the question of disbanding. The organization was changed by the council, leaving a handful of devoted people, who, with great courage, in thirty days' time erected on the old lot a small, plain, unplastered chapel, and began services. They called to the pastorate a young man who had grown up in the Presbyterian church of their city, a graduate of Princeton.

One of the many pleasant features of the installation exercise was that since the candidate came from the Presbyterian church its building was furnished for the use of the council, and a fellowship was enjoyed that blessed all present. Our church will try to exchange its site for a better one, and has on the wall of its chapel the plan of a beautiful building, which it is planning to erect soon. This church is one of many which illustrate the fact that it is harder to live down an unfortunate record than to build up a church from the beginning. Joplin is a thriving city, built up by mining interests, and ought to have been long ago a strong center for our denomination. It is not, but we are striving to make it so.

The home missionary committee several years ago faced the situation in the State and prayerfully wrestled with it. As a result of the policy of organizing churches wildly wherever there were a few of our faith we had buried a great many churches; others were barely alive, and we were facing serious denominational disaster. The only policy that promised success was that of strengthening the points that are strong commercially, following the example of the apostle to the Gentiles, and while the country churches must be held and built up if possible, there must be strong city churches for them to cluster about. Our whole work in the north of the State had been imperiled, and for a while it looked as if we should not have a self-sustaining church north of the Missouri River. Rev. Albert Bushnell had helped grandly to turn the tide by taking the church in St. Joseph and leading it to build temporally and spiritually a stronghold for Christ. From an almost unknown body of believers in their own city he has made them one of its grandest religious forces. If this sort of work could be repeated in half a dozen cities, we would have in a few years no lack either of churches or strength.

Sedalia was another place where a wise foresight had prevented loss by building. Now we are trying to help such churches as those in Hannibal, Joplin, Springfield and several other growing towns to see the wisdom of using business sagacity as well as faith, and give us a few strong contributing churches at important points. The hardest part of it is to get some good people to see what they can do if they are willing to try.

It is the same problem everywhere. The St. Louis City Missionary Society held its annual meeting the last of November, with a debt of $4,000 staring it in the face. It was resolved to pursue the work on the old lines, and find some way to increase the receipts. Most of the churches that sustain it are just now raising the amounts of the deficits in their own treasuries, and cannot do much else. The third Sunday in January was set apart for the presentation of the cause in all the churches and each pastor is urged to make the appeal as strong as he knows how and secure pledges for the new year and the debt. Two of our churches must be housed, and the planning and most of the finance must be managed by this society or it will not be done. Half the amount needed for the Bohemian building is in the bank, and the rest must be found. The People's Tabernacle is a building that has been in bad condition for years, and it cannot last much longer. A change in location seems advisable. The new Union Station, three blocks away, has enhanced the value of the lot, and it seems possible to exchange so as to clear a good sum toward building. Seven edifices have been erected under the supervision of the society's superintendent, and the eighth is under way—all of them buildings of which we are proud. But two of them are already too small for the churches worshiping in them. G. C. A.

CHICAGO SEMINARY SETTLEMENT.

The first year's work at Chicago Commons places the seminary social settlement far in advance of all that was expected. The forty-four rooms in its spacious buildings are already overtaxed to provide for the residence of its household and the hundreds of attendants upon the fifty or more occasions held each week by the eighteen resident and thirty non-resident workers. Its household numbers twenty-three, of whom ten are women, eight men and five children. The seminary is represented by three students, one graduate and Professor Taylor and family, and the Tabernacle Church by its pastor, Rev. B. F. Bolles, and family and his assistant.

The working force of permanent residents is to be augmented Feb. 1 by the addition of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Gavit of Hartford, Ct., whose success in Sunday school, endeavor and mission work warrants Mr. Gavit in leaving his promising journalistic career to devote himself to those interests at the Tabernacle and the social and civic work of the settlement.

The value of the settlement to its industrial district is no greater, if as great, as its influence upon those from other districts and classes who visit and co-operate with its work. Many students not only from our own but all other seminaries here see its object lessons, meet with working people to discuss social economics and confer with specialists. Distinguished visitors ask the privilege of brief residence here. Miss Frances E. Willard recently spent two days personally investigating its life and methods with a view to introducing the settlement movement into W. C. T. U. work. The Endeavor Societies of Plymouth Church, Evanston, and elsewhere occasionally visit en masse, and others send delegations to see and report. The cost of all this work is only $3,500 per annum, owing to the self support of its volunteer workers and the self-sustaining character of some of its work. For this sum the entire dependence is upon those who become associate members of the Commons, by providing something toward the expense of this effort to redeem the city centers. C.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES.

Andover.

Prof. Williston Walker, D.D., of Hartford Seminary has been appointed Southworth lecturer on Congregationalism in Andover Seminary for the academic years 1896–98.

Chicago.

Besides the prescribed courses, which require ten hours a week of each student, there are elective courses of lectures. These are ordinarily offered only once in three years. Each student, in addition to his prescribed work, is expected to take four hours additional and may take six of elective work. The elective courses for the second term of 1895–96 are fifteen in number, given by nine professors.

The faculty is well pleased with the results of the elective system. While a thorough foundation is insured through the prescribed courses, the students greatly enjoy making their own choices according to the subjects which interest them most. At the same time no test is required on the electives until the end of the term, thus giving the student more command over his time for study or special investigation.

CLUBS.

ME.— The Portland Club held its annual meeting Dec. 23. Rev. W. E. Barton of Boston, after the usual banquet, entertained and delighted the club with an address on Our Forefathers and Christmas. Rev. D. M. Pratt was elected president.

N. H.—The Ashuelot Club met in Keene, Dec. 17, and the address was by Dr. Cyrus Richardson.

The Ascutney Club met in West Lebanon, Dec. 20, to observe Forefathers' Day. After short speeches the address was by Pres. W. J. Tucker on The Puritan at the Close of the Nineteenth Century. The meeting was highly satisfactory and included pleasant social and musical features. The club is flourishing well.

VT.—The Passumpsic Club held its first annual meeting in observance of Forefathers' Day, Dec. 23, in St. Johnsbury. Addresses were given by ex-Pres. S. C. Bartlett and Pres. W. J. Tucker of Dartmouth. A large number of new members joined the club.

O.—The Cleveland Club celebrated Forefathers' Day at The Hollenden, Dec. 23, with about 250 members and guests present, who were aroused to enthusiasm by Dr. J. H. Barrows's splendid address on Samuel Adams. The club has never held a more profitable meeting. At a reception which preceded the banquet Dr. Barrows received a cordial welcome.

IND.—The Indianapolis Club held its annual Forefathers' Day banquet Dec. 20, with 200 guests. The rooms were elaborately decorated and the souvenirs were photographs of the monument in Plymouth. Dr. Washington Gladden gave the leading address on Scenes from the Life of the Pilgrims. Other addresses were made by Bishop J. H. White on New England Home Life; Dr. A. W. Brayton on The Persistence of the New England Type; Dr. M. L. Haines on The Mayflower and the Half Moon.

ILL.—The Central Illinois Club, in Peoria Dec. 16, considered the topics: The Story of the Pilgrims, The Spirit of the Pilgrims and The Mission of the Pilgrims, Our Forefathers, Our Foremothers. It was a large and helpful gathering.

WIS.—The Milwaukee Club carried out an admirable program in observance of Forefathers' Day, Dec. 21. The addresses were on The Puritan, by Dr. E. D. Eaton, The Pilgrim, by Rev. S. S. Mathews, and The New England Meeting House, by G. E Sutherland, Esq. The appropriate music was an inspiration.

MICH.—The Eastern Michigan Club observed Forefathers' Day in Detroit. Pres. W. G. Sperry spoke on Some of the Problems of the Forefathers.

MINN.—The Minnesota Club met Dec. 23 in Minneapolis. The new officers are Rev. H. H. Hart, president, and Rev. J. A. Stemen, secretary. The addresses were on the topics: Our Scandinavian, German and Scotch-Irish Forefathers. Dr. G. H. Wells gave the closing address. The attendance was large and the meeting one of the best in the history of the club.

MO.—The Kansas City Club met with Clyde Church, Dec. 20, to celebrate Forefathers' Day by a rally of all the churches, Sunday schools and missions of the two Kansas Cities and vicinity. Owing to the storm of the day, the attendance was small, but the exercises were of a high order. After two-minute reports from each church, Hon. S. P. Twiss read a paper on The Pilgrim at Plymouth and Rev. A. K. Wray on The Pilgrim in the Southwest. The Endeavor Society of Clyde Church served refreshments at a reception in the chapel.

KAN.—The Topeka Club met in the parlors of the First Church. Rev. J. L. Sewall gave an address on The Pilgrim Spirit and the Call of the Hour and Mrs. A. D. Gray read a brilliant story entitled, A Colonial Episode. A letter from Bishop J. H. Vincent explained his absence and expressed fraternal greetings. Rev. L. P. Broad was elected president.

WN.—The Puget Sound Club varied the usual program for Forefathers' Day and made it a "foremothers'" meeting. The wife of the president of the club presided, the wife of the secretary read the minutes, and the papers and addresses were by the women on Our Foremothers. The meeting was dignified, entertaining and instructive.

Forefathers' Day was observed the first time this year in eastern Washington at Spokane, Dec. 20. Rev. William Davies gave an excellent oration on The Pilgrim Movement. About 100 persons enjoyed a fine supper provided by the women of the three Congregational churches, after which bright speeches were given on The Pilgrims of Old England, The Pilgrims and Civil Liberty, Pilgrims and Education, Washington, and Pilgrims and the Home Life. The Spokane Club was organized, starting off with fifty members. A. W. Doland, Esq., Spokane, was elected president.

CAL.—The San Francisco Club celebrated Forefathers' Day, Dec. 20. Rev. S. M. Freeland, the speaker of the occasion, took as his subject The Mayflower and the October Fruit, or The Ship and Its Cargo. Toasts were given by a number of members. Thomas Addison, M. D., was elected president.

The Los Angeles Union celebrated Forefathers' Day in that city with the First Church. There was a large attendance and a fine array of addresses on the Puritans and the Pilgrims.

NEW ENGLAND.

Massachusetts.

LOWELL.—First. Rev. G. F. Kenngott's pastorate closed Dec. 31, after three years of work, if the terms of his resignation are carried out. The resignation has been accepted by both church and society, but the church last Monday evening rescinded its acceptance. He has received 215 persons into the church membership. His retirement has not brought harmony into the church councils. One section controls the society, which has directed its treasurer to pay no bills contracted after Dec. 31 which are not approved by its pulpit supply committee. The other section is in a large majority in the church, 169 members of which have signed a letter addressed to five of the six deacons, stating that the signers have lost confidence in the five deacons and deem their resignation necessary to the welfare of the church. One of the sad results of the controversy has been the reopening of the Bijou Theater, the cheapest of Lowell's cheap theaters. This is next door to the church and has been especially offensive to the church, through whose united efforts it has been kept closed for the year past. But during the present month the aldermen have granted the proprietor the license which they had formerly refused on account of the church's protest.

TEWKSBURY.—Rev. James Alexander has resigned his pastorate after nine years of work during which he has received seventy members into the church. A complete renovation of the interior of the house of worship has just been made, and a rededicatory service was to be held New Year's evening. Mr. Alexander takes with him the cordial esteem of the people of the town and of the neighboring city of Lowell, where he has many friends and has proved an acceptable preacher in exchange with the pastors.

NEEDHAM.—Eleven persons united with the church Dec. 29, the result in part of a quiet but earnest interest which has been prevailing for the last two months. There has been a constant spiritual uplift in the life of the church ever since the coming of the present pastor, Rev. A. S. Walker, D. D., twenty-three members having been received to its communion during the last six months, a larger number than has ever before been received in the same period of time. Union meetings with the Baptist church are soon to be held under the leadership of Rev. E. E. Davidson.

WORCESTER.—Immanuel, formerly Piedmont Branch, has received from Piedmont Church the deeds to its property, amounting to about $5,000, and has released the mother church from all financial obligations on the property or support. The church was incorporated recently and has plans well advanced for erecting a suitable edifice where its present chapel stands.——Union. The fifty-seventh anniversary of the Woman's Association was the largest social gathering here for many years. Addresses were given by the pastor emeritus, Rev. Dr. Ebenezer Cutler, for The Past, Rev. F. F. Emerson, acting pastor, for The Present, and Mr. Henry Sinclair for The Future.

SOUTH AMHERST —In beautifying the interior of its meeting house, more than $1,000 have been expended recently. Among the additional adornments are eleven stained glass windows, which add greatly to the appearance of the edifice. The vestibule is remodeled and new paint and frescoing have freshened the whole interior. Exercises were held Dec. 22, especially in reference to the memorial windows. The improvements were begun about the time of the coming of the new pastor, Rev. J. F. Gleason.

EASTHAMPTON.—Payson. The annual meeting last week was largely attended and helpful. Absent members responded largely and reports were helpful.

SPRINGFIELD.—First. This church has done much during the year for its own needy members, among whom about $1,000 have been distributed. The local charities outside the church are large also every year.——Park. The plan of renting pews has proved a marked success. It is proposed to increase the number of sittings to accommodate all who desire seats.

LEE.—The exceptional energy and labor of one layman in the church, Mr. B. T. Gale, was recognized by a testimonial gift recently tendered him The church, Sunday school and C. E Society have all been profited by his work, and this acknowledgment is well deserved. An appropriate original poem by the superintendent, E. S. Rogers, Esq., was read at the presentation.

Maine.

BIDDEFORD.—Pavilion. Since the beginning o the present pastorate of Rev. F. P. Estabrook the church has taken a new lease of life. Six months ago it was in despair; now there is not only hope but great enthusiasm. The Sunday school has doubled in numbers and benevolent contributions; a missionary society has been organized and since September has raised over $125 for missions and charities. The morning congregations of Sunday are nearly double what they were six months ago, and the finances of the church have been placed upon a solid and substantial basis. The pastor is a young man full of energy and fire and filled with an earnest desire to make his church tell on the side of righteousness in all matters touching the welfare of our city. He has touched a responsive chord especially in the hearts of young men, many of whom are becoming interested. A united church stands ready to follow him.

ASHLAND.—This place, forty miles in on a branch railroad from the Bangor & Aroostook, is rapidly developing. Rev. Charles Parker is stationed there and expects to organize a church in the near future. When he came to this field there was a large territory with no religious services and Ashland in the center. He labored as a missionary on a small salary and the work has greatly prospered. Much interest is taken in this town by other places in the State and generous contributions supplement the Maine Missionary Society's appropriation.

AUGUSTA.—The Maine Interdenominational Commission met Dec. 11 with good attendance representing five denominations. In the afternoon cases were considered and the conclusion reached in each case was unanimous. A public meeting was held in the evening, presided over by President Hyde of Bowdoin, who spoke in relation to the principles underlying the commission's work. Other addresses were also given.

DEXTER.—There is good interest in all departments under Rev. W. E. Mann's leadership. The Sunday school has doubled its numbers. The attendance at services is largely increased and missionary work has been done in aid of Captain Lane's coast work.

NORWAY.—Second. Through the generosity of Mrs. A. Wrisley, who is a member of the church, and other persons a new pipe organ will soon be put in place in the church. Rev. B. S. Rideout is pastor.

BROWNVILLE.—Special interest continues. Evangelist Buffam has been holding a series of union meetings, which are to continue for some time longer.

THE FORKS.—This new church has received a beautiful pulpit set from the church in Pittston.

MADISON.—A church paper is just started. It has a good list of advertisers and 1,000 subscribers. It promises to be a valuable auxiliary to the work.

New Hampshire.

CLAREMONT.—Last winter union revival services were held, doing much in awakening interest and bringing in to worship many persons who had hitherto been strangers. The pastors, the present season, thought this a fitting preparation for new efforts in the same direction. Special evangelistic work has been inaugurated under the lead of Rev. J. H. Elliott and B. F. Butts, singer, both well fitted for the work in which they are engaged, as shown by the methods employed and the signal results. The secret of their success is their reliance on the Holy Spirit, the organizing of the membership of the churches for efficient co-operation and the avoidance of sensational plans. No attempt has been made to sum up conversions, but many have been awakened to a sense of their need.

HAMPSTEAD.—Rev. R. P. Gardner, the beloved pastor, is at present confined to his bed in a New York hospital. Shortly before Christmas he went to that city for advice in regard to his lameness. While there he had a severer attack. After a successful surgical operation, as the only means of saving his life, the prospect is now of a full restoration after several weeks. As a testimonial of its sympathy his church sent him a Christmas check for $150, and other persons added enough to swell the amount to more than $200. At his request the Christmas festivities were carried out as planned when he expected to be a participant.

AMHERST.—The tenth anniversary of the settlement of the pastor, Rev. A. J. McGown, was commemorated Dec. 15. During this time many improvements have been made on the edifice, inside and out, and on the chapel. A parsonage has been purchased at a cost of nearly $2,000. The church has received several thousand dollars in legacies. Forty-five persons have been added to the roll on confession and twenty-three by letter, making the present total membership 176, a net increase of thirteen. The benevolent contributions have amounted to $11,841. On Friday evening preceding this anniversary his friends and parishioners honored the pastor with a pleasant reception in the chapel.

STRATHAM.—Rev. Daniel Rollins, having been regularly dismissed from the Episcopal ministry, lately united with this church and has entered the Congregational ministry. As this was the church of his grandfather it was peculiarly fitting that he should seek a church home in his changed relation here. He has been a successful rector in his former field and is ready to receive a call to a pastorate. The Christian Endeavorers have already raised the money to send the pastor, Rev. G. A. Foss, as their representative to the next convention in Washington.

RYE.—The C. E. Society connected with this church has, for some years past, been educating a young man, the son of an Armenian pastor, at Marash Academy in Turkey. The letters received from Marash have aroused a deep interest in him. They fear that he and his family may have suffered in the general massacre. The church has contributed $38 for the benefit of the sufferers in Marash.

RAYMOND.—An orchestra has been organized from the congregation for the Sunday evening service. It is proving a success in securing a larger attendance.

PEMBROKE.—Among the bequests of the late Vasta M. Abbott is $1,000 to the First Church in memory of Mary F. Morrison.

BRENTWOOD.—From the estate of the late Mrs. Wisewell of Newfields, formerly a member, the church has received $500.

Vermont.

BRATTLEBORO.—Center. A fine large photograph of Dr. William Wells has been given to the church by his granddaughter, Miss J. C. Wells of New York. He came to this place in 1793 and was settled over the church in West Brattleboro, then the only one in existence there. Later he became pastor of this church.

HARDWICK.—The annual reports are full of encouragement and the year closes without debt, although the church has erected a new edifice this year. The membership has been increased by seventeen. The C. E. Society has a membership of eighty-four. The Sunday school is also much larger.

Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE.—Plymouth. Rev. S. H. Woodrow will hold preparatory special meetings for two or three evenings to gather tone for a full week of evangelistic meetings during the Week of Prayer. The Endeavor Society holds its regular weekly meeting in connection with the midweek church meeting.——Union. In the number of shares on the General Howard Roll this church holds the banner up to date. One thousand dollars have been pledged by several of its members and among its various societies. Dr. Wallace Nutting plans for evangelistic meetings without extra leadership during the prayer week.——Pilgrim. About twenty-five households received a remembrance of Christmas in gifts of food, fuel, toys, books, etc., brought by the Sunday school to be distributed where needed. The pastor's stereopticon aided in making the Biblical story of the Christ-child especially vivid to a congregation that filled the house on Sunday evening.——Beneficent. The foreign department of the Sunday school held its Christmas festival in the vestry on Monday evening, Dec. 23, and a program was carried out in which Chinese, Armenians, Greeks and a Turk all united in the peace and unity of the gospel of brotherly love with their American teachers and friends. The only jangle was made by a Chinese orchestra.

Connecticut.

NORWICH.—Second celebrated, Dec. 22, the 100th anniversary of its beginning public worship on its present site. The pastor, Rev. C. W. Morrow, gave a comprehensive historical review of the century. The Sunday school enjoyed reminiscences of past superintendents and others, and a forward look by its present superintendent. In the evening a union service of all the six Congregational churches of the vicinity was held. The Second Church is the first of the city, having been organized in 1760, while the First Church, organized in 1660, is in Norwich Town, nearly a mile beyond the city limits. Rev. C. A. Northrop of the latter brought felicitous greetings. The pastor of each of the four daughter churches of the Second Church had a part in the services of the evening. Rev. W. S. Palmer, the only former pastor present, spoke briefly of his fifteen years here. During the two and one-half years of the present pastorate 107 names have been added to the roll, and the membership is now over 400, a larger number than ever in the past. Meanwhile the edifice has been thoroughly repaired and every part of its interior beautified and refitted.

WINSTED.—First. Rev. H. W. Pope has spent ten days here holding special services. From the beginning deep interest was evident. As a result nearly fifty persons have signified a desire to lead a Christian life. The church is in great need of a new edifice, and the trustees of the building fund are preparing to make a careful canvass to secure the money before making a start. All branches of the work are in a prosperous condition. The recent opening of the Gilbert Free High School has added some able and willing helpers. With a hearty and courageous people, ever ready to co-operate in all good undertakings, the pastor, Rev. G. F. Prentiss, is strong in his belief that the future of the "Old First" will be even brighter than the past.

NEW HAVEN.—Dwight Place. At the annual meeting of the church Dr. J. E. Twitchell, pastor, a steady growth in spiritual and material life was reported. The membership is 805, a gain of twenty-six during the year. Of fifty-three additions twenty were on confession and eighteen of these from the Sunday school. Benevolences amounted to about $3,000. The church is free from debt. The various departments are encouraged by increasing interest and activity and an outlook for large usefulness.

GLASTONBURY.—The committee appointed to canvass the parish report pledges for expenses made by 149 persons and aggregating $1,780. This amount, it is expected, will be increased to over $1,800. The society accordingly voted to adopt the free pledge system for the coming year, although it has proved unsatisfactory for two years. The society also voted to turn its property over to the church not later than April 1.

WILLIMANTIC.—A farewell reception was tendered Rev. and Mrs. C. A. Dinsmore last Friday. The parlors were tastefully decorated, and beside the social part a musical program was rendered and refreshments served. It was well attended and universal regret was heard on all sides that Mr. Dinsmore was so soon to leave. He preached his farewell sermon Sunday, leaving for his new charge in South Boston, Mass., this week.

NEWINGTON.—The task of connecting the new chapel with the water company's main was accomplished in a short time a week ago Friday by a volunteer force of about twenty church members. The company furnish the water free of rent for eight months in the year.

PUTNAM.—The nine o'clock Sunday morning song service is something new here, but the first one a week ago Sunday proved successful. The cantata, The Coming of the King, was rendered the same day.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

MIDDLETOWN.—North Street. Great sorrow has fallen upon Rev. J. W. Norris, the pastor in the death of his wife. They were married a little more than a year ago, he having graduated from Yale Seminary some months previous. They have been successful in their work, Mrs. Norris making a large place for herself in the hearts of the people.

CAMDEN.—Rev. Edward Evans, the new pastor, is meeting with much success and is greatly beloved by his people. He is recently from England, and seems to be a man of ability as a preacher and of wisdom as a church manager.

Pennsylvania.

CLIFFORD.—Rev. Daniel Daniels, who was pastor here for forty-two years, recently passed away. This was his only parish, although in his early ministry he traveled much in other neighboring counties. He was busy during his last months writing a history of the Welsh churches and reminiscences.

SOUTH WILKESBARRE.—Tabernacle. Since the church was organized in September, 1894, twenty-two members have been received, all but two on confession. It now numbers forty-eight with a Sunday school of 130 and a C. E. Society of forty.

KANE.—The Ladies' Aid Society recently held a "barrel opening," adding $35 to the church funds. It has contributed over $2,500 to the church within seven years.

MINERSVILLE.—The church has dedicated a new edifice with a seating capacity of 435. It is on the same lot with its parsonage.

PLYMOUTH.—Pilgrim has raised $1,500 by a fair and festival, which will be applied on its debt.

EDWARDSDALE.—Bethesda has many of its members engaged in the Law and Order League, which is doing a good work in improving the moral condition of the community.

THE INTERIOR.

Ohio.

CLEVELAND.—Forefathers' Day was observed in the city this year by a double celebration. Besides the meeting of the Congregational Club the surviving members of the New England Society, which has held no meeting for thirty years, revived their organization under the leadership of Deacon L. F. Mellen of Plymouth Church, and about 200 New Englanders attended a banquet at the Plymouth meeting house Saturday evening and listened to historical and patriotic addresses till nearly midnight.——Euclid Avenue has adopted for its benev-olences the coming year the plan of systematic weekly offerings, the amount to be distributed to the various societies according to a schedule of percentages adopted by vote of the church. The money for current expenses also is secured by weekly offerings, and seats are assigned each year to all who make pledges. For the Sunday evenings before and after Christmas Dr. Ladd read the gospel story of the life of Christ and illustrated it by the finest stereopticon views of famous paintings and scenes in the Holy Land. The church was crowded and many were unable to gain admission. ——Hough Avenue has pledged the entire amount of its debt of $3,600 to be paid before April 1. The women's society gave $600 and most of the balance was subscribed on a recent Sunday morning, in shares of $15 each. The church hopes to begin its new building early the coming summer.——South Welsh, under the leadership of its efficient pastor, Rev. T. H. Jones, held an "Eisteddyfod" on Christmas day. Prizes were offered for excellence in original essays and poems, for recitations and for solo and chorus singing. The church was crowded afternoon and evening and the event was a great success.

BURTON.—Four reading circles are in progress among the members, one each in Shakespeare, modern poetry, Greek history and methods of teaching. A men's league has just been organized. The church welcomes back from Columbus to his old position Mr. W. H. Crittenden, who has so efficiently served as organist for seven years. Since the coming of the new Methodist pastor union Sunday evening services have been resumed to the satisfaction of most of the community. The pastor preaches every other Sunday evening in Burton Station.

TOLEDO.—Central. The pastor, Rev. C. L. Hyde, has proposed to the church to make a member's failure to attend or report at two consecutive communion services a sufficient reason for dropping the delinquent's name. Special provision is to be made for particular cases. The church is aroused over the matter.

The church in Claridon has refinished the interior of its house.——The church in Huntsburgh has a new manual.——The Lima church looks forward with hope to the coming of its pastor-elect, Rev. I. J. N. Swanson, Jan. 1.——At St. Mary's the church has been greatly weakened and discouraged for some time, but now hails with joy and fresh courage its new pastor, Rev. J. W. Davis.——The Welsh church in Vaughnsville prospers under the lead of Rev. D. A. Evans, with the evening service all English and an increasing amount of English in the morning service.

Illinois.

CHICAGO.—Gross Park. The annual dinner and meeting, Dec. 20, included a roll call. It was a large gathering which listened to the cheering reports of the year's work. All departments showed definite gain and the congregations have steadily increased. Twenty-two new members have been received. A free library and reading-room have been added this year. The pastor, Rev. W. H. Hopkins, and his wife were given a handsome bookcase for their new house.

Indiana.

FORT WAYNE.—Plymouth. Last week Sunday was a great day for the church, Rev. J. S. Ainslie, pastor. At the morning service the auditorium was overflowed. Eighteen adults and two children were baptized and fifty-eight persons were received into the church, including many whole families and forty-two on confession. The union meetings of seventeen churches conducted for three weeks by Dr. Chapman closed Dec. 1. Their success was evidenced in some degree by the congregations of 4,000 persons drawn to the "Rink" every evening. This church shared in the work and received thirty-five signed cards. The larger harvest, however, came through the evangelistic tone of the church services, and many have been helped who did not sign cards at the union service. This large accession makes the number of new members received during the year 107. The church became self-supporting last July and has a fine new house of worship.

Wisconsin.

RHINELANDER.—Mr. C. N. Hunt, the lawyer evangelist of Minneapolis, closed a three weeks' engagement in this city Dec. 23. He was so powerfully impressed at the Mills meetings, held in Minneapolis about three years ago, with the need and opportunity of evangelistic work that he gave up a large legal practice to devote himself to evangelism. He has worked with great success in Minnesota, where he is State president of Christian Endeavor, and this, his first work in Wisconsin, has powerfully moved the whole city. The meetings were mostly held with the Congregational church, which will be much strengthened.

THE WEST.

Missouri.

KANSAS CITY.—Ivanhoe Park. In connection with the recent dedication of the new edifice, services were continued through the week with the interesting topics: The Church and the Community, The Sunday School, Fellowship and Endeavor Work. A grant from the Church Building Society completes the payment for the building and already cheering signs of growth appear.——Southwest Tabernacle. Greatly to the regret of all, Rev. C. L. Kloss is obliged to take a six months' leave of absence to be in Arizona with his wife, whose health is in an impaired condition. The work of the church, spiritually and financially, is at a high level. The Sunday evening stereopticon sermons on The Life of Christ have crowded the church.

Iowa.

DAVENPORT.—German, under the leadership of Rev. C. F. Finger, is having unusual prosperity. There have been twenty-one additions to the membership during the past two years. The congregation has more than doubled, and the Sunday school, now averaging about 175, has increased fourfold. The audience-room has been enlarged, the woodwork freshly painted, the walls and ceiling papered and other improvements made, at a cost of about $250.

CEDAR RAPIDS.—Bethany. Rev. J. B. Gonzales reports prosperity. Congregations are on the increase, having doubled since he commenced work. The Young People's Society cleared $53 at a recent social and are doing good work in other lines. The average attendance at the Junior Society is about sixty.

DUBUQUE.—German. This church has the largest Sunday school in the city. Rev. Herman Ficke has been pastor for twenty-seven years. The next largest is connected with the Summit Church, Rev. G. M. Orvis, pastor, which now has an average attendance of more than 300.

A new parsonage was completed recently in Rockwell, at a cost of $2,200. Rev. D. G. Youker is pastor.——Evangelist Tillitt has closed a series of special meetings in Harmony, which resulted in over thirty hopeful conversions.——During the year 1895 fourteen Congregational churches were organized in Iowa, their aggregate membership when organized being 307.——Meeting houses were dedicated at Primghar and Oakland Dec. 15 and 17, respectively.

Minnesota.

MINNEAPOLIS.—The First, Como Avenue, Open Door and other churches are making arrangements for special meetings with evangelistic services.——Oak Park. Since the coming of Rev. C. M. G. Harwood congregations have largely increased. The financial outlook is hopeful, and the church is embracing its opportunity for usefulness.——Como Avenue. At the annual meeting it was reported that all debts were paid and twenty-two had been added to the membership. The benevolences amounted to over $2,000—more than twice as much as the church had ever given before. The explanation is that the whole parish, nearly every child as well as adult, pledged a contribution after sermons and literature had been given in behalf of each society. Rev. J. A. Stemen is the pastor.——Silver Lake has changed its name to Fremont Avenue.

EDGERTON.—Owing to the low price of wheat many of the farmers are unable to make payments and are losing their farms. This has depleted the membership of the little church and occasions hardship to the pastor, Rev. Elijah Carter, who remains, laboring faithfully and suffering privations with his people.

LYLE.—This church has been greatly strengthened during the last year and maintains especially friendly relations with the Norwegian Lutheran Church, many of the young people of that church attending this C. E. Society, whose president is a Norwegian.

DULUTH.—Plymouth. The church is greatly disappointed on account of the withdrawal by reason of ill health of Rev. O. C. Helming. A fellowship meeting was held Dec. 20 to celebrate Forefathers' Day. The general topics discussed were: The Church, The Pilgrims, and Congregationalism.

ELLSWORTH.—The pastor has just moved into the new parsonage, which cost with lots $1,200. The women raised $150 by a fair. Although few in numbers, the people have worked hard and the parsonage is paid for, except the amount loaned by the Church Building Society.

OWATONNA.—A newspaper and periodical exchange is supported by the Y. P. S. C. E., by means of which families of the church are supplied with different periodicals, while the barber shops are also furnished with good reading.

ORTONVILLE.—The church has been pastorless for several months, but keeps up its services and prayer meetings. A parsonage worth about $2,000 has been secured for much less and will make a fine home for a new minister.

DETROIT.—Much financial progress has been made during the year and the reunion at the annual meeting shows all departments of church work in good condition, with an earnest desire for spiritual blessings.

GRANADA.—As a result of revival meetings there have been several conversions and the church is strengthened, although the religious forces of the community have been divided by the starting of a second unneeded church.

WINONA.—Second. The church, having been supplied by a non-resident pastor for seven months, is making arrangements to secure a resident pastor with the help of the First Church and the Home Missionary Society.

FAIRMONT.—The women have just held a fair netting $225, with which they have paid the debt on the parsonage and are planning to renovate it for the coming of a new pastor, whose arrival is greatly anticipated.

ERSKINE.—Owing to the labors of Mr. S. A. Van Luven of the Moody Institute in connection with the Home Missionary Society, a Sunday school has been formed and an evangelist will be sent to assist.

BIWABIK.—The building formerly used as a theater and dance house has been purchased by the church and is being fitted up for services. An additional laborer is needed on this field and arrangements are made to secure him.

BARNESVILLE.—An addition to the meeting house has been built to accommodate the large Sunday school. With the coming of a new pastor the church is planning an onward movement.

STEWARTVILLE.—Since the coming of the new pastor great progress has been made in reducing the debt and increasing the spiritual life of the church. Some divisions have disappeared.

SHERBURNE.—The church building has been improved and a new bell secured, while congregations are increasing. The pastor preaches at out-stations. The church has come to self support.

Nebraska.

LINCOLN.—First. Rev. Lewis Gregory has completed a twenty years' pastorate, the longest in the State. The church just now has special reasons for rejoicing, having just raised $2,500 which was necessary to meet the church expenses for the year ending Dec. 31. The canvass was made by Mr. Gregory, and in recognition of his service the trustees tendered him a congratulatory reception, which was largely attended. During these years Mr. Gregory has seen the church grow from fifty-seven in membership to more than 500. There have been received altogether 921 persons, about one-third on confession and more than 900 of them by Mr. Gregory. He came to a small wooden edifice, which is now replaced by a beautiful structure costing about $30,000. The church has raised for home expenses over $75,000 and for benevolences about $30,000.

NEWCASTLE.—Rev. John Roberts has been holding special services with his out-station on Daily Branch. The large, new schoolhouse has been filled night after night and there have been a number of hopeful conversions, most of them among the young people of the neighborhood. For three weeks Mr. Roberts has preached three times on Sunday and every week night except Saturday. The people at the out-station have assisted the Newcastle church in coming to self-support.

GRAFTON.—A memorable day was Dec. 22. The evangelistic meetings under the lead of Mr. Billings had resulted in the conversion of fifty or sixty persons, and fifty-one united with the church at the communion service on Sunday morning, all but two on confession. As Mr. L. M. Andress, who has been preaching here, has not yet been ordained, President Perry of Doane College assisted at the service. Mr. Billings made a short address; President Perry baptized thirty adults and three children, and after all had assented to the confession of faith and covenant the evangelist extended the right hand of fellowship to each member with an appropriate word of welcome. The service occupied three hours and a half, but no one would have had a single part omitted, and it left a profound impression not only on the church but on the whole community. There are other candidates who will be ready to unite at a later date. Arrangements have been made for Mr. Andress to continue with the church.

South Dakota.

HURON.—As the result of an address by Secretary A. M. Haswell, of the National Christian Citizenship

League, a strongly officered league was organized. The Huron Ministers' Association met the City Council at its regular meeting and urged the withdrawal of the "disorderly house ordinance," whereby gambling and liquor selling is protected through the payment of a license fee of $40 per month. The edifice here has lately been newly papered and carpeted and otherwise improved.

DUNCAN.—Superintendent Daley is assisting Rev. P. B. Fisk in special meetings with good results.

Nevada.

RENO.—Rev. Thomas Magill is entering his ninth year of service here. The new edifice, the finest in the place, has the best location in town and is conveniently situated for the 300 or more university students. The coast secretary of the C. C. B. S. recently spent a Sunday with this people when a start was made toward liquidating the debt of $3,500. This is the only Congregational church in Nevada. The members number seventy, none of them being wealthy and the town is financially depressed, owing to the low condition of silver mining, the chief industry of the State.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

SAN FRANCISCO.—First. Thieves recently broke into the meeting house and stole the large pulpit Bible and other things, not of great value, belonging to the pastor, Dr. C. O. Brown. He has commenced a series of Sunday evening lectures on Jesus, the Soul of the World's Noblest Music, in which he will discuss several of the great masters, the choir rendering selections from their works. A pleasant gathering of the Gen. O. O. Howard Bible Class was held at the home of Rev. John Kimball, the present popular teacher. Accompanied by many kind words was a beautiful present for the leader which was highly appreciated.——Plymouth. Rev. W. D. Williams, D. D., enters upon the sixth year of his pastorate with the church in a prosperous condition. The ladies' foreign missionary society has forwarded twenty-five dollars for the debt of the American Board.——At Seaman's Bethel, Rev. Joseph Rowell, pastor, conversions occur almost daily.——Richmond. The eleventh anniversary of the Sunday school and the second of the church were recently held in this western suburb. Among those present and speaking was Deacon S. S. Smith of Plymouth Church, through whose foresight and generosity the enterprise was begun. Rev. Philip Coombe is the faithful pastor. The membership is mostly of young people, who have united upon confession of faith, many coming from the Sunday school.

At the suggestion of the Presbyterians a committee of the Monday Club has been appointed to co-operate with a similar committee from other ministerial gatherings to arrange for a mass meeting in behalf of Armenia.

FRESNO.—Under the enthusiastic leadership of Rev. H. E. Banham this church is showing new life. Its note in the bank for $3,000, drawing twelve and one-fourth per cent. interest, will ere long, it is hoped, be paid, as the trustees are making extraordinary efforts to secure pledges for the purpose. This is the chief town of the great San Joaquin Valley and the work there is important for other than merely local reasons.

TURLOCK.—This little church has its debt of $600 nearly provided for, and will soon be able to have a pastor again. The C. C. B. S. has promised $200 when all the rest is paid. Churches and individuals within the General Association have aided to the amount of $200 or more.

Oregon.

WESTON AND FREEWATER.—These two places in eastern Oregon, 260 miles east of Portland, are the principal points in the field of Rev. A. R. Olds. At the first a small Sunday school was established about three years ago by Rev. C. T. Whittlesey of Pendleton, fifteen miles distant. About two years ago, when Mr. Olds went to Weston, the Sunday school was practically dead. He reorganized it, infusing new life and a church soon followed; then another Sunday school and church in Freewater, eight miles away. The entire district, some forty miles square, is a rural community, and all is included in his parish. In it now there are two church organizations, with ninety members and with buildings paid for, eight Sunday schools, with 350 members. Besides the churches, Mr. Olds has three other preaching stations. From a wild cowboy settlement, with all the vice and recklessness this implies, the community for the most part has been transformed into a quiet, orderly one, where life and property are safe at all times.

PORTLAND.—First. The large Sunday evening congregations are remarkable for the fact that from fifty to seventy per cent. of those attending are men. This church is taking from its membership roll a large number of names of persons concerning whom nothing has been known for years. Dr. G. R. Wallace is pastor.——Sunnyview. The pastor, Rev. J. J. Staub, is greatly encouraged by the constantly increasing attendance at all services. A first-class organist and choir leader has been engaged and the musical part of the service is now being made increasingly attractive. The First, the mother church, recently gave 100 hymnals, which are highly valued. Supt. R. A. Rowley of the Sunday School Society preached here Dec. 15. For three months a stereopticon has been used at the evening service with delightful results.

SALEM.—First. Dr. W. C. Kantner recently started a class for Bible study, which meets on a week night and is a marked success. The attendance from other churches and the city generally is large.——Central. Rev. P. S. Knight has ministered to this church a year without salary and has also supplied most of the time at the Willard church, eleven miles distant. The two fields now have united and called Rev. J. M. and Rev. Dora R. Barber to supply them in future.

OREGON CITY.—Under the ministry of Rev. J. W. Cowan, D. D., this church rejoices in substantial growth. Not long since he gave a strong sermon in support of the enforcement of municipal laws regarding drinking and gambling, which for years have been practically dead letters on the city statute-books.

RAINIER.—Rev. C. W. Wells has been called to this field, which has been without a pastor for more than a year. He has also arranged to supply the newly organized church in Cathlamet, Wn., on the opposite side of the Columbia River.

Washington.

TACOMA.—East. During a series of special meetings just held, an employer of a large number of men announced that they might have a half holiday with wages continued, and urged them to attend the meetings.

A number of ministers' families are made happy by the timely arrival of well-packed home missionary boxes. More than one missionary is wearing a good pulpit suit which was a present to him.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rock Bottom Methodist Episcopal church invited the Sunday schools of Boxboro, Acton, Maynard and Stow in Concord district and of Hudson and Marlboro in Framingham district to attend a rally in the only church in the village. Nearly 150 Sunday school workers and their friends were present Dec. 18.

Somerset schools held a union service Dec. 13 to consider what could be done to advance the interests of the half-dozen schools in town. Associate State Secretary Conant addressed the meeting. It was decided to organize the Somerset Sunday School Association as an auxiliary to the district and State work and to endeavor to maintain a weekly teachers' meeting and normal class.

Barnstable County was favored with a series of district meetings last month, in three of the four districts into which that county is divided. At Sandwich the day was a particularly severe one, but delegations came from Centerville, fifteen miles distant, and from Mashpee, nine miles away. Such topics as A Model Sunday School, The Possibilities of a Country Sunday School, Normal Work and The Needs of the Primary and Junior Teacher occupied the time at Falmouth. At Sandwich a different line of topics had been chosen, and among them The Relation of the Home to the Sunday School, The Bible in the Sunday School and Essentials to Successful Teaching filled the morning session, and in the afternoon came reports from schools, election of officers, a normal lesson, The Relation of the District to the State Work, and a primary hour and children's service. In each meeting a number of the local pastors and lay workers presented excellent papers or made helpful addresses, and the State secretaries brought tried and approved methods of work for their consideration. In each meeting the home department literature was much sought after.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

Six o'clock on Sunday morning is the regular hour for the meetings of a society among the colored people of Wilmington, Del.

Nearly 1,000 pieces of literature were supplied to the county jail, the Home for the Friendless, the hospitals and other places in Spokane, Wn., by the Westminster society during the last month.

The special subject for the World's Christian Endeavor Prayer Chain in January will be: "Prayer that all churches may be willing to receive the gifts of the Holy Spirit in reviving and converting power."

The project for the Williston Endeavor Home, the sailors' mission at Nagasaki, Japan, proposed by members of the society on board the United States Steamship Charleston, is meeting with success, and the property has been secured.

The society in the Beneficent Church, Providence, R. I., has made good its title by earning a place on the Gen. O. O. Howard Roll of Honor of the Home Missionary Society. Of the $100 thus given, $81 was raised in about three months as an extra contribution.

The local union of New Haven, Ct., the first that was formed, has organized an evangelistic band, whose members are ready to answer calls to help weak societies in evangelistic services, as well as to conduct special meetings in the city at any time or place when they may be needed.

The total number of societies on record Dec. 1, as shown by Secretary Baer's report, was 42,800, of which 160 were floating societies and 5,063 in foreign lands, while the United States had 25,270 young people's societies and 8,988 junior. England's societies number 3,600 and Australia's more than 1,600.

In Decatur, Ill., are nine societies representing eight different denominations. Much good has resulted from a system of exchanges by which, on given nights, the conduct of the meeting in one society is in entire charge of another. A short social follows the prayer meeting, which comes on a week day evening.

As the societies have responded so encouragingly to the request of the Woman's Board of Missions that they undertake the support of Miss Chapin and Miss Harlow, it is also desired that they should raise the salary of Miss Annie Stockbridge of India, and make contributions for the building of Capron Hall.

Headquarters for Massachusetts at the convention in Washington have already been assigned at the First Congregational Church. In preparation for the music of the convention, one member has been appointed in each society in the city to have charge of the quota of singers to be furnished to the great chorus by that society. There will be rehearsals for these leaders, who will then drill the singers in their own societies, after which there will be rehearsals of the chorus by sections, ending with several general rehearsals, some of which may be public.

The New York City Union numbers 135 societies, with a membership of 6,500, and the Chicago Union has now increased to 410 societies, with a membership of about 18,000. German, Dutch, Norwegian, Swedish, Welsh, Bohemian and Chinese are languages in which meetings are regularly held in societies belonging to the Chicago Union. New York also has Bohemian, Italian, French and German societies, besides several among the sailors. The German work in Chicago has been made a distinct department of the union's activity, with a special superintendent in charge of it.

The Sunday school committee of the St. Louis Union, finding that eighty thousand Protestant children of school age in the city were not members of any Sunday school, and that little was being done by the societies to meet this need, sent out circulars and questions, besides suggestions, to individual societies, as to work that needed to be done. A conference of representatives of all the Sunday school committees and all societies without such committees was then held. There were papers and discussions on winning new scholars, visiting absent scholars, and the home department, closing with an address from Mr. W. J. Semelroth, the Sunday school vice-president of the Missouri Union. The reports given showed that much had already been accomplished through the committee's efforts and the enthusiasm awakened at the meeting promised a great advance.

OTHER CHRISTIAN WORK.

If 300 members shall be enrolled at a membership fee of three dollars the Boston and Maine Railroad, through its president, Lucius Tuttle, has expressed a willingness to provide for its employés in Concord, N. H., one of their buildings in the vicinity of the station, to include parlor, library and reading-room, hall and rest rooms, with $1,000 for such interior changes as may be needed for this purpose, $1,000 to furnish the same, and $100 per month for a secretary's salary and running expenses. This will be a branch of the Y. M. C. A. of Concord, but it will have a separate secretary.

Eighty-eight Y. M. C. Associations in Massachusetts and Rhode Island have 25,526 members, and the Women's Auxiliary numbers 8,462 members. Twenty-six associations have buildings valued at $1,640,000, and there are building funds in addition. Last year $259,654 were spent for current expenses, and of this amount forty-three per cent. came from memberships and income from buildings. One hundred and thirty-six men are giving their whole time to the work as paid secretaries and physical directors. In addition to 120 young men's meetings and ninety-one Bible classes each week, a large number of educational and gymnasium classes are held and hundreds of lectures and entertainments are given. Increased interest in this special line of work for the moral, physical and mental up-building of young men is exhibited in many places.

The new State University library building at Lincoln, Neb., has just been dedicated with appropriate ceremonies. The structure cost over $100,000, and is one of the finest public buildings in the State, and perhaps the best library building in the West. It is ornamental, being of pressed brick and resembling somewhat the letter T. There is an art room, some recitation rooms for American history classes, a fine modern reading room, and space for some 250,000 volumes. The State Historical Society has ample quarters, with a vault of sufficient size to hold all the records and relics.

To Japan and China.—Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb are preparing to take another small band of tourists to Japan and China. Their first tour to the Orient has proved very successful. The party, after devoting nearly two months in traveling about Japan, and visiting Hong Kong, Macao and Canton, are now about to return homeward. A second party is announced to leave Boston Feb. 24. Like the first it will be limited in numbers. The visit to Japan will occur during the season of cherry blossoms, invariably a time of festivity in that country. All the principal cities, temples and places of picturesque and historic interest will be seen, and the sojourns in the various towns will be of sufficient length to encompass all the strange sights. There will be an opportunity for a tour through the Hawaiian Islands in connection with this trip. Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb (296 Washington Street, opposite School Street, Boston) will send an illustrated descriptive book on application.

PARLOR SUITES.

Did you ever hear the story of the boy who went into an office to study law, beginning on the munificent salary of nothing a week? At the end of the first week his father said: "Well, Tobe, how do you like the profession of law?"

"'Tain't what it's cracked up to be, Dad! I'm sorry I learned it."

Tobe's facility with the law is as nothing to the ease with which some persons decide that they don't care for any new furniture this winter. Not one in ten of those persons speaks the truth. Nine out of ten would buy in a moment if they could realize how inexpensive is fine furniture today.

We are not exactly giving our Parlor Suits free of charge, but we are selling them at a price which has never been equaled in the history of the furniture trade in this country.

Here is a new suit of four pieces. It is offered at a very moderate price.

The frame is flat instead of vertical, and has a two-inch border of superb marquetry. These flat top frames are the latest fashion. They have a very distinguished appearance.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

The period immediately at hand is one of house-cleaning in the world of finance and commerce. There are the January settlements, the readjustment of accounts and stock-taking. The profit and loss account for the year is being carefully computed and consequently the expansion of enterprise is not sought. For these reasons the next few weeks are liable to be quiet ones in mercantile affairs.

But there are other reasons why curtailment should be exercised by capital. We have just had a panic in the stock market, the financial atmosphere is more or less charged with uncertainty, and the situation at Washington but adds to the other doubts. It is figured that relief measures for the Treasury which pass the House cannot pass the Senate, and those which pass the Senate will not be confirmed by the House, and any bill which might happen to pass both branches will be vetoed by the President.

Under such circumstances another issue of bonds by the Administration has been only a question of time for many weeks. The credit of the nation is in safe hands, in those of Mr. Cleveland, and financial interests draw great consolation from this fact. The one unfortunate feature about the President's attitude is his refusal to admit that more revenue is needed by the United States Treasury. With a heavy deficit running over the past two years it is difficult to see how the President can claim that no additional revenue is needed.

With an issue of $100,000,000 of bonds and the Government provided with sufficient income to cover running expenses, we would not hesitate to predict a great boom in business affairs throughout the country. The war scare and stock panic has effected a welcome reduction in our imports of foreign goods. The result is that while our imports are decreasing, our exports are increasing, thus swelling materially the balance of trade in our favor and of course checking gold exports.

The Christmas trade compared well with that of other years, but the outlook is for dullness in general business for the next month or so. Iron has declined again, pig iron being only $1 per ton above the lowest price of the year. We look for better times ahead, particularly in the security markets, where values are undeniably low.

EDUCATION.

—— The average annual cost of a year at Yale is now said to be $535.

—— Mr. E. L. Wood has been appointed registrar of Amherst College.

—— The decision of the general term of the Supreme Court of New York State, rendered recently, presumably settles the contest over the estate of Daniel B. Fayerweather, and gives the residue of his estate, $3,000,000, to the same twenty colleges, share and share alike, to which he left $2,150,000 in 1890. This decision affects colleges and philanthropic institutions who expected to profit by a gift of this residue apportioned by the trustees acting under authority of a codicil of the will leaving the residue absolutely to the trustees. Amherst, Dartmouth, Hamilton, Williams and the University of Rochester, who were not to receive any of the residue under the deed of gift, brought the suit and profit much by the decision.

—— The hearty indorsement by the Central Congregational Association of New York of an alliance between Congregational churches and the Free Baptists in the region in the support and government of Keuka College, near Penn Yan, indicates the growth of friendly relations. The institution was founded by the Free Baptists, under Dr. George H. Ball, formerly of Buffalo, and has fine grounds and a building costing $100,000 on the shores of Keuka Lake. It stands in a rich farming and grape-raising community and has about a hundred students of both sexes. The design is to complete the endowment so as to meet the requirement of the new constitution of the State and have manual training and other features added to the ordinary college courses. There is no college for the average farmer's son or daughter within a large and important territory and Keuka College meets a real need.

Old friends grow dearer as they grow fewer; those who remember us as long as we remember ourselves become a part of ourselves at last, and leave us much the poorer when they are taken away.—Sarah Orne Jewett.

Religious Notices.

GORDON MISSIONARY TRAINING SCHOOL, Clarendon Street Baptist Church, Boston, opens Oct. 2. Evening classes Oct. 10.

THE GENERAL THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY, at its new building, 53 Mt. Vernon Street, Boston. Founded for the benefit of clergymen, theological students, Sunday school teachers, authors, and readers of a Christian literature of all denominations. It contains 17,000 volumes and 100 periodicals in the reading-room. Its books have circulated in more than 500 towns and villages in 12 different States of our country. It is supported by donations, bequests and fees from life and annual members, who have the full use of the library, and by the perpetual membership of churches, whose pastors have the use of the library, including the drawing of books, forever gratis. Donations and fees should be sent to Rev. Luther Farnham, secretary, at the library.

THE AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION has been at work seventy-one years for the retired rural districts. Its union methods specially commend it to communities of sparse populations divided in religious sentiments. Its missionaries visit families, distribute religious literature, hold evangelistic meetings and organize Sunday Schools. Probably no evangelizing agency has larger results for the amount expended. 11,000,000 children are yet out of Sunday School. Will you help to save them? Send to Rev. Addison P. Foster, D. D., New England Secretary, 1 Beacon St., Room 40, Boston.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the Society at New York.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING.

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, DEC. 27.

The work and furnishing of the tabernacle of the Israelites called out the willing offering of the people in response to Moses' injunction. In these days of the Christian dispensation, said Mrs. A. H. Johnson, who conducted the meeting, there are many tabernacles being reared to the glory of God. We may well count the Woman's Board of Missions as such a one. When the cloud descended on the tabernacle of old the Israelites stopped. So upon us the cloud has come down, and it should be a discipline to us, as it may have been to them, to teach us more of faith, of patience and of knowledge of God's ways. Mrs. Johnson urged prayer for the sultan, as the one above all other human powers able to stay the reign of terror in Turkey.

The calendar had turned thought to Ceylon the past week, and a message was read from Miss Susan Howland. The Bible women's work was reported by Miss Lamson. Miss Washburn read a letter about the schools in Udupitty and Tillipally. In the latter 95,300 Bible verses had been committed to memory by the children in a year.

Mrs. G. B. Wilcox of the Board of the Interior brought as their greeting the message that was on their own hearts, "Pray without ceasing." In the experience of that Board the past year a personal lesson had come home to them in a little incident related by one of their missionaries in Turkey. She had gone to see a sick woman lying on the floor of her little hovel, surrounded by none of the comforts and few of even the necessities of life. Yet the woman's face was bright and her eyes shone as she told her visitor of the verse that had been her comfort as she lay there: "I am poor and needy, but the Lord thinketh on me."

Mrs. Schneider gave a reminiscence of her own life in Marsovan twenty years ago, when she first met Maritza, a favorite teacher in the Girls' Seminary. Now in these massacres her husband has suffered martyrdom and her happy home is destroyed. Mrs. J. K. Browne read letters from Misses Bush and Seymour of Harpoot, describing their perilous journey from Arabkir to Harpoot previous to the massacre. The letter was dated Nov. 14, and Miss Bush said, "Death has been staring us in the face for three weeks." At the time of her writing the company of missionaries at Harpoot were beginning to get a few necessities together in the endeavor to make themselves as comfortable as they might. Earnest prayers were offered for them, as well as for all our missionaries and friends in that terror-stricken land.

TRUTHS THAT NEED EMPHASIS.

Those fortunate enough to listen to the address by Dr. Doremus Scudder at the Boston Ministers' Meeting last Monday will certainly agree that it was all too short. He spoke eloquently and forcefully and said, in part: To live in our present age is a rare privilege, and to assist in shaping from it the more glorious time to come is a service which the greatest men of the past might envy us. Out of the thought chaos caused by the revolutionary theory of evolution and destructive criticism, as well as the chaos in practical living caused by the industrial changes of our century, there is slowly crystallizing a new faith and a new life. The new Christian doctrine which will be developed will be certain to be both sturdy and positive, gentle and attractive, like the Jesus who is its inspirer. The books of Dr. Herron, Dr. Gladden, Professor Ely, Professor Stevens, Dr. Gordon and a host of others are evidences of this doctrinal revival. There is also a new practical spirit voicing itself through Dr. Parkhurst, Mr. Roosevelt, the Cambridge idea, the South Carolina plan, the Christian Endeavor movement and, in short, in the Good Samaritan principle which is animating so much of this end of the century life; and it seems as if there may be in the coming fifty years a radical change in American life along the lines of Sabbath observance, temperance, faithfulness to the church, participance in public duty and distribution of wealth.

In view of these two characteristics of the religious condition of our times, Dr. Scudder would answer the question, What truths need special emphasis today? by saying, first, the truths which God's Spirit points out personally to you in the Bible. He spoke of the illumination which Christ was constantly giving to Old Testament truths, which perhaps were not fully understood by those who uttered them, but which had been held there all the centuries through, waiting for the Spirit to show their meaning.

The second thing to be emphasized is that what our time requires in spiritual teaching is to be learned from those who compose the time. Contact with the Scriptures is communion with God, but while the truth that Jesus developed had its germ in the Old Testament, the atmosphere in which it matured into beautiful life was that of intimate association with his fellowmen. When a pastor takes into his heart the joys and sorrows, trials and temptations and spiritual struggles of his people, he gets into touch with the Zeit-geist and can speak on Sunday in the language that appeals most deeply to the longings of his human brothers and sisters.

A third need is individuality. God wants for his children vigorous natures, with each trait strongly developed, all co-operating harmoniously to do his work. Well defined, Christ-ruled individuality is a winsome thing in the pulpit. If you are called of God to preach the gospel, don't hunt for topics that the age demands, but find your God in reading and in contact with your fellowmen, and first of all in the Scriptures, and he will whisper to you the truths to which he desires you to give emphasis, and he will honor their proclamation in the renewed natures of your hearers.

At the close of Dr. Scudder's remarks there was a short discussion turning upon the usefulness of a knowledge of Hebrew and Greek in one's study of the Bible. Resolutions were passed in honor of the late Rev. E. P. Blodgett, and the present moderator of the meeting was unanimously re-elected for the coming three months.

Life without friendship is like the sky without the sun.—Cicero.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. EDWARD P. BLODGETT.

The death of this venerable and beloved minister occurred at his home in Roslindale, Mass., from a short attack of pneumonia, Dec. 28, at the age of eighty years. He was born in East Windsor, Ct., but during infancy his parents removed to Amherst, where he entered college and was graduated in 1836. He studied theology at Andover and, after completing his studies, went immediately to Greenwich, was ordained July 5, 1843, and the following week married Mary S., daughter of John Webb of England. She died many years ago, but their three daughters are still living. One is at the head of the Young Travelers' Aid Association of the Boston Y. W. C. A.

For fifty-one years Dr. Blodgett labored faithfully in his parish at Greenwich, never missing an appointment to a conference or association meeting and never absent from his pulpit on account of illness but once during a period of forty-three years. He was a loyal son of Amherst and missed only two Commencements for half a century, once when traveling West and again when illness prevented. This quality of fidelity greatly endeared him to his people and he was a favorite wherever known. He has been of recent years a frequent figure in denominational gatherings in and about Boston and his winsome smile and beautiful spirit will be greatly missed.

To cleanse society of the unfit we must give to woman the power of selection in marriage, and the means by which this most desirable and important end can be attained will be brought about by giving her such training and education as shall render her economically independent.—Alfred Russell Wallace.

"Plain but athletic" (After sketch in New York Truth.) Evidently the picture of a woman cleaning house for the first time with Pearline. She finds that what has always been the hardest kind of hard work is now comparatively easy, and in her enthusiasm and high spirits, she kicks up her heels. Probably an extreme case. Still, it may be there are numbers of women who, when they clean house first with Pearline, manifest their pleasure in the same way. 467

MRS. MIRIAM PRATT JONES.

No Christian that ever lived could have merited more surely the rewards and glories of the heavenly kingdom than she who entered into "fullness of joy" on Sunday, Dec. 22, just as the peaceful sunset glory of the dying day was filling the earth with the symbols of everlasting peace and rest.

She was born July 14, 1815. Eighty years of consecrated human life! How much this means to God, the All-Father, with his infinite, yearning love! How much this means of beautiful service to the world by this mother beloved and Christian friend so deeply mourned! "A mother in Israel has fallen this day." One whose testimony to the faithfulness of Israel's God has never wavered. One whose faith was built upon the rock foundation of God's holy Word. She was eminently a Biblical Christian, and it was this that made her character noble and strong and true to the highest ideals.

As a young woman she is said to have been beautiful in face and manner. There was about her an innate sense of refinement that betokened the true lady and made her very charming to her friends. She was a Miss Miriam Pratt of North Weymouth and a teacher in the Charlestown Female Seminary when Willard Jones, the young theological student from Andover, met her and finally asked her to go with him on a mission to the heathen. Like Harriet Newell and Mrs. Judson, she gave herself with a rare spirit of devotion to the work of foreign missions, and with her husband, who was commissioned by the A. B. C. F. M. immediately upon graduating from the seminary, sailed for Persia from Boston, July 17, 1839. After six years of labor at Ooroomiah it seemed right and best that Mr. and Mrs. Jones should return to America. Mr. Jones served as a faithful and self-denying pastor in Northfield and North Orange, Mass., and in Middlefield, Ct., and Central Falls, R. I., and then again in Northfield, where he died in 1861. Mrs Jones has since lived with her eldest daughter, who has been a teacher in the State Normal School at Worcester, Mass., for several years.

By one who owes much to the influence of such a life this tribute of respect and affection is gladly offered. MRS. JOSEPH WARD.

A home missionary's letter. It represents the feelings of many equally worthy and needy workers on the frontier.

DEC. 16, 1895.

W. L. Greene & Company; Dear Sirs: Many thanks for The Congregationalist Handbook.

I see that this year again is drawing unto a close, and I begin to think if we shall be so fortunate as to have The Congregationalist for 1896 I cannot well afford to pay for it, as my salary (after moving here from —— and taking charge of ——) is less than $300 a year. And missing The Congregationalist a great deal of our comfort as a family would be taken away. We think there is no such a paper, therefore we hope and pray that some one will pity us and send us the paper gratis for another year.

Nothing would please us better than to have the good news that we are going to have it. I venture to inclose a stamp for an answer. With heartfelt thanks for past favors, I remain ——.

ANOTHER HOME MISSIONARY LETTER.

DEC. 24, 1895.

Dear Congregationalist: The end of another year is at hand and times still hard and money scarce. To support a family and keep up a horse and buggy on a salary of $400, with all the incidental expenses, requires very close living, and we have been wondering if we would have to do without The Congregationalist next year. If some kind friend that sympathizes with the self-denials of a preacher's life could afford to send us The Congregationalist how thankful we will be. With many thanks for the past favors, we remain yours ——.

EXTRACTS FROM DR. HUNTER'S FAMOUS LECTURES.

No. 6.

Why Consumptives Lose Flesh.

The nourishing of the body depends on the power of assimilation in the lungs. No quality or amount of food can add the weight of a grain to the body beyond the lung power of assimilation. The food may be good and the stomach digest it perfectly, and yet the patient lose flesh from day to day. It is surprising how few understand why this is. They suppose that if the food is good and the digestion perfect the patient will gain flesh, or at least hold his own. But such is not the fact. The stomach has little to do with the making of new blood from the food eaten. It is simply a mill to grind and dissolve the foods that their nutritious elements may be separated from the crude mass and absorbed —taken up as a milky liquid—and carried to the lungs to be there endowed with life, changed into blood, and made capable of repairing the wastes of the body. This change is what is meant by assimilation. It depends on the size and freedom of the lungs, and only takes place in proportion to the volume of air we breathe. With large lungs a man is fleshy and strong, because he assimilates or transforms into blood a large quantity of food. A man with small lungs is thin and weak, because he can only assimilate a small quantity. Our weight is fixed by the volume of air we habitually take in at a breath. This we call our vital capacity. Poor food and bad digestion may keep us below this standard, but no dieting can ever make us rise above it.

When the lungs become diseased their capacity for air is diminished, and, to exactly the same extent, their power to make new blood from food is reduced. A loss of flesh and strength must take place. If the disease increases the obstruction to breathing also increases, and the body keeps on wasting or consuming away in the same proportion, and no diet can prevent it.

This is a law of God, and there can be no exception to its operation. You cannot find in all the world a strong, muscular man who has not large lungs and great breathing power, or a man with small lungs and feeble breathing power who is not both thin and weak.

In the light of science, how absurd is the hackneyed promise, so often made by physicians, to build up the flesh and strength of consumptives by food. They have no more power to stop the loss of flesh by food than they have to stop the revolution of the earth upon its axis. The only way the body can be built up is to stop the lung disease which wasting it, and improve the breathing Accomplish this and nature will do the building up.

ROBERT HUNTER, M. D.

117 West Forty-fifth Street, New York city.

NOTE —Dr. Hunter's book can be obtained by all readers of The Congregationalist who are anxious about their lungs, by addressing him as above.

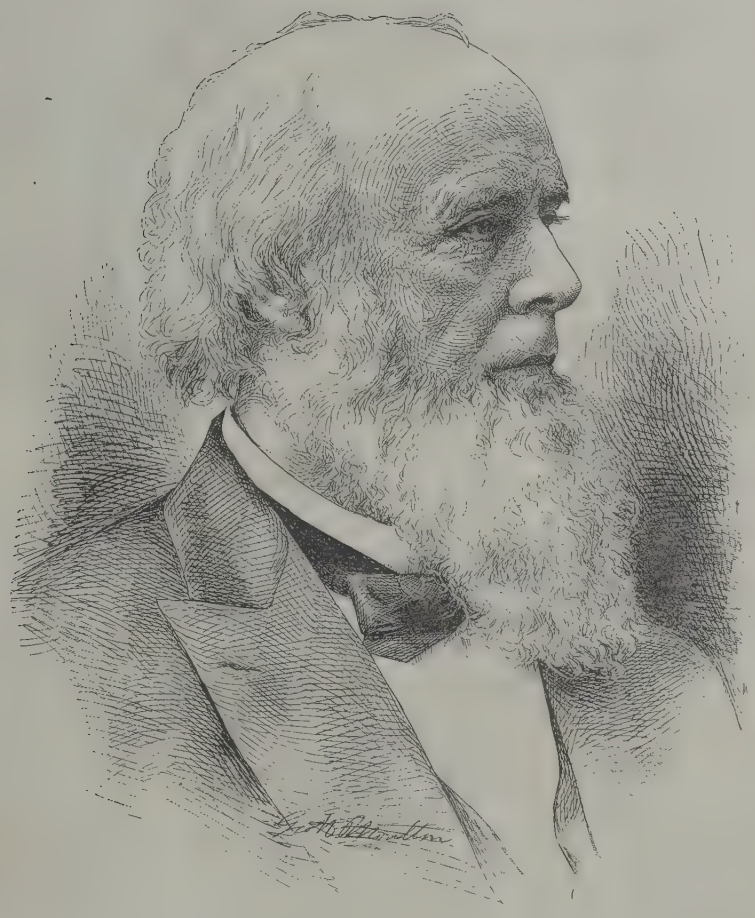
Boston Thursday 9 January 1896



REV. NATHANIEL GEORGE CLARK, D. D., LL. D.

Born Jan. 18, 1825; died Jan. 3, 1896.

HOWEVER one may have differed at times from dear Dr. Clark, on matters which to each seemed important, he can never have failed to recognize the sincerity, dignity and devout earnestness of the mind which met his or the magnanimity of temper, the gracious nobleness of thought and spirit, which gave moral emphasis to the differing opinion. Such a mind and character only found their fit sphere in the world which he loved—the divine fragrance of which is already in all the earth, the effects of which will outlast the suns.—*Richard S. IN the face of the wholesale murder of Armenians by the Moslem Turks, the most extensive and dastardly persecution of Christians in all history, it is amazing that the United States has so far officially made no protest. Mr. Capen, in another column, points out the lost opportunity which Congress let slip from its hands. Dr. Newman Smyth recently preached an able sermon to the Center Church, New Haven, calling on our Government to offer moral support to England in efforts to put a speedy end to the atrocities which insult and shame Christian nations. Resolutions were passed at a mass meeting in Center Church last Saturday pledging support to Congress should it make a solemn declaration, offering to the British Government "the full sympathy and moral support of the United States in any action which England may initiate for the protection of the Christian populations of Turkey." At a large mass meeting in Central Music Hall in Chicago last Sunday resolutions were passed expressing similar sentiments and addressed to the queen. From other parts of the country come strong expressions of public opinion that official action by our Government ought not to be longer delayed. We cannot doubt that the action asked of Congress would be heartily sustained by the whole country. Can we as a nation keep silence longer in the presence of continued crime unparalleled in the record of the darkest ages?

The proportions of Sunday labor have been much increased in Boston of late, to the detriment of many workmen and to the disturbance of the people's rest day. Till recently the granting of permits to work on Sunday has been left to police captains, by what authority in law we do not know. But for the last three Sundays most of this work has been stopped by the direction of the police commissioners, and much of the credit of this better order of things is due to the New England Sunday Protective League. At the hearings last week before the commissioners the representatives of the league and of the New York & New Haven Railroad Company appeared to be in substantial harmony, both parties seeking to prevent unnecessary labor and willing that works of necessity should go on. But it is wise to have the question, What is a work of necessity? answered by disinterested parties who are in sympathy with the purpose of preserving the Lord's Day as a day of rest. Sunday labor easily grows to be a public nuisance unless it is the business of some one to restrain it. The Sunday Protective League is of value to all working men, and especially should have the support of all who would keep Sunday as a day of the worship of God.

Latent weakness usually shows itself suddenly in a time of trial. It is the storm which tests the trees and shows which of them are sound and healthy. A striking instance of this law is suggested by Archdeacon Moule in writing of the Chinese collapse in the recent war with Japan. "I have long looked," he says, "and, as I thought, happily in vain for symptoms of China's demoralization, enfeeblement and impending ruin, which we felt almost a necessity if the view was correct about the opium habit. Have not these symptoms suddenly and with startling severity appeared in the collapse of China's army and navy during the shock of conflict with Japan? Opium is very largely used by Chinese soldiers." This is an instance of collapse in trial but there is another side to the matter. Often the test which comes is the test of opportunity. The chance is offered to the man to rise to some higher place or work than he has yet undertaken and his inherent and unsuspected weakness makes itself manifest in his failure to rise to the opportunity. Every evil life is hollow and unsubstantial, however cleverly its weakness is concealed, and by the test of resistance or prosperity that weakness is certain to be revealed.

An interesting table of statistics is given in the Voice showing the condition of the liquor business in this country. The United States issued last year permits to do business to over 232,000 liquor dealers. It is gratifying to note that for the past two years the number of dealers has decreased and that the amount of distilled liquors on which a tax was paid last year was considerably less than in 1894. The number of liquor sellers in prohibition States in proportion to the population is greater than in some States where high license prevails. For example, in North Dakota there is one dealer for 403 persons; in Massachusetts, one for 489. But the greatest success in reducing the traffic has been through local option, and this is most conspicuous in some of the Southern States. In Maine there is one liquor dealer for 579 persons, while in Mississippi there is one to 3,554. In Mississippi prohibition is more nearly maintained than in any other State in the Union. Arkansas comes next and Alabama third. These figures show that the temperance problem has been more nearly solved in several of the Southern States than in any other part of the country.

A FINISHED WORK.

Last Friday Dr. N. G. Clark closed his eyes on the record of a life singularly consistent and complete. As a teacher, preacher and missionary secretary he has made his influence felt throughout the world, always to advance the kingdom of Christ. In another column his close and lifelong friend has tenderly surveyed his career. We only add to it a grateful tribute to the memory of a good, great man.

Dr. Clark was a Christian statesman. He studied world movements with unfaltering faith and planted and fostered missions with a foresight whose wisdom has already been proved by their results. He worked for the spiritual renewal of nations, while, at the same time, he cultivated friendships with individual members of them and appreciated the inheritance and surroundings which distinguished them from other nations and gave them their peculiar value to the world as the possession of our Lord. No missionary secretary ever better understood the difficulties and opportunities of the missionaries with whom he was associated or showed more sympathetic appreciation of them. He made them all, and many native workers also, his personal friends. The spirit of Paul breathed in his epistles to them. The reverent affection with which we have heard him named often on mission fields gave him apostolic honor.

He cannot be more missed at home, but he will not be less missed there than abroad. Through important crises in the American Board during the last thirty years he has stood calm in faith, borne heavy burdens and given wise counsels. His papers presented at the annual meetings have shown his comprehensive view of the mission work and his readiness to meet new exigencies. Our editorial columns have often been enriched by his pen. Through the ten years of dissensions in the Board, now happily ended, he patiently, kindly, unwaveringly advocated the policy which he believed to be for the best interests of missions. The missionaries unfalteringly adhered to him, and it is a great satisfaction that he lived to see the views he held prevail and gain permanent acceptance among supporters of the Board. Through trying years he held the respect of all who knew him of opposing parties, and he leaves a united organization to cope with difficulties and perils which now have suddenly confronted it.

His presence in the Congregational House was always a benediction. His memory here will long remain fragrant. He is beloved in the churches far and wide. His influence in distant lands abides. He rests from his labors; his works follow with him.

A BETTER CHANCE FOR PRISONERS.

Beginning with 1896 Massachusetts enters upon a new policy regarding her State prison convicts, in which she has been anticipated by only six months by Illinois, but of which she is otherwise the pioneer in the Union. The Massachusetts law was enacted first, but Illinois made it take effect six months earlier. A radical departure is involved in this new system of dealing with the criminals in the State prison. The effort to build up character made in behalf of young men committed to the reformatory is extended to those who have committed more serious offenses, and if there is any foundation for a good character it is developed to the utmost. It is a policy which has a personal interest for thousands of men in the State who are still susceptible to hope of better things after they have committed a State's prison offense, and it is of large concern to the people of the State as a whole, because it extends the inspiration of hope and sympathy to a class which includes many believed to be beyond hope, and whom it is the policy of the State to hold in strict confinement.

The essential features of the new act, which has a national interest as being a new departure and different from the Illinois act, are that hereafter no persons are to be sentenced to the State prison (except for life and under the habitual criminals' act) for any definite term of years. There is a maximum for which the prisoner can be held, which is the maximum term allowed by the law for the offense for which he was committed, and the minimum shall not be less than two and a half years. The minimum is a trifle less than is possible to a short term prisoner, who has earned a diminution of sentence by good behavior in prison. For any term between these limits the prisoner may be held according to the judgment of the prison commissioners. The words of this interesting law, upon this point, are as follows:

> At any time after the expiration of the minimum term for which a convict may be held in the said prison under a sentence imposed as aforesaid, the commissioners of prisons may issue to him a permit to be at liberty therefrom upon such terms and conditions as they shall deem best, and they may revoke said permit at any time previous to the expiration of the maximum term for which he may be held under said sentence. No such permit shall be issued without the approval of the governor and council, nor unless said commissioners shall be of the opinion that the person to whom it is issued will lead an orderly life if set at liberty. The violation by the holder of a permit issued as aforesaid of any of the terms or conditions thereof or the violation of any law of this commonwealth shall of itself make void such permit.

A convict who has violated the terms of his permit may be returned to prison, and the time that he was out shall not be counted as a part of the time in serving the sentence.

This act may be of incalculable benefit to many men. It puts the State on a broad, generous and sympathetic ground and permits the exercise of discretion by the State authorities, which the tendency of the times will surely prove to be in the direction of mercy for the convict. In regard to a class of men hitherto held to be hardened and dangerous, the State has avowedly taken the position that their reformation is possible and that it will give them every reasonable opportunity to make the best of themselves. This act is a step further in the humane direction of the prison reforms of the age. It does not lay stress upon the idea of punishment as much as upon the idea of reform. It corrects the illogical position of the old law, namely, that it was within the power of the court, at the time of fixing the sentence, to determine when the convict was suitable for release. It leaves the decision of this question in the hands of the prison commissioners—their opinion to be ratified by the governor and council. It simply says to the convict, as illustrated in a paper prepared for the National Prison Congress of 1895 by Mr. Warren F. Spalding: "You must be sent to prison because you have violated a law of the State. When you will be released depends upon your fitness to be at large. The court has decided that you are fit to be sent to prison. It cannot tell when you will be fit to be at liberty."

In the case of the State prison convict, as in that of the inmate of a reformatory, great pressure is put upon the man to do the very best he can. Every effort of his to strengthen his will and stick to a decisive purpose to do right brings its manifest reward in the shortening of his sentence and in the increased confidence felt in him by the men who have in their hands his liberty to go out into the world again. A new element is brought into the government of the prison. There is not the certainty on the part of the convict that he will be released at the end of a given term, as hitherto (except as that term is the longest possible under the law), but if he convinces the authorities that it is safe for the community for him to be released, that he is able to support himself outside of prison, and that he is not likely to fall again, he may be set at liberty at any time after two and a half years. The difference in the tone of the prison must be wide under such a promise of speedy release. It is a safe prediction that in many instances convicts will keep their hold on ambition and outside activities, which they would drop in despair under the late system.

But the release is not of such a nature that the State loses its oversight of the man. The system proposed involves such an accounting by the released man to the prison authorities that they will know just how he is passing his time and whether he is keeping faithfully the terms of his release. The man knows that the eye of the State is still upon him. He is not in the world as if he had not been confined, as a criminal is who has been released in the old way at the expiration of a sentence. But the State insists upon knowing that he is doing the best he can, and this sense of responsibility will surely help to hold in check any desire the man might have to return to his former criminal life.

It is believed that this reform is upon a sound foundation and that the State will never return to the old system. Other States are expected to come up to this standard as it demonstrates its fitness to human nature and proves its fitness by its success. It shows the way in which the thought of experienced prison managers is tending, which is away from the hardening influences of former days and toward a brighter life for those who are willing to be men.

THE WORK BEFORE THE CHURCHES.

The new year opens with new opportunities and fresh hopes. Let us survey again the various activities of the local church with which we are in covenant. What are the aims of the organizations within it with which we are connected and what can we accomplish through them this year? The Sunday school, the Young People's Societies, the Men's Sunday Evening Club, the Mothers' Meeting, the King's Daughters, the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, the missionary bands—all the organizations within the church have a variety of objects. But they all, if they belong in the church, propose, by different ways, to promote one work, the bringing of souls into vital contact with Jesus Christ. Personal experience of union with him is the end of all Christian effort, and that experience sympathetically shared is the quickened spiritual life which makes a revival of religion.

Most of all things this is to be desired. To those who seek for it our Lord gives the most positive promises. Its rewards are the highest we can know. Its joys are the noblest. For one who loves Christ to see others discover and receive him as the Saviour from sin and the Lord of life, to see his disciples coming into new experiences of fellowship with him, is a foretaste of heaven. From many a pastor's study and many a brother's and sister's closet prayers are being offered that this boon may be bestowed. They will find expression in the prayer meeting and often the answer will then and there be given. The testimony of new personal experience of union with Christ is a sign of a revival begun. It is an evidence of the brooding presence of the Holy Spirit, which melts away indifference, kindles love and makes work to bring others to Christ natural and delightful.

These things help us to see how we may promote a revival. First, we ought to draw near to God in a deepened sense of our own unworthiness, of his abounding grace and of consecration to his service in bringing others to him. Then we shall find our own spiritual life further quickened by frank expression of our aspiration and experience to those most likely to sympathize with us. We may expect to learn new things in our communion with others who are finding their way to more intimate fellowship with our Lord; and we shall be wise if, instead of questioning their experience where it differs from ours, we seek to find in it new knowledge of the methods of his Spirit. Whoever permits us to share in his joy through his communion with Christ blesses us. When that joy is deep and constant in us we wish to impart it to others.

It is through the union in experience of those who have fellowship with Christ that religious interest spreads in a community. Where two or three are gathered together in his name because they love to speak of him, he is in the midst of them. Where that fire of love is kindled, its warmth and light draw others. We believe it is better that special meetings should spring from such quickening among a few who have made known their feelings to one another than that meetings should be called to create such feelings. But the spiritual vitality is imparted to every one who seeks it. "If ye abide in me," Jesus said, "and my words abide in you, ask whatsoever ye will, and it shall be done unto you." We understand him to mean that if we follow his directions we may gain any degree of intimacy with and likeness to him that we shall desire.

The responsibility of each Christian, then, in his own church at this season, when new beginnings are made, is great, and so is his opportunity. The pastor, the layman longing for a revival will seek those who are likeminded with them, will study with sympathy the ways in which their brethren are finding closer fellowship with Christ, and will give freely and wisely the testimony of their experience to others. New experiences told among Christians never fail to kindle new life. Through them the Holy Spirit will come with welcome power this first month of the year into many a church, making it throb with love and hope and blessing the community in which it is placed. May the number be multiplied to whom through such blessing this year shall be above all others a Happy New Year.

EXPECTING RESULTS FROM PRAYER.

This topic is specially appropriate just now. With the opening year we naturally look forward and consider what we chiefly need and ought to ask for of our Heavenly Father. Most of us doubtless have resolved that prayer shall mean more to us henceforth than in the past. We believe in prayer. It is not a vain thing to us. We know that it accomplishes results. For what results may we look from it?

The answer depends largely on how we pray. God bids us come to him in a certain spirit. We are to come humbly, appreciating our own unworthiness and his holiness; reverently, accepting his will as wiser and better than our own; penitently, mourning the sins which have grieved him; trustingly, assured that he will not refuse to hear and answer; boldly, because he has bidden us come; persistently, not as if we could weary him into answering or as if we could dictate to him, but in evidence of our earnestness.

Approaching him thus, we may plead his promises to heed our petitions. He has made them voluntarily and repeatedly. He has delighted to reveal himself as our Father, and we know that parental love finds it pleasurable, not irksome, to do for children what they wish, whenever it is best. His word and his nature are pledged to welcome the prayers which we offer. Moreover, we cannot ask anything which is too hard for him to accomplish for us.

Yet we get the best results when we are willing just to tell him what we want and to leave ourselves in his hands. "He gave them their desires," says the inspired record of some who prayed in the wrong spirit, but it adds "he sent leanness into their hearts." It had been better for them not to have had their prayers granted. We may pray for anything and everything which we desire, but the spirit of true prayer always is that which says "Not my will, but thine, be done."

Of one thing we may be certain. Prayer for spiritual guidance and help never fails. Other prayers may seem to go unheard because to grant them often would injure more than bless us. But prayer for the soul's health and prosperity, for likeness to Jesus Christ and sympathy with his people and his work, must be right and will be granted.

These trying times for missions at home and abroad are bringing to those engaged in them a stronger faith and a deeper spiritual life which, we trust, will be imparted to all the churches. To those who would share more largely in the gifts of the Holy Spirit, we suggest the careful reading of the January numbers of the Home Missionary and the Missionary Herald.

THE WEEK IN REVIEW.

Gilt-Edged Investments.

In compliance with the necessities of the situation, and recognizing clearly that naught was to be expected from this Congress, President Cleveland has issued a call for bids for $100,000,000 United States bonds, four per cent, coupon or registered, in denominations of $50 or multiples of that sum, to be paid for in gold coin or gold certificates, the Government guaranteeing interest and the principal in thirty years, its payments being in coin. It is to be hoped that this proposed loan will be more popular than the last one the Administration tried to place without the aid of a syndicate. The very just criticism, in and out of Congress, of secret bond sales to syndicates doubtless compelled the Administration to resort to this method. If successful it means the saving of several millions to the tax-payers, but its success depends upon the patriotism of the banks and the capitalists who hoard gold. National self-respect is not increased by such transactions as the last bond sale, and it would be infinitely better for the nation and the Treasury if we could create a sentiment among the masses similar to that which actuates the French people who absorb their great national loans with the greatest avidity. President Cleveland deserves credit for his resolute adherence to the determination to maintain the gold reserve, but all who prevent him from doing it in less costly, more sensible ways deserve the severest condemnation. Our national fiscal policy is a national disgrace.

The Crime of 1895.

Thanks to the enterprise of The Chicago Tribune the following statistics are available: Embezzlements and stealings in the United States for the year amounted to $10,423,205 instead of $25,234,120 in 1894. There has been a slight decrease also in the number of persons who have been lynched, only 171—ten of them women—having suffered in this way instead of the 194 who were executed without a trial the year before. Twenty five of these lynchings took place in the North, seven in Colorado, seven in California, two in Illinois and two in Kansas. One hundred and twenty one thus put to death were Negroes, and nine of this number women. Suicides have increased alarmingly. In 1895 there were 5,759; in 1894, 4,912; in 1893, 4,436; in 1892, 3,860; in 1891, 3,331; in 1890, 2,040. The old ratio of nearly four men to one woman continues to hold good, there being 4,300 of the former and 1,459 of the latter. The report as to murders is still more alarming. Of these there were in 1895, 10,500; in 1894, 9,800; in 1893, 6,615; in 1892, 6,794; in 1891, 5,906; in 1890, 4,290. Evidently there must be something wrong in our administration of justice to account for the doubling of the number of murders in the short space of five years.

The Distribution of Wealth.

Few dispute that man has discovered ways and means of adding immensely to the material wealth of society. It is also generally assumed that the problem of society today is not how to create wealth but how to distribute it more equably. This implies that under the present system it is not distributed equably and assertions denying anything approaching an equable division are rife. To all interested in this question the document just issued by the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics will come as an authoritative compendium of evidence drawn from the probate records of one of the oldest, best governed and most highly developed of the American commonwealths. In it he will find statistics and generalizations based on those statistics for four distinctly marked periods in the State's industrial development, viz., the years 1829–31, 1859–61, 1879–81 and 1889–91. These statistics do not show that the rich are growing richer or the poor poorer. They indicate rather that the number of well-to-do is constantly increasing, that the average size of the estates left by individuals now is twice what it was in 1830. Annual reports just issued by Massachusetts and Connecticut also confirm the opinion that New England folk are as thrifty as ever, notwithstanding the changes in the population. The net deposits in the savings banks of Massachusetts increased $6,458,683 and those of Connecticut $6,230,265 during the past year, and the 119 co-operative banks in Massachusetts increased their assets $1,940,000 during the same period.

The Venezuela Commission, and the Controversy with Great Britain.

The President has selected as members of the commission, charged with the responsibility of ascertaining the true boundary line between Venezuela and British Guiana, Justice D. J. Brewer of the United States Supreme Court (a Congregationalist), R. H. Alvey, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, Hon. Andrew D. White, formerly president of Cornell University and United States minister to Germany and Russia, President D. C. Gilman of Johns Hopkins University and Mr. F. R. Coudert of New York city, one of the leading lawyers of that city and this country. Four of these commissioners met at the State Department Jan. 4, selected Justice Brewer as president and began to prepare for their important labors. The character and ability of these men are such that their appointment has given satisfaction at home and called forth comparatively slight criticism abroad. If they can attain to that degree of impartiality and separation from the influence of our State Department which the latter is said to desire, their verdict will have as much weight with Great Britain as it is possible for a commission thus constituted to have. The New York Chamber of Commerce, at the suggestion of Hon. Carl Schurz, put itself on record last week as favoring the creation of a joint American-British commission, and the London Times has commented favorably upon the scheme, but it is not probable that anything will come of it.

At home there have been few new developments. Senator Lodge of Massachusetts has given in the Senate an elaborate and forcible statement of the case of the United States, which reveals how enthusiastically he supports the Administration. Bills introduced in Congress, both by their number and the amount of appropriations they call for, indicate the determination of legislators to add to the defensive and offensive strength of the United States army, navy and coast defenses. Senator Lodge has gone so far as to introduce a bill creating a reserve militia and the establishment of a system of conscription and universal military duty. Resolutions heartily indorsing the Monroe Doctrine have been introduced in the legislatures of Massachusetts and New York.

In England there has been a marked change of base, chiefly owing to the enterprise and influence of the London Chronicle, which deserves the highest praise for the work it has done in hastening a peaceful solution of the issue. From the first its editorials have all been for peace. They have insisted that war was not to be thought of for a moment. They have asserted that arbitration never should have been refused by Lord Salisbury. But since Mr. Henry Norman, their correspondent, began to send from Washington news of the most sensational character, exposing the weakness of Lord Salisbury's case, the presence in Washington of documents proving incontestably that Lord Aberdeen once conceded that the Schomburgk line was not definitely marked or to be insisted upon as the British boundary, that Lord Granville once agreed to submit the whole matter to arbitration, and testifying to the real sentiment of the American people and the depth of their feeling, the Chronicle has been in a position to speak with authority and insist that the British public must revise its opinion, consent to consider the matter dispassionately, and, if necessary, condemn a foreign office that led it into a contention with the republic which never should have arisen. Some of the Chronicle's contemporaries have been manly enough to recognize the significance of its news from Washington, and have agreed substantially with the Chronicle's comments upon it. The Times even admits that concessions must be made. Henry Labouchere in Truth is doing much to strengthen the American contention, and Henry M. Stanley and Conan Doyle have written manly letters to the press urging calm, friendly consideration of our case. Moreover, the South African imbroglio, the revelations of continental hatred of Great Britain are having their effect and making it most politic for Salisbury to make concessions.

Great Britain, the Transvaal Republic and Germany.

Great Britain and Germany are seething with a war spirit which is far more ominous and much nearer the breaking point than anything witnessed a fortnight ago either in England or this country. Great Britain has seen the emperor of Germany glorying in the defeat and death of British subjects and listened to his denial of her rights as a suzerain over the Transvaal republic. She has been told practically by William that if Great Britain attempts to destroy the autonomy of the Transvaal she must reckon on the forcible interference of Germany, France and the other Powers who covet African territory and dislike British success. Such is the British interpretation of the message sent by Emperor William to the president of the Transvaal after the Boer troops had met, defeated and captured the British subjects led by Dr. Jamieson. The filibustering expedition led by the latter, which started to capture Johannesburg and apparently hoped to overturn Dutch authority in the Transvaal which Great Britain guaranteed by treaty in 1884, if it had succeeded probably would have gone down in history as a gallant affair, but whether it would not have brought on a much larger conflict between Great Britain and her European enemies is scarcely an open question. But, failing woefully, it has compelled Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, the colonial secretary, to deal summarily with Sir Cecil Rhodes, who undoubtedly inspired Jamieson's expedition, to deny all responsibility for the invasion, and assert unequivocally the intention of the British Government to stand by its guarantees to the Transvaal republic even to the extent of using British troops to suppress the revolt and plottings of the British and American "Uitlanders" attracted thither by the salubrious climate and the marvelous gold deposits of the Rand district. The seriousness of the situation, both in the Transvaal and in Great Britain, can scarcely be overestimated. It is not likely that the entirely reasonable chafing of the Uitlanders against some of their disabilities as inhabitants of a Dutch republic will cease. Sir Cecil Rhodes is not the man to submit tamely to such a humiliation as Mr. Chamberlain has put upon him, and in Great Britain the mixed emotions caused by seeing British subjects defeated by Dutch burghers, by having a characteristic scheme of land grabbing exposed at a most inopportune time, and by the hateful comments of the European press are fast driving John Bull into a state of wrath.

Turkey, Armenia and the United States.

We publish elsewhere selections from the British Nonconformist press, and William Watson's awful indictment of Great Britain —all revealing how the best sentiment of Great Britain cringes at the position in which that Christian nation is now. Of course just as Washington for a time overshadowed Constantinople so Pretoria now overshadows Washington, and a Power that has quarrels with the United States and Germany to settle cannot be counted upon to reopen the Eastern question, not even to save its good name, not to speak of Armenia. Lord Rosebery's sarcastic, sneering comments on Lord Salisbury's policy in the East indicate that perhaps with a new ministry, and the Liberals once more in power, a bolder face toward Turkey might be assumed.

Meanwhile in Armenia the massacres continue, and if perchance any escape the sword they then perish from hunger and cold. The Porte has so far relented as to consent that the American missionaries in Harpoot can distribute relief funds without the participation of Turkish relief commissioners. It also has yielded to the Powers and agreed to permit their intervention in behalf of the inhabitants of Zeitoun, and promised to abide by their verdict. This concession, it is to be hoped, will prevent a general massacre of those brave Armenian mountaineers who have withstood the Turk. The Porte also has issued orders nominally forbidding the forced conversions of Christians to the Mohammedan faith.

Miss Clara Barton has spoken in several American cities pleading the cause of the American Red Cross Society, and meetings of citizens in Boston, New Haven, Worcester, Springfield, Chicago and other cities during the past week have resulted in gifts to the cause, in plans for systematically collecting funds, in expressions of popular indignation and sympathy, and a very general desire to see Congress and the Administration do all it can to lend moral support to any European Power that will live up to its treaty obligations toward Armenia. On this phase of the subject we comment elsewhere. As we go to press it is asserted that vessels from the North Atlantic fleet are soon to be detached from it and sent to give new emphasis to the demands of our State Department for immediate reparation for losses of property and indignities offered to American citizens.

Chinese Concessions.

The New York World hears the welcome news that the American Commission, which set out last summer to visit Chengtu to inquire into the anti-foreign riots and the destruction of mission property in the Sechuen province last May, has achieved marked success. France promptly demanded and received a large sum as an indemnity for the injury done to the Catholic missions. Great Britain compelled the degradation of the viceroy, who was responsible for the riots. The United States determined to investigate and then make its demands. It forced the Chinese authorities to consent to the commission and give it escort throughout the long journey inland. The journey itself has done much to establish American prestige in the interior, and the commissioners are now said to have forced the Chinese officials to settle satisfactorily all the claims of the Methodist missionaries, and missionaries and commissioners were banqueted by the Chinese officials.

NOTES.

The revolutionists of Cuba are burning and ravaging property in the richest of the provinces, and have advanced so near to Havana and so demoralized the Spanish forces that the end—and victory—seems to be very near.

The resignation of seven of the members of the present Conservative ministry in Canada has thrown down the Bowell régime, and is ominous of a Liberal victory in the approaching elections. Coercion or non-coercion of Manitoba will be the crucial question for the electors to pass upon.

Alfred Austin, by the will of Lord Salisbury and the grace of Queen Victoria, succeeds Alfred Tennyson as poet laureate of England. He is an editorial writer on a Tory paper and a critic and verse-maker of some local fame. Sir Frederick Leighton's elevation to the peerage is much more satisfactory to the critics.

Governor Levi P. Morton of New York is a candidate for the Republican nomination for the presidency. Back of him stand, with more or less loyalty, the party leaders of the Empire State. This announcement compels a readjustment of the pieces on the chessboard, and lessens the chances of Mr. Reed.

The ceremonies performed and the words spoken in the cathedral at Baltimore last Sunday completed—so far as it can be done in this country—the act of elevating Mgr. Satolli from the rank of titular Archbishop of Lepanto and papal ablegate to the United States to that of a member of the College of Cardinals.

Denmark is said to be willing to sell her West Indian possessions, the islands of St. Croix, St. John and St. Thomas, and Senator Lodge of Massachusetts, ever alert to such intimations, has succeeded in having the matter brought to the attention of the foreign relations committee of the Senate. We need coaling stations for our navy even if we never go to war.

The decision of the Massachusetts State Railroad Commission in favor of The Standard of Boston is a most just verdict. When the long-established newspapers of Boston form a league, conspire to prevent new rivals from gaining a foothold, and attempt to dictate to the railroads what duties as common carriers they shall and shall not execute, it is well that the cause of free speech has some such court of last resort as the Railroad Commission to fly to for relief. The Standard is a safety valve and should be kept open.

Utah entered the Union at 10 A. M., Jan. 4, by proclamation of the President, all forms of law having been complied with. Perfect tolerance of religious sentiment is embodied in the organic law of the new State and polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited. The Mormon hierarchy probably will control the politics of the State and name at least one of the two senators who will soon enter the Senate to swell the ranks of those who just now are the most obstructive force resisting a sane, national fiscal policy.

IN BRIEF.

Miss Frances E. Willard repudiates all connection with or responsibility for the Woman's Bible. 'Tis well.

And now, according to The Churchman, the Protestant Episcopal Church is "the Anglo-Saxon Church in this country"!! What were the Pilgrims? Celts?

Rev. Dr. Alexander Whyte of Edinburgh says that those preachers who have selected texts out of the Old Testament narrative of Samson's history and suspended excellent New Testament sermons on them hang "great weights on small wires."

The North American Review has done a late act of justice in publishing an able article by Dr. Judson Smith setting forth the facts concerning foreign missions. The motto of the Review declares that it favors neither side more than the other on great questions of public interest, but in this instance it has so far given the largest space to opponents of missions.

A mother and son appeared in an East Boston court a fortnight ago, the son charged with theft. The trial was postponed and the boy released on his mother's pledge that she would produce him. She did not do so, but sent him to Nova Scotia. Last week she was sentenced to jail for contempt of court, going gladly. "I could not bear to see my boy in jail," she said. This is an interesting case from many points of view.

The Independent, besides publishing reports of the progress of the last year from all the larger Christian denominations, has an extended table of religious statistics. The totals show that in the United States the net gains in communicants since 1890 are more than three and a half millions, and that church membership is increasing faster than the population. More than ten new churches are formed every day. So far as figures can show these facts are very encouraging.

This is a record-breaking year so far for Year-Book statistics. Secretary Hazen's surprise and pleasure at receiving, Jan. 4, the first local conference report with the figures of every church was only equaled by his disappointment to learn the other day that one scribe had not as yet heard from any of the churches for which he is held accountable. The scribe who deserves credit for unprecedented promptness is Rev. N. T. Dyer of the Mendon Conference.

Letters signed by prominent men in each denomination in Massachusetts have been sent to churches throughout the State inviting the active co-operation of all evangelical Sunday schools in the work of the Interdenominational Sunday School Association. This organization is doing excellent service in bringing the Sunday schools to a higher standard and in promoting the study of the Bible. Its institutes and conventions are well attended and well worth attending. It deserves the hearty support of all our churches.

Union Theological Seminary, New York, began last Monday evening a course of lectures on Practical Religion, the opening lecture being given by Mr. D. L. Moody on How to Reach Non-Church-Goers. Another course is to begin next week on Church Unity. Among the lecturers announced are Presidents Andrews of Brown and Gilman of Johns Hopkins, Bishops Potter and Hurst and Dr. Gunsaulus. Tickets for these courses may be had free of charge, thus doing a very valuable service not only to the students but to the public.

When is war justifiable? That is a practical question now, which many Christian patriots are seriously asking. It is doubtful whether a better answer will ever be given than that set forth by Hon. Carl Schurz in his address last week before the New York Chamber of Commerce. He said:

No war is justifiable the cause of which does not stand in just proportion to its cost in blood, in financial demoralization, in social demoralization and in relapse of civilization, and even then it is not justifiable until all the resources of statesmanship by which it might be avoided are exhausted.

The two Boston members of the Japan deputation of the American Board, Sec. J. L. Barton and Hon. W. P. Ellison, arrived in this city last Thursday and were warmly welcomed. The official report of the deputation will be rendered to the Prudential Committee within a fortnight. There is a great desire among the churches to receive through these brethren the freshest tidings from Japan and invitations to speak are already pouring in upon Dr. Barton. One of his first appointments is at the new Congregational enterprise in Brookline, where he will be heard next Sunday at 4 P. M.

The Japanese Buddhists, it is said, are imitating Christians in organized efforts to extend their religion. They have started Young People's Societies of Buddhist Endeavor, Young Men's Buddhist Associations, etc. Perhaps they will learn how little value there is in machinery without the living spirit within the wheels. If they recognize the vital need and seek to introduce the Spirit of Christ into their societies, they will furnish a remarkable instance of organization preceding life.

Several English newspapers have recently spoken with hearty interest of The Congregationalist's pilgrimage next summer. The Dean of Westminster Abbey has written expressing his willingness to do anything in his power to welcome American Congregationalists. Abundant assurances are coming to us from other cities and towns included in our itinerary offering courtesies and facilities for seeing cathedrals and other objects of interest. That this pilgrimage will be an event attracting wide attention there can be no doubt. The little book describing in detail the plan of the pilgrimage is now in press.

The London Nonconformist Council cabled to Dr. Lyman Abbott last week the following message:

London Nonconformist Council send greetings to churches of America, and assurances that the two nations are one and undivisible.

Dr. Abbott, in a note accompanying this, which he sent to the New York Evening Post, interpreted it as representing the sentiment of the Independent or Congregational churches of Great Britain. This is both too small and too large a statement of its import. It represents the sentiment of the evangelical Dissenters of London, and as such has much significance.

Dr. Mary P. Eddy of Beirut has had remarkable success as a physician in the Lebanon district of Syria, and told to members of The Congregationalist's Oriental party last spring some thrilling accounts of her experiences in the mountains. In a letter to the Presbyterian, she says that Turkish troops now occupy all the chief points in Syria, and in many places the inhabitants are panic-stricken. Travel is impossible, as the animals on the road are immediately impressed into carrying ammunition and government supplies. Plans for visiting the country districts of Palestine and Syria must evidently be postponed till present troubles are ended.

They loved Dr. N. G. Clark in Japan. Secretary Barton, as soon as he arrived in Boston from Japan, last week went out to see his beloved predecessor and convey to him the messages of affection sent from the missionaries and native Christians of Japan, and he took with him an elegant silk robe, the handiwork of Japanese Christian women, which they had sent to Dr. Clark with the request that he sit with his robe on for a photograph and send it to them. But it was not to be. Dr. Clark, though still living, was past the point of understanding or appreciating any such beautiful messages as Secretary Barton was coveting the opportunity of delivering.

The author of The Bonnie Brier Bush can hardly be accused of narrowness or of insisting that the salvation of the world depends upon the success of any given denomination. His words at a recent meeting in London to advocate Presbyterian church extension are all the more suggestive and weighty: "The best service," said he, "any man can render to Christianity is to see that the work of his own denomination is well organized and effectively carried out." These are strong words, indeed, but he who takes exception to them must prove, to his own satisfaction at least, if not to that of others, that he can accomplish more for Christ in novel and unconventional ways than through the time-honored and regular channels of service.

Novelties are all right, to be sure, but how quickly the appetite is apt to become satiated, especially when they cease to become novelties after twenty-four hours or at the expiration of a week. We can thoroughly understand the temper of the pastor who told us the other day that he was putting more time into sermons and study and less in "hustling." The reasons which he assigned were, first, his own present and future usefulness, and, second, that an experience of four years had shown him that innovations quickly become monotonous and hence ineffective. And he added, with a twinkle in his eye, "I am now going to try the effect of the novelty of monotony." Success to you, brother, as you try to put in operation this old but sensible policy!

Is it not somewhat significant that Prof. F. G. Peabody of Harvard University asked the students and instructors of that institution on Forefathers' Day if it was not time to face the perils of "the 'soft church'—the unvertebrated creed, the molluscous liberalism which consents to any faith because all faith seems to be unreal? The 'soft church' is not promoting free thought, but free thoughtlessness; it stands not for liberty, but for license. It is often very broad, but it is always very thin." Prof. G. Adam Smith recently addressed the students of one of the Scotch universities, and in a most interesting comparison of the characters of Thomas Carlyle and the prophet Amos asserted that the world needed men like them today—"the world which, if it is broader and less selfish than it used to be, is looser, too.

Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith recently spread abroad in the daily papers a severe indictment against American missionaries in Turkey for incapacity and mischief-making generally. In his opinion most of the present troubles in that country were caused by their meddling. These charges, so far as representatives of the American Board are concerned, having been shown to be ridiculous, Mr. Smith announced that "in nearly every case the Armenian agitators are shown to have been pupils of the Methodist missions." Pres. W. F. Warren, in a note to the Boston Herald, which published Smith's tirade, called attention to the fact that there are no Methodist missions in Turkey. Mr. Smith's last remark on this subject, so far as we have learned, was that "those —— Baptist missionaries have caused all the trouble." There are just as many Baptist as Methodist missions in Turkey. But in this case there would seem to be little use in answering a fool according to his folly, or in answering him at all.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM NEW YORK.

A Learned Company.

The American Society of Church History held its eighth annual meeting in Columbia College, Dec. 27 and 28. Bishop Hurst of Washington, D. C., presided. The members in attendance, representing many of the foremost literary institutions of the country, were recognized experts in the various departments of the wide range of study for the prosecution of which the society exists. Among the learned papers read and discussed were: History of Theological Propædutics, by Rev. W. Laidlaw of New York; Archæology of the Mode of Baptism, by Dr. Warfield of Princeton; the Synod of the South, by Dr. J. C. Johnson of Virginia; Jonathan Edwards's Of Being, by Prof. Egbert C. Smyth of Andover; The Crusades, by Dr. J. M. Ludlow; St. Augustine on the Inspiration of the Bible, by Dr. John Nicum of Rochester; Harnack's Theory of the Rise of the New Testament Canon, by G. H. Ferris, senior, in Union Theological Seminary. The next meeting is to be held in Boston, in December, 1896. Prof. G. P. Fisher of Yale was elected president and Dr. S. M. Jackson secretary. A dozen or more church histories of the principal denominations have already been completed by members of the society, and others are in process.

Forefathers' Day.

The genuine Yankees, both of New York and Brooklyn, remembered well to celebrate the landing of the Pilgrims, though, as usual, they could not agree upon the day. The Brooklynites ate their dinner and made their speeches on the 21st. President Woodford, Editor McKelway, Charles Emory Smith, Dr. Gregg, Prof. Homer B. Sprague, Mayors Schieren and Wurster did most of the (loud) talking; and those who did not know before, or had forgotten, went home fully aware of what were the chief characteristics of New England's forefathers and foremothers.

On the New York side of the river the gathering was on the 23d—the 22d, New York's day, falling on Sunday. It was the ninetieth meeting in the New England Society's series. The speakers were Elihu Root, Dr. H. J. Van Dyke, President Hill of Rochester University, Senator J. T. Morgan, John K. Bangs, Joseph H. Choate and A. F. Jenks. Naturally there was more fun in the New York speeches, but they fell not a whit behind their brethren across the bridge in sincere honor of the incomparable worthies whose characters and deeds they met to commemorate.

Peaceful Counsels.

Whatever may be the case elsewhere, the subsidence of the war spirit in this city is daily increasing in rapidity and in width of reach. At its monthly meeting on Thursday the Chamber of Commerce vigorously took up the Venezuelian snarl and, in a sensible report from its committee on foreign commerce, showed how easily and honorably it ought to be and can be unraveled.

Addresses were made by Mr. F. B. Thurber, chairman of the committee, Hon. Carl Shurz, H. M. Tabor, Charles Stewart Smith, F. C. Moore, A. F. Higgins and G. W. Smith, and a resolution was unanimously passed, urging upon our own Government and that of England the settlement of the dispute by arbitration—"so often found to be a sufficient and satisfactory mode of settling international disputes, and to which both governments stand committed by profession, precedent and the humanitarian spirit of the age." The report with great force brought out the fact that about eighty cases of international dispute have been so settled in the present century, of which settlements more than half have been brought about by the intervention of our own country, "the peace nation of the world."

Brooklyn Matters.

The "Pilgrims" of Worcester have done a capital thing for themselves in securing as their pastor Rev. Alexander Lewis, Ph. D., but a hard thing for our New England Church, East Brooklyn, which he has served for nearly five years with singular devotion and success. He took it when its finances were low and its people depressed, has carried it through the burning of its house of worship, has nearly trebled its membership, greatly enlarged its Sunday school, increased the contributions, engaged all the membership in personal work, and won for himself the love and confidence of the entire congregation and of the ministerial brotherhood of this vicinity. He is admirably adapted to the style of work carried on in the church to which he goes, but he is greatly needed here.

Brooklyn's Institute of Arts and Sciences is starting the third building for its museum, and by far the most costly and commodious it has occupied. The formal laying of the corner stone was by Mayor Schieren, with prayer by Rev. C. R. Baker, an ode by Dr. Chadwick, and addresses by A. A. Healey, Esq., president of the trustees, Dr. Storrs, Professor Hooper, St. Clair McKelway and President Seth Low. The corner stone of the original building was laid by General Lafayette on the Fourth of July, 1825.

Rev. A. F. Newton, pastor of the Rochester Avenue Church, reports a good work going on in that church through the whole year, including the vacation season. No special evangelistic meetings have been held nor extraordinary measures used, but the aim has been to preach the simple gospel, in reliance on the converting power of the Holy Spirit, and at every meeting inviting those specially interested to confer with the pastor and church committee. There have been responses every week. In 1895 fifty-nine new members were received, and several are to come at the January communion.

New York Pilgrims.

Eighteen persons have been voted into membership in the Pilgrim Church (Dr. Virgin's) to come on the first Sunday of the year. Seven are admitted on confession of faith, one of them being a Chinese convert, a large class of whom are cherished by the Pilgrim Sunday School and church.

Welcome Home.

Dr. A. H. Bradford reached his Montclair home on the last night of the old year in good health and buoyant spirits, well assured that the work of the Japan deputation will be greatly helpful to the American Board. He and his wife held a crowded reception in their home on New Year's, where they were warmly congratulated by their loving people. It is easy to see that this large-hearted congregation will profit not less than will "the Board" by the generous loan of its pastor for so important a service.

The Old Year and the New.

Those who like to see the old year go out and the new one come in with noise and uproar had their fill of it here on New Year's eve. Hundreds of a different spirit gathered in many churches of both cities and welcomed 1896 with prayer and sacred song and helpful Christian conference. There were others, aged sojourners, to whom the new year's opening day was precious for its rare, quiet home enjoyment together, and the long evening took on a peculiar sacredness as, before a glowing open fire, they read the experience of devout souls, inspired and uninspired, talked of past years, recalled the blessed friendships of loved ones now with God, and looked hopefully forward to the time not far away when they should be walking hand in hand with those dear ones gone before. Shall it be before another new year dawns? As God wills.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

The Chicago Training School.

Dec. 20 there was dedicated, on Indiana Avenue and Fiftieth Street, a beautiful and commodious building to the service of training young women as home and foreign missionaries. The land, the gift of Mr. N. W. Harris, is estimated at $20,000 and the structure, which has cost about $30,000, has been provided for by gifts from other sources. This is an outgrowth of the establishment for deaconesses on the North Side long under the care of Mrs. Lucy Rider Meyer, who, dissatisfied with the opportunities for usefulness which her deaconess work afforded, could not rest till she had increased them by training persons for service in the mission field. The new home will accommodate 160 guests and leave the North Side home free for deaconesses. Instruction will be without cost and the instructors even will receive no pay for their services. Methodists rank this work, which has been so persistently pushed forward by Mrs. Meyer, with the work of the Book Concern and the Northwestern University. Its value is recognized, not by Chicago Methodists alone, but by the Rock River Conference and even by the General Conference. Applicants for admission need not be members of the Methodist Church.

An Uncommonly Inspiriting Address.

The Ministers' Meeting last Monday was a fresh illustration of the value which comes to ministers from listening to an expert. Professor Tomlins, famous as a teacher of music, especially to children, and as the leader of the Apollo Club, gave an address which stirred every heart and excited the desire in every one present to become a musician himself. Professor Tomlins has never been in favor of mere hired musicians for church service, but has always asserted that any congregation can sing if it is willing to make the effort, and that it is better that a man who puts his heart into what he sings should lead the service of song than that a precentor or a choir be hired to do it perfunctorily.

Dr. Pearsons and the Colleges.

No man takes a keener delight in the efforts of various colleges to meet the conditions upon which his generous gifts become available than Dr. Pearsons. No man is readier than he to aid these colleges to comply with these conditions. It is for this reason that he has forwarded $25,000 to the treasurer of Whitman College, and generously extended the time until May 1, in order that the remaining endowment may be secured. He has also gone beyond his promise and sent $25,000 to the treasurer of Mount Holyoke College, and at the same time is doing his best to stimulate its agents to more earnest efforts to obtain the sum still needed to secure the $50,000 promised. Word has come that Drury will soon be able to show that she has complied with the conditions imposed, and Dr. Pearsons is ready with money which will put that institution on its feet and render it a power of untold good in the Southwest. It is only when one meets brethren from this region that one realizes how isolated Congregationalists in the Southwest are and how grateful to them are the sympathy and appreciation of their brethren in centers like Boston and Chicago. St. Louis has been the backbone of the Drury enterprise, and the success of her churches and their interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of man ought to be universally recognized. The grand leadership of such men as Drs. Goodell and Stimson of the Pilgrim Church is worthily continued in Dr. Burnham and the noble band of laymen who hold up his hands and encourage him in his work.

Ministerial Changes.

The removal of Rev. Dr. A. L. Smalley from Englewood to Jamestown, N. Y., deprives us of a genial companion and an able minister. He leaves Pilgrim Church, one of the strongest among our suburban churches. The congregation is intelligent and appreciative. The brethren here universally regret Dr. Smalley's departure and only trust that the field he leaves vacant may be cultivated by a man as earnest and faithful as he. In contrast to these changes it is pleasant to consider the permanency of the pastorate in some of our best churches, like the First and the Union Park.

New Year's Day Dr. Noble's people employed in calling upon him, not only as an expression of social courtesy but of the joy they have had in his many years of service, and of the hope that nothing may occur to bring these services to an end. The ladies of the First Church made elaborate preparation for a New Year's reception for Dr. Goodwin. Everything was delightfully informal but extremely hearty and in exquisite taste. Opportunity was taken of the New Year to express the love which the people have for the man who has been with them since January, 1868, by a gift of a full set of Doulton china, accompanied by words which only such long and tender relations can draw forth. Dr. Goodwin has been blessed from the beginning with a large body of earnest and loyal supporters, men and women who believe in the gospel and in its power to meet every want both of the individual and of society, and who by their gifts have laid the foundations of scores of churches in different sections of the city, and at the same time have gladdened the hearts of our missionaries the world over.

If it has been somewhat difficult in these days of change to keep the congregation up to its old high watermark, there has been no diminution in the zeal with which the church work has been carried on. The young people are taking special interest just now in the Sunday evening services, and through the announcing of the topics and by means of an attractive musical program and a thorough canvass of the region near the church are increasing the attendance considerably. One of the peculiarities of these evening congregations is the fact that they are composed almost entirely of strangers. It is delightful to know that Dr. Goodwin preaches with even more than his youthful vigor, and with a richness of spiritual experience which only his long years of service can furnish. The seats have been free for three years. The income secured is larger than under the old method of pew renting. Bills are promptly paid and deficiencies never allowed to accumulate. It is one of the surprises in church financiering that this church, in spite of the immense number of removals year by year, still manages to end each year without owing any man anything.

City Officials and the Civic Federation.

There is no denying the existence of considerable feeling on the part of city officials against the officers of the Civic Federation. Perhaps the latter have not been altogether wise in the criticisms they have made or in the methods they have pursued. Possibly they have shown something of that love of power which usually characterizes politicians. Still the public has faith in civil service and is determined that the spoils system shall die. It was in the highest degree unfortunate that President Baker should attack Mayor Swift at the banquet of the Commercial Club, where both were guests and where at the request of the members of the club the mayor made a statement of the financial condition and needs of the city. Mr. Baker declared that more men were employed than were needed, that the different departments were extravagantly managed, that salaries, even of policemen, were too high, in fact, that nearly everything connected with the business of the city was wrongly managed.

Mayor Swift was on his feet in a moment to deny every charge that had been made and to assert that the difficulty was not in the management of the finances by the present executive officers, but in the Common Council chosen by those before him, and in the refusal of business men of the first order to serve the city as aldermen. Men were named who the mayor said could help him were they in the council and prevent the passing of measures over his veto designed to injure the city and rob it of its proper income. Many business men have since been seen who declare that while it is impossible for them with all their present responsibilities to give the city the attention its interests demand, there are men who have both the integrity and the willingness to make the council what it should be. Out of this somewhat heated discussion and possibly uncalled-for attack on the mayor, whose ability and honesty are unquestioned, great good may come.

New Year's Calls.

The old custom of receiving and making calls on New Year's Day seems to be reviving. A great many young ladies received and a very large number of young men availed themselves of the opportunity to pay them their respects. At the central department of the Y. M. C. A., as well as at the North and West Side branches, representative matrons and many charming young ladies welcomed all the young men who called. Of these there were thousands. At the Art Institute the Antiquarians, in accordance with their custom, received their friends and showed them the remarkable tapestries loaned them by Mr. Charles M. Ffoulkes of Washington, D. C. There are forty one pieces of tapestry arranged according to subjects. For a few days the public will have the privilege of seeing them. At the same place the pictures of Mr. Robert W. Vonnoh, including some never before seen in this country, were on exhibition. Mrs. Dr. Sarah H. Stevenson threw open her office for the benefit of the suffering Armenians. Word was given out that while nothing would be asked anything would be received. In consequence the gifts were considerable. The office had been transformed into an Oriental parlor. Sunday there will be a public meeting in Central Music Hall, to arouse interest in the Armenians, over which Mayor Swift will preside. Arrangements have already been made to secure funds for the Red Cross Society, and under the inspiration of Miss Barton's presence, who is now in the city, it is hoped that a large sum may be obtained.

Convocation of the University of Chicago.

The thirteenth convocation took place at the Auditorium Thursday evening. The address was by Hon. W. E. Russell of Massachusetts, who took for his theme Individualism in Government, A Plea for Liberty. The address, finely conceived, clear and manly, was an earnest plea for personal liberty, in opposition to the claims of socialism or paternalism, and although in no way a political address it was in principle opposed to protection as being a favor shown one individual at the expense of another. The fundamental thought of the address was that as government is derived from the consent of the governed and its object is protection of the governed, its sphere must be limited to securing for each individual the right to use his own, provided he does not infringe upon the rights of his neighbor.

The statement of the president was of interest chiefly for the account it gave of the great gifts which the last three months have brought the university—over three millions of dollars—so that its capital is now slightly in excess of ten millions, not half of what it needs to complete its plans, and for its earnest plea for still larger gifts in the near future. At present every room in the buildings of the university is occupied and still there is no place on the campus where half of the students can meet together at any one time. The demand for a chapel is pressing. Provision has been made for the group of biological buildings from the gift of Miss Helen Culver, as well as for an inland experimental station, probably on Lake Geneva, and a marine station on the Atlantic coast.

President Harper took occasion to say that Mr. Rockefeller, in spite of his great gifts, had never yet visited the university nor suggested anything concerning its policy, being desirous that the citizens of Chicago should look upon it as their institution, and that every contributor to its funds should feel the same interest in it that he feels. Miss Culver's gift will also secure lectures on hygiene and sanitation for the people of the West Side and thus do very much to put the university extension movement on a firm basis.

FROM INDIA.

Let Education Go On.

Perhaps the most effective agencies working in India today for its redemption and spiritual regeneration are the Christian institutions for higher education established and conducted by missions in all parts of the land. They are not so much in evidence as some other forms of effort, and yet, in the final reckoning when each shall receive its proper meed of praise at the ultimate conquest of India by Christ, these colleges will shine conspicuously and be pre-eminently honored. They lay deep their foundations and build for eternity. They begin with youth and have to do only with the most permanent sources and forces of character. These are they which ultimately determine and powerfully control the life and faith of a people.

The Pasumalai Institution of the Madura Mission of the American Board is one in the sisterhood of schools which are thus doing so much for this land. By the celebration, last September, of the jubilee of the transfer of this mission institution to Pasumalai, attention has been specially called to its history and work. Established modestly in the first decade of the mission's history, it has grown apace until it has become one of the recognized forces in the upbuilding of the kingdom of Christ among the millions of South India. Its present site was formerly the abode of jackals—"a howling wilderness." Today it is clad with verdure, the center of a thriving Christian community, adorned with scholastic halls, dormitories and homes, where over 300 young men are undergoing a Christian training—perhaps the largest number of Christian youths receiving an education in any institution in the land. Its growth is manifest through the work of its collegiate and its high school department, its normal institute and theological seminary, which are all in a vigorous, thriving condition. Its graduates are found in posts of honor everywhere throughout this great presidency, and the large number of preachers and teachers whom it has sent forth into the harvest are doing valiant service for the Master.

There can be no fear for the permanent success of the missions of our American Board so long as they beget and foster, in true New England spirit, such institutions as Pasumalai. And may it never become the policy of our societies, as it is the passion of some good men, to decry or to depreciate the value of "higher education" in mission work. One feature of the recent celebration was a special endeavor to give to the institution a permanent endowment fund. Such a school as this should not be left to the uncertain appropriations from the chronically depleted treasury of the Board. The time has come when at least a part of its income should be the assured result of safely invested funds. After great effort a sum equal to $9,000 has been already secured. This embodies, in addition to the generous offerings of missionary families, much self-denial on the part of the native mission agents, nearly all of whom gave a month's salary for this purpose. This is, however, only the beginning of what we hope may soon grow into a fund adequate for the support of the whole work.

If some of the wealthy friends of the institution only realized what a grand work it is doing, what a paying investment for funds it offers and how great its need, they would doubtless rally to the support of the mission and especially of Dr. Washburn, who has devoted the best twenty-five years of his life to this work and has lavished upon it thousands of dollars from a limited patrimony.

The Natives Chafe a Little.

The retention of Chitral as a permanent part of the great British-Indian Empire is more gratifying to British pride than it is welcome to the Hindu subject, who must bear the whole cost. Do we wonder that the mild Hindu fails to appreciate the reason of his being made involuntarily a party to a compact with the unwilling, restless, warlike tribes two or three thousand miles away, when he is compelled to pay all the expenses of that compact? The fact that the Liberal government in England had decided to abandon Chitral just the day before it was thrown out of power, and that this decision was reversed by the new government, is all known to the intelligent Hindu and adds to the cruel sense of injustice which he feels. The danger to the empire from these fierce northern tribes may be real. But is not the empire a British empire, and should not British money be expended in its defense just as a British Parliament decrees its enlargement?

The asking of this question by many natives of India today indicates, in part, their discontent, though it does not mean disloyalty to the British raj. Native loyalty is deep seated. It depends, however, not upon the exploits of war, but upon the triumphs of peace which are legion and in whose inception and consummation the native has even less to do than he has in war itself. It is doubtless true that England has had very little support, financial or otherwise, from the native community in its grand work of introducing, to a remarkable extent, the many material results of Western civilization and modern progress. If a railroad is to be built or a mill is to be started, the wealthy nabobs of India turn their backs upon it, and it has to be undertaken by private funds from England or by the government itself. But, nothing daunted by native apathy, or even by frequent opposition, the government has persevered in its benign work until the whole country is bearing the impress of its wise endeavors.

A Fine Engineering Feat.

This very day upon which I write is one that will be long remembered in south India for the consummation of a great work that more than a century ago was discussed and surveyed and ten years ago seriously undertaken. It is called the "Peryar Project," and consists in turning the course of a large mountain river on the western ghauts of southern India. Formerly it descended the western side of this mountain range and speedily emptied itself into the ocean, bringing fertility and blessing to no one. From this day on its waters will be diverted, led by a large tunnel down the eastern side of the hills and used to irrigate large barren wastes, to feed many thousands of hungry people and to pay a good return to the government for its investment. As an engineering project it is one of the greatest. Its dam is exceeded in hight only by the new Croton dam of New York. It has cost the government millions of rupees. But it will more than pay the interest on the investment. It will add immensely to the prestige of this paternal government in the eyes of its myriad children in South India, and will be one more in the long list of witnesses to the ability and to the purpose of the English people to rule wisely and well this mighty land of the East.

A Reaction Against Christianity.

There is little doubt that in most places in India the educated native mind is not as favorably disposed towards Christianity as it was some time ago. Some speak of it as a reaction against Christianity, others denominate it a season of religious apathy, while others still describe it as a revival of philosophic Hinduism. Perhaps all these combined give us the present situation. Certainly in the case of a few recent converts from Brahmanism and the higher castes the bitter persecutions which have followed reveal an animus against Christianity such as has been rarely witnessed in this land—never before among educated people. Native civil judges have entirely lost their judicial heads and have wantonly violated all rules of evidence and forms of justice in order to prevent men from becoming Christians. Caste influence has been exerted in such a cruel way as is known only to this demon institution to destroy liberty of religious thought and action in the case of not a few who desired to accept Christ as their Saviour. The cry with the mass of educated Hindus today seems to be "anything—a libertine, a profligate, a hypocrite, an atheist—anything rather than be a Christian." I say "educated Hindus." Of course this movement does not touch the masses, who are still as stolid and as inaccessible as ever. There is no change in work for them.

But it is passing strange that educated men, who will publicly and privately praise Christ as the ideal character and who will acknowledge that Christianity is the highest embodiment known of a lofty morality and of a divine, spiritual ideal, will yet, upon the acceptance of this faith by one of their relatives, friends or members of the same caste, deem nothing too mean to do to prevent such a consummation. It is doubtless true that in the mind of many the ancestral faith, in some vague and philosophic form, has been reinstated and they have conceived a new-born affection for it. The work of Mrs. Besant & Co. in India and that of Vivekananda and party in America have not been without their results, which have been both for philosophic Hinduism (whatever that may mean) and against Christianity. Under this influence a new paper has just been established in Madras to advance the interests of Vedic Hinduism and to develop a new affection among the educated class for the same. It is conservative in spirit, English in language and under the guidance of the monk Vivekananda.

But the Faith Is to Conquer.

In the meanwhile, Christianity is not losing ground in India as some would have the world believe. Indeed, this new wave touches mission work only in large centers of learning and of population, and even there it has thus far affected little the real progress of the work. J. P. J.

Nathaniel George Clark.

By Rev. A. H. Quint, D. D.

What I write is not biography. It is not obituary. I will write out recollections and impressions. We were together in the same class at Andover more than forty years ago, and a close friendship covered the last few years, in which we were neighbors, and in which I learned more of his great heart and powerful intellect than had before been shown to me.

He was but seventy years of age on the eighteenth day of last January. He was, therefore, twenty-five years of age when, in 1850, he came into our class at the beginning of its middle year. He had entered the seminary two years earlier but had been absent as tutor in college our first year. He was tall, erect, but hardly vigorous in body. He had the kindly smile and gentle manner, mingled with great firmness, which characterized his whole life. He had a nobility of nature which was higher than even conscience. He was thoroughly a scholar, and very broad in his studies. In a class which included J. J. Blaisdell of Beloit, Charles A. Aiken late of Princeton, John R. Herrick once of Bangor, Wilson A. Farnsworth of Turkey and George N. Boardman of Chicago, Nathaniel G. Clark was a peer of the strongest. It was our theological year. Theology was then regarded as the great substance of training for the ministry. The mighty thinkers of the world were familiar to the students of that day. An imperial intellect guided our studies. Discussions were almost intense. Clark was often intensely earnest, but he never lost his kindliness of spirit or his calmness of temper. Some of us did not accept the prevailing theology. I hope I am not trespassing if I intimate that Boardman, Herrick and Clark were of this number. Clark was imbued with the views of Coleridge, developing, in him, into the spiritual philosophy of Laurens P. Hickok, which I think shaped all his thinking through life.

He disliked the then Andover theology so far that at the end of our middle year he went to Auburn, where he graduated in 1852. I do not think that his difference with that theology was any marked antagonism to its doctrines, but rather that his thoughts were upon a different plane. In free discussions with him, I have never found in him a denial of a single one of the great doctrines of the gospel. I will venture to tell that in 1891, just as I was finishing a year of homiletic care at Auburn—one of my happy years—and the old chapel, now taken down, was opened for anniversary week, I sought out the room which had been occupied by Nathaniel G. Clark. This room, like the others, had been empty and desolate for years. They were superseded by those of a magnificent structure which generous wealth had since erected. My old classmate was really touched when I told him of my visit to his old room, and he opened his heart to tell me of rich spiritual experiences there, which, of course, are sacred. I may say, however, that they were characterized, as those of his whole life were, by a peculiar spiritual insight.

I must not fail to contradict, as he once told me to do, a story which disturbed him. Some years ago the advocates for missionary churches in country towns made a great deal of the assertion that three noble men had been given to the Christian world by such a church in the little country town of Calais, Vt., where they were born. These three were, indeed, great men—Nathaniel G. Clark, Israel E. Dwinell and Constans L. Goodell. But, alas! there was never such a church in that town. Then the story changed to a Sunday school story which was floating along the Pacific coast two or three years ago. It was now a case where a good woman collected a small Sunday school class of neglected children, and by her instruction in it led these three to Christ. This was equally a fable. The different ages of the boys, indeed, would have made the class theory absurd. But what troubled Dr. Clark was the reflection it seemed to cast upon his early home. His father was a highly respected man and successful physician, first in Calais and afterwards in Montpelier, and his mother was a thoroughly consecrated Christian woman, as well as one of intellectual power and good culture. That a little, sparsely settled town gave three such men to the world illustrates indeed the value of such places; but if one wants to tell this story, let it be told of Christian motherhood.

From Auburn Dr. Clark went directly back to his old college, the University of Vermont, as professor of English literature, to which Latin was added five years after. While there he was ordained to the work of the ministry, Oct. 13, 1857. From this professorship he went to Union College, in 1863, as professor of logic, rhetoric and English literature, which place he held until his great life work commenced, in 1866, when he became successor of Dr. Rufus Anderson as a secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, taking office in 1865. I ought to have said, perhaps, that when he left college his father said that he had done all he could do for him without injustice to the other children. Mr. Clark at once took a debilitated academy at Keene, N. H., which barely paid expenses for the first year, but which he brought into a flourishing condition. It should be said also that, upon being chosen to his first professorship, he went to Halle with his intimate and lifelong friend, Julius H. Seelye. There they pursued their studies with great thoroughness, especially under Müller and Tholuck. He used to love to talk of these great men, and he was fond of showing a German Testament which Tholuck gave him, with his autograph in the book, as a keepsake. I think that perhaps few of us, meeting him in the business affairs of the mission house, realized what broad scholarship and wealth of learning Dr. Clark brought to the work to which his life was consecrated, consecrated with an absence of self-consciousness and with a Christian humility which was natural to him.

I am not minded to speak much of his great missionary work. Others can do that. Of his five foreign tours two were certainly for missions, one of which he made, at his own expense, as a member of a deputation to Turkey in trying times. Often he refused increase of salary, although his attractive home was an almost constant home for returned missionaries or those who were about to go on their work. He used to tell me that he liked to get acquainted with them in this manner, and how delightful it was to remember, in his later years, the names and faces of the many who had sat at his table and slept under his roof. Dr. Clark had lost by death his first wife, who had made his early home happy, but in his second, the daughter of Dr. Isaac R. Worcester, he had one who was equally in sympathy with him in his missionary devotion and whose tender ministration brightened all their life. I have a sweet memory of one day when Dr. Clark invited me to meet at his house our old classmate, Dr. Farnsworth, who has done such noble work, and whom I doubt if I had seen since he and I shook hands on the sailing vessel which was just about to leave Boston harbor many years before.

It is an interesting fact that the new secretary, one year in the rooms with Dr. Anderson, spent much of that first year in the Board's library that he might know all that could be learned from books regarding the field. For twenty-nine years he did his work. At first he was the only foreign secretary. That field was too vast and others took a share of it. At last his principal missions were those of Japan and India. Japan especially was very dear to him. He had great faith in it. It has even been said that the Japan Mission was born in his house. He had the oversight of it from its inception until his retirement in 1894 Our missionaries there and the Japanese Christians loved him. The recent deputation was much in his prayers. His last appearance indeed in the mission rooms was when he came to the little meeting of prayer for the departing delegation. He was then feeble, but his tender supplications for Japan will long be remembered. He did not learn the result on earth. While he heard in his feebleness the tidings of the first recent outbreak in Turkey, it was not felt to be wise that in his rapidly weakening condition he should be disturbed by the accumulated horrors which have come so fast.

In estimating the work of a secretary of a great missionary society let it be remembered that it requires the qualities of a statesman of the highest order. Such men does our Board demand. Such a man was found in the one who has just gone to his reward.

A near neighbor—I think of the dignified form and the same kindly expression which reminded me of the class days. A massive simplicity was his. There was wonderful tenderness in his nature but no weakness. He was a man of marvelous force, pervaded by a constant enthusiasm in his work, and a grave but magnetic speaker. I used to think of him as one of the old prophets shading into John the beloved. In the midst of some differences of judgment between brethren his firmness never wavered, but I never heard an unkind word fall from his lips. His retirement from office did not decrease his interest in missions or in any good cause in any place. All his lifetime he had a contest with ill health. He never murmured. His indomitable courage made him strong. "What have you been doing?" I asked him some months ago, when he had been a little imprudent. He answered, with his usual pleasant look,

"Only getting a little nearer home!" "I am only waiting," he said to me on my last interview, but the grasp of his hand was as firm as ever. In his weeks of suffering his patience was immovable, his faith unchangeable. It was a great comfort to him to be able to say, as he did again and again, "My successor has been to me like a son."

I must record, for what it illustrates, that they brought to him two little grandchildren to be baptized. He was upon the bed from which he never rose, lying helpless. His eyesight gone, they took his hand and guided it to the font and then to the heads of the little ones. But what it illustrates beyond was his tender respect for his young pastor. He insisted they should explain the circumstances of the baptism, lest the pastor might feel hurt that the sacred service was not left to him.

In the last year of his work at the mission house his increasing weakness often forced him to ride from the Park Square Station. One cabman used to watch for him. He had seen me with him and sometimes I had gone with my friend. Five or six weeks ago this cabman asked me, "How is that good man who used to ride with me?" The cabman did not know the name, but he knew that the man was good. The unconscious goodness was in his manner, his features, his voice. He was an illustration of elevated, sweet-tempered, gentle Christian manhood. "If we were all as fit for heaven as he is!" the cabman said to me a week or two later.

For weeks he lay upon his bed growing weaker. By and by he was too weak to see any but his own family. Then followed days when he could utter but a few words even to his own. Then came days of apparent unconsciousness, in which he seemed to be sleeping, and in which there was no sign of life save his faint breathing. Then he went to sleep, to wake at home. This was on the third day of January, 1896.

THE ILLUMINATING POWER OF A REVIVAL.

BY REV. DWIGHT MALLORY PRATT.

A revival of religion is a marvelous revealer of spiritual conditions in individuals and communities. Like an electric flashlight it brings to view states of mind and heart that are not known or possibly even suspected in the ordinary experiences of Christian work. It enables the church to discover with renewed clearness the substantial groundwork of its own faith and the mighty spiritual resources it has in its own quickened membership. Among these glad and assuring, and sometimes appalling, rediscoveries are:

1. Convincing proof of the personality and saving work of the Holy Spirit. No one can witness the conversion of strong men and women to God by the score and hundred nor study the marvelous change effected in each and all by regeneration without acknowledging the supernatural. Every conversion is a miracle. Nothing in human preaching or influence can account for the new life and new love that result from the choice of Christ as one's personal Saviour. When God's people fulfill the conditions the Holy Spirit reveals his presence and power as truly in any age as in the mighty Pentecost which inaugurated the Christian era.

2. The reality and effectiveness of prayer. United, earnest, believing, importunate prayer revives Christians, creates a new spiritual atmosphere and opens the way for God to do what he is always willing and waiting to do. Specific answers to specific requests are indisputable evidence of its potency. When ten, twenty, thirty people become so burdened for the salvation of individuals as to pour out their hearts in united and unceasing prayers and tears to God, and the ones for whom they pray yield after days and weeks, possibly, of bitterness and antagonism to the Spirit's blessed work, the faith of believers has ground for confidence. Many marked instances of this kind are within the writer's immediate knowledge. Men of great strength and prominence in business have confessed that it was not the evangelist's preaching that moved them but the consciousness of an enveloping atmosphere of prayer. For this they thanked the people with deep gratitude after conversion.

3. The hostility of worldliness to revival effort. Lines of separation are drawn very distinctly by aggressive Christian work. That which is unspiritual in the church becomes critical, scornful, severe and antagonistic when the plain truths of the gospel challenge devotion to Christ or emphasize the need of saving the lost. The great body of professed disciples melt under the power of such direct preaching, but enough grow cold and hard and bitter to show what a load the church carries in its unconverted or unconsecrated membership. Whatever may be said in favor of worldly amusements in ordinary times, it becomes very apparent in times of great spiritual awakening that they are arrayed against interest in souls and the work of soul saving. They are used as diversions from, or competitors to, revival influence. The very forces of darkness become active through these social agencies, a fact which of itself speaks volumes concerning the inherent tendency of the dance, the card table and the theater. "How small these things now seem" is the exact language which has recently fallen from the lips of revived Christians.

4. The utter shallowness and insincerity of skepticism. Infidelity is a thing of the heart and not of the head. When the heart surrenders sin, doubt vanishes instantly. A man of strong intellect said to the writer: "Skepticism need not be taken into the account at all. I do not believe that really there is such a thing. I used to consider myself a skeptic but had sense enough to keep it to myself. Doubt leaves one instantly when he is willing to do what he knows God wants him to do." Were there no worldly Christians skepticism would have no peg on which to hang its doubts and arguments.

5. The inherent power of the church. It is a glorious thing when the church discovers its strength and resources. The cooperation of Christians of every name for the one specific purpose of saving souls acts upon a city like a spiritual earthquake. It is moved from center to circumference and to its profoundest depths. The world of unbelief and hostility is awed to silence and acknowledges the tremendous energy of a united and awakened church. Such an event demonstrates that no evil, social, civil or moral, could withstand the overwhelming power of the Christian religion if all its adherents were united for its overthrow. The defiant saloon and all kindred evils will be exterminated when God's people have Pentecostal unity against public iniquity.

6. The unifying power of a revival. Discussion and creed revision are not the remedies for the divisions of Christendom. When the burden of saving a lost world rolls in upon the church universal its separate sects will forget their names and individual characteristics and will love each other undiscriminately because welded into an indissoluble spiritual unity by their common work and common love for souls. That day a divine optimism declares not to be far distant.

7. The divine authority and inspiration of the Word. The wielding of a sword is the best way to test its steel and keep it polished. That which kills sin and saves life needs no defense. The intellectual world is more than satiated with critical analysis and discussion. The Word still remains unchanged and converts thousands as easily today as when it fell in its simplicity and power from the lips of Peter.

8. A revival reveals the worth of the human soul. Christ's estimate easily becomes a theory in the thought and philosophy of a formal and unaggressive church. It is one thing to believe with the head, another thing to believe with the heart. A revival compels one to believe with the heart, and solicitude at once takes the place of indifference, effort the place of idleness, faith and prayer the place of unbelief. There may be counterfeits of revival and workers who bring such effort into disrepute, but a true revival of spiritual religion is one of the divinest blessings that ever comes to an individual, a church, a city, or a nation.

AFTER THE PINGREE POTATO PATCH —WHAT?

BY REV. RUFUS C. TOBEY.

Detroit's eccentric mayor builded better than he knew when he pushed to a successful issue his plan for relieving to some extent the unemployed. The name applied to this measure was given in derision, and yet the success of the work has been so great that it is now spoken of with respect. The very fact that municipal authorities and private charitable organizations in some of our largest cities, following close upon him, adopted his plan, argues strongly in its favor, and the returns from these separate experimental stations justify their faith in it, for, so far as heard from, not a single failure has been marked.

Mayor Jewett of Buffalo gives a fair estimate of results when he says: "When I laid out the plots last spring I made them all about one third of an acre, and then we gave every one who wanted to plant potatoes three bushels of seed. From that amount of planting on the small plots the average crop for inexperienced persons, who never saw a farm and didn't know a hoe from a hat-rack, has been sixteen to eighteen bushels—this in addition to whatever other vegetables they have raised. That is only the average for unskilled farmers. Some of those who were raised on a farm have done ever so much better." And then he adds: "Every day some of these people come to me and ask if I think there is any possibility of their getting the plots again next year. They say they are praying to God to let them have a chance to do some farming; it makes them feel independent, and then it saves them the trouble of walking up to the poor-master's office in cold weather. I tell you it's a good thing."

The experiment was carried on in Boston, at Morton Farm, under the supervision of Superintendent Peterson of the Industrial Aid Society. There were fifty-two lots of one-third of an acre each; the applicants were mostly Americans, representing an average of six per family. The land had not been cultivated for twenty-five years. Three days were consumed in the planting, and only two out the fifty-two workers failed to make a crop. Here, as in Buffalo, potatoes were the principle vegetable raised, though beans and other vegetables were also planted, generally in rows around the plots of potatoes. The smallest crop was twenty bushels, the largest fifty-five bushels, and the other vegetables raised netted the amateur farmers from five to fifteen dollars. To produce these results required work for eight or nine days of ten hours. Sixty lots were laid out, but eight were worked by experienced men, and the twenty bushel crop was as small as it was, though tended by one of these men, because of the lateness of putting in the seed.

This once ridiculed movement has become a factor in solving the problem of the unemployed. Every experienced charity worker in studying congested districts, with all the suffering and sin that seem indigenous to them, has felt that partial relief could come only from the transference of some of the surplus population to the country, but up to a comparatively recent date the majority of efforts along this line have been unsuccessful.

Roughly divided the unemployed, or those who lack regular employment, may be separated into two classes: first, those who were born and brought up in the city and who know nothing of large expanses of verdure except what they see in the parks. They are averse to exchanging the city for the country because of lack of social privileges, even of the low order which they now enjoy, and because of their ignorance of farming. The other class comprises young men and women who have left good homes in the country, where the work was hard but where they were independent and had sufficient food and raiment, to accept, for the most part, subordinate places in the city with its veneer. Such usually live up to the limits of their wages.

A quarter of a century ago the pastor of Park Street Church moved earnestly and spoke eloquently against this exodus from the country to the city. He took for his theme the constant appeals then being made by country churches to the churches of the cities. "You have our best blood, our young blood," said these country pastors, "and our churches are declining because our young men and women are your supporters." But Mr. Murray had satisfied himself that their conclusions were wrong, and that a far greater number fell into the non-church going class than identified themselves with church-goers. Furthermore, he related thrilling incidents of misfortune and crime into which many of these young people fell, and some of the scenes at bedsides where the wages of sin were being paid were terribly realistic. He concluded thus in one of his sermons: "If I had an audience of a hundred young farmers who contemplated changing their country life for the city, I should consider myself a weak pleader could I not dissuade them from their purpose."

The mere fact that there were a number of abandoned farms in the New England States awaiting cultivation has made no serious breaks in the ranks of the unemployed, but it will be very strange if the success of the "Pingree potato patch" does not lead to greater pressure and more persistent effort to distribute labor more equally. As regards the man born and bred in the city, ignorant of farming, this plan can be so far developed that, under instruction, he may be taught how to grow the needed crops, and when this condition exists the man and his family will be willing to look to the country for a home as the lesser of two evils, if for no other reason; while the man born and bred in the country, who has come to the city to gain a foothold and is himself gradually losing ground, will, under the same compulsion, return to the ancestral farm. Sweeping assertions as to the great number who will immediately make this exchange of city for country are out of place. The movement will not be one of great rapidity, but it is not any more visionary to anticipate that in the not remote future the current of immigration to the great centers will be in a measure checked than it is to believe that some of our surplus population which we have received from rural towns shall return thither. It is not unreasonable to expect that mechanics who live from hand to mouth, servants of masters, will prefer "a little farm well tilled" to their present condition.

It is not impossible to inculcate something of the spirit of Burnbrae, one of Ian Maclaren's beautiful creations. Such a spirit will help bring about the desired result. When young men learn that by cultivating farms with brains their calling is a dignified one and that agriculture is really a science, false notions will disappear and contentment will take the place of discontent. What would be the effect upon the social life of country towns and what this transfer of energy from the city to the country would mean to the country church is also worth considering.

LOST OPPORTUNITIES.

BY SAMUEL B. CAPEN.

While the great legal minds are contending over the problem whether or not the Monroe Doctrine applies in the Venezuelan question, the average citizen cannot fail to note that a splendid opportunity has been lost, temporarily at least, for the cause of arbitration and universal peace. A deputation from the English Parliament only a few months ago came to this country proposing a court of arbitration for the settlement of all disputed questions that might arise for a term of years. While never officially accepted by us, it had the almost universal commendation of our nation, a fact with which they must have been perfectly familiar. The matter was too public to escape attention. And yet on the very first question in which our government proposes arbitration it is substantially refused. If England feels so secure in the justice of her position, why refuse to arbitrate? Her refusal seems to throw a suspicion of doubt at once.

But our government equally lost its opportunity and has had to bear the severe criticism of the people. The menace contained in the closing sentences of the President's message and the hasty action of Congress, followed as it has been by the furious talk of war, is equally unworthy of us. If Venezuela is right in her claim, as so many of us think she clearly is, why any necessity for the United States to threaten? It is only those who are in the wrong who need to use such arguments, except as a last resort; it is a confession of weakness, not an indication of strength. The man of Galilee never would have dictated the closing sentences of the President's message.

If the President, in closing his message, instead of using a threat had stated that after the commission had reported the facts we should press arbitration still further, and, meantime, pending the future discussion of the question, had offered the moral support of America to England in any effort she might make to protect Armenia against the "land pirates" who are oppressing her, he would have struck a chord which would have vibrated around the globe and met with the universal approval of the civilized world. The people of England would have indorsed this continued appeal for arbitration and have compelled the Salisbury government, when it had the moral support of such an ally as the United States, to be more vigorous in its Turkish policy. We would literally have heaped coals of fire upon their heads.

As it now stands, the one person in the world who may be supposed to be most happy over the events of the last two weeks is the sultan; as it might have been, he would today read his doom in the condemnation of the two great English-speaking peoples of the world. As it now stands, Armenia must continue to suffer, for England, her only hope, has been rendered more isolated than before; as it might have been, Armenia would have new cause for courage in the moral alliance of two nations who together are irresistible. Why could not some of the Christian men in Congress have seen quickly enough the opportunity to try, at least, and repair the injury done by the Administration? In that unnecessary menace, intended to protect a weak brother in Venezuela, we have laid a heavier burden upon our weak and suffering brother in Armenia, and we have struck a blow at arbitration in the house of its friends. No one can doubt the courage of America or the willingness of her children to die for a great principle; the histories of '76 and '61 have proved that forever. But we had a glorious opportunity to show our moral courage and greatness in the direction of peace and in helping a bleeding nation crying to God for aid, and we lost that opportunity as England lost hers.

BOSTON SUPERINTENDENTS' UNION.

The first meeting of the new year was marked by the presence of the recently elected president, E. S. Hathaway, Esq., in the chair, who opened the hour with appropriate remarks, and directed the attention of the members to methods for increasing the membership. Before the opening speaker was presented, a brief prayer service was held, as a fitting opening of the year. Then Mr. H. D. Noyes spoke on The Means Effective in Promoting Spiritual Growth in the Sunday School. The special methods to be sought were named as extra or lengthened sessions of the school, with a particular view to reaching the unconverted, a live teachers' meeting and the hearty co-operation of the pastor. Other members of the union reiterated these and similar helpful suggestions.

SONNETS IN SHADOW.

There is such power even in smallest things
To bring the dear past back; a flower's tint,
A snatch of some old song, the fleeting glint
Of sunbeams on the wave—each vivid brings

The lost days up, as from the idle strings
Of wind-harp sad a breeze evokes the hint
Of antique tunes. A glove which keeps imprint
Of a loved hand the heart with torture wrings

By memory of a clasp meant more than speech;
A face seen in the crowd with curve of cheek
Or sweep of eyelash our woe's core can reach.

How strong is love to yearn, and yet how weak
To strive with fate: the lesson all things teach,
As of the past in myriad ways they speak.

—Arlo Bates.

Archdeacon Farrar declares that parents cannot be reminded too often or too earnestly not to fret, not to worry their children, and finds a Scriptural warning to this effect in the words rendered in our authorized version of the Bible: "And ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath," a clause which he says in the original means exactly: "Do not irritate your children," "Do not rub them the wrong way." Perhaps there was never more need for this injunction than at the present day, when periodicals devoted to child culture and home training abound, when theories regarding the discipline of children are numberless and advice to parents is met with on all sides. The young father or mother, anxious to bring up a child in accordance with all the latest scientific methods, is in danger of overdoing the training of the little one. A father, who had learned by experience the wisdom of letting his children alone to a certain extent, declares that he harmed his first child for life by his exacting requirements. She was checked unduly and shut up within herself until she grew up in a rigid and unnatural constraint. The same warning might be applied to children of an older growth, who are not permitted to develop their own individualities. Dr. Farrar sums the whole matter up in one sentence: "Parents must respect their children as well as children their parents."

THE LORD'S LEADINGS.

BY MRS. M. E. SANGSTER.

Nothing is more natural than the deep desire of the young Christian and of the Christian past youth, but earnest and loving with the love of the tried and the true, to be up and doing for Christ. Often this desire is so peremptory and so insistent that it blinds one to the fact that the Lord's work is here, as well as yonder, in our own kitchens, streets and drawing-rooms, as well as on the outlying posts of service.

A sweet young girl, wistful and eager to fill every day with some blessed and direct work for Jesus, was one day walking on a commonplace errand near her own house. A stranger paused to inquire the way, and the information was courteously given. Then, to the girl's heart, not too much occupied with its own concerns to be impressed with the want of another, came the thought that the woman who had asked the question was aged, looked feeble and bewildered, and bore the marks of poverty. The girl turned, retraced her steps, found the woman and took her to the place she sought. It was a half-hour out of her day and she discovered in that space that the stranger, just dismissed from a hospital, had come from her own home to seek and save a deeply tempted soul, a soul in extremity. The young girl took the ministry on herself, a ministry of love, care and time that extended over months, but in the end the soul found peace. This was a leading of the Lord.

We may not, perhaps, be able to invest with much glamour of romance a mission of the Lord to hard-working Mary, bending over her tubs in our own laundry. Even to go a little farther, it seems finer to leave home and endure hardness in some circumstances, extending relief and showing compassion to the poor and the wretched in a crowded city neighborhood, than to give companionship to an aged relative sitting alone by our own fire. Both kinds of work are right and are the Lord's, but we should be very sure of the Lord's leading when we choose between them. Are we quite as ready to live in the radiant joyousness of Christ's realized love and constant presence in our own village as in a distant field? Is our own tired father, a little cross and fault-finding after a wearying day at business, as much an object of tender solicitude in our eyes as somebody's less worthy and very disreputable father who lounges around saloons, and does no work that he can help, but for whom a mission, properly, sets wide its doors of blessing?

Understand, I am not speaking one word against the home mission, or the city mission, or the foreign mission work, all of which I dearly love. Only, for some of us, the Lord's leadings are not in these directions, but are more strictly limited—to the little brother needing help with his Latin lesson, the fragile mother with an aching head on her pillow, the friend, gay of manner and genial of temper, who is in danger of drifting into evil associations.

On the other hand, there are those who are called, sternly and strongly, to go forth, out into the world, up into the New England valley, among the hills where the candle of faith burns feebly and the churches languish for lack of enthusiasm, out into the pathways of sorrow and the purlieus of sin, over the ocean to the heathen. If it be a God's call, and you heed it, wherever it lead it will lead to blessedness.

WHIFFS OF COMMON SENSE.

II. FAMILY RELIGION.

BY MARION HARLAND.

Miss F. E. Bennett, the honored principal of Ogontz School, wrote, a little while ago, a treatise upon The Perils of Organization. Unfortunately I have not it at my elbow, else I should draw heavily upon it in the preparation of this paper. In the same key is a letter just received from one whose name is linked in the minds of a grateful nation with philanthropic achievement. "In the onward rush of progress we are in danger of losing sight of personal duty and individual responsibility," she writes. "We are clubbed to death." Both of these are practical women, and each is the motive power of a noble organization. Warning from such a quarter deserves serious attention.

We are living in an age of surprising inventions and marvelous machinery. As a natural sequence ours is an age of delegation. The habit of doing nothing by hand that can be as well done by a machine begets the desire to seek out new, and presumably better, methods of performing every duty appointed to each of us. Fine penmanship is no longer a necessity for the clerk or business man; skill with her needle is not demanded of the wife and mother. Our kitchens bristle with labor-saving implements warranted to reduce the scullion's and cook's work to a minimum of toil.

An important problem of the day involving grave results is founded upon the fact that, with the countless multiplicity of teachers' helps and scholars' friends, International Lesson Papers, Sunday school weeklies and quarterlies and the banded leagues of associated youth whose watchword is "Christ and the Church," the children and young people of today are as a rule less familiar with the text of Holy Writ, with Bible history and the cardinal doctrines which the Protestant Church holds are founded upon God's revealed Word than were the children and youth of fifty years ago. Let me say here that I am personally responsible for this statement and what is to follow it. Having been a Bible class teacher and an active worker in religious and charitable societies for forty years, and numbering as I do between twenty-five and thirty clergymen among my near kinsmen, I do not speak idly or ignorantly upon this subject. My appeal for corroboration of my testimony is to my contemporaries and coworkers.

The superficiality and glitter that are the bane of modern methods of education in our country have not spared sanctuary ordinances and family religion. "The church which is in thy house" is an empty form of speech when applied to a majority of so-called Christian homes. Early trains and late dinners succeeded by evening engagements have crowded out family prayers, and the pious custom, honored [illegible] all ages, of "grace before meat" is in many houses disregarded except when a clergyman is at the table. Then the deferential bend of the host's head in the direction of the reverend guest is rather a tribute to the cloth than an acknowledgment of the divine Giver to whom thanks are due.

In the olden days it was the pupil who studied the Sunday school lessons as heedfully as he conned the tasks to be prepared for Monday's schoolroom. The portion of the old Union Question Book appointed for next Sunday was gone over under the mother's eye, the references looked up, the Bible Dictionary and Concordance consulted. Then a Psalm or part of a chapter in the New Testament was committed to memory, and four or five questions in the catechism were added to the sum of knowledge to be inspected by the Sunday school teacher and "audited" by the superintendent.

In writing the foregoing paragraph a scene arises before me of my father's fine gray head and serious face as he sat at the head of the room, Bible and reference books upon the stand before him; of the dusky faces of the servants in the background, intent upon the reading and exposition of the Word as they came from the lips of the master of the household, who for the hour was also the priest. I hear much, nowadays, of the "hard lines" that fell to the children of that generation, in that they were drilled after the manner I have described and compelled to attend church twice or three times on Sunday. I affirm fearlessly that we did not know how badly off we were, and that the aforesaid "lines" seemed to our unsophisticated imaginations to be cast to us in pleasant places. The hour devoted each Sunday evening to the study of next Sunday's lesson was full of interest, the prayer that preceded it and the two or three hymns with which the simple service closed gave it a solemnity that was delight, not boredom.

"Primitive methods" we call those studies now, and contemn, gravely or jeeringly, the obsolete practice of "going through" the Bible yearly by reading a given number of chapters every day. We assume that those were mechanical contrivances which, at the best, filled the mind with an undigested mass of Biblical matter and made sacred things trite. They who censure or sneer take no exception to the story that Demosthenes translated the works of Thucydides eight times, and also committed them to memory, that his style might be informed with the spirit and tone of his favorite exemplar. We cannot do away with the pregnant truth that the Bible-reading child of 1845 so steeped imagination and memory in the Holy Word that the wash of years and the acids of doubt have never robbed him of it. The Psalms and gospels then learned stay by us yet, responsive to the prick of temptation, the stroke of sorrow, the sunlight of joy. When strongly moved we unconsciously fall into Scriptural phraseology. God's promises then learned are our song in the house of our pilgrimage. We do not confound patriarchs with prophets, or passages from the epistles with the Psalms of David.

I am continually confronted by illustrations of the truth that the "contract system" prevails in religious teaching as extensively as in the manufacture of garments and food and furniture, and that the results in all cases are the same. Machine work cannot compare in neatness and durability with hand-made goods. The complaint, "I cannot get my Bible class to study the lessons," is almost universal. I have known large classes of adults to be made up with the express proviso that none of the members should be expected to prepare the lesson. Their appearance in the classroom at the stated hour fulfills their part of the compact. In thus presenting themselves they "press the button." The teacher does the rest. The mother, taking her afternoon siesta, or reading her Sunday novel at home, rarely knows the subject of the Bible lesson, much less what the teacher's treatment of it is.

I do not mention the pastor purposely. Except when he sees them in the Sunday school, the faces of the children belonging (by courtesy) to his cure of souls are seldom beheld by him. The Sunday school, originally intended for the neglected children of the illiterate poor, has come to be the chief instrumentality upon which well-to-do church members depend for the spiritual upbuilding of those who are to form the church of the future. If one is tempted to challenge the assertion, let him compare the number of children (not infants) enrolled in our Sunday schools with those who habitually attend upon divine service. The absence of the sunny, restless polls from the rows of worshipers in the pews, the troops of boys and girls who wend their way homeward at the conclusion of the Sunday school exercises are accounted for by so-called humane apologists by the plea that two services in one day are burdensome to the little folk. And mothers "enjoy the service far more when they are not disturbed by fidgety or drowsy children." "Then, too, much of the sermon is unintelligible to them. Why torture them by a mere form?"

An old-fashioned clergyman—a visitor to a city church which I chanced to attend last winter—prefaced his sermon, "as was his custom at home," he said, by "a five-minute talk to the lambs of the fold." In the congregation of at least 800 souls there were exactly three "lambs" under fifteen years of age. It was impossible for the most reverent of his hearers to help thinking of the solitary parishioner who composed his pastor's congregation upon a stormy day, and objected to the sermon dutifully delivered by the minister "as good, but too personal."

It is as impossible for the thoughtful student of the signs of the times to avoid the conclusion that the growing disposition of the young to deny the authority of the church and to supersede her stated ordinances by organizations established and run by themselves may be the legitimate fruit of the prominence given by their parents to what should be the nursery of the church over the church itself. It would be strange if, after witnessing for fourteen or fifteen years such open and systematic disrespect of the gates of Zion, they were to develop veneration for her worship and devout appreciation of the mystic truth that this is the place where God's honor dwells.

If—and the "if" is broad and deep and long—the little ones are faithfully trained by the parents in the nurture and admonition of the Lord (dear, quaint old phraseology, fine, subtle and pervasive as lavender-scent!), if sacred songs and Bible stories and tender talk of the Saviour's love and the beautiful life of which this may be made a type and a foretaste keep in the minds of the little ones at home the sanctity and sweetness of the day of days, there is a shadow of excuse for the failure to make room for them in the family pew. Even then the tree will grow as the twig is inclined.

The mother whose knee is the baby's first altar, who gathers about her for confession, for counsel and for prayer sons and daughters who will, in older and sterner years, call her blessed for the holy teachings of their childhood, will teach them to find, with her, the tabernacles of the Lord of Hosts "amiable," i. e., worthy of all love and fidelity. The chrism of motherhood consecrates a woman as a priestess. Neither convenience nor custom can release her from the office. Let not another take her crown.

CHICAGO WORKING GIRLS' CLUBS.

In this new era for women nothing is more remarkable than the rapid growth of club life among them. This, in the West at least, is not chiefly for social purposes or for mere pleasure, of which there is indeed no lack, but for physical comfort and mental improvement. More than a score of years ago Mrs. Kate N. Doggett organized The Fortnightly, a literary club of the highest and most exclusive character, which has exerted a very great influence on the intellectual life of the women of Chicago. More recently the Young Women's Fortnightly has done not a little to lift up intellectual standards among the better educated young women of the city. Not without influence have been the alumnæ gatherings of the graduates of the various women's colleges and the association of these graduates with each other. Art classes, literary clubs, classes in painting, etc., have been of great value for those women of leisure who could sustain them.

But for working women and especially for young working women, who are becoming more numerous in our down-town offices and stores every year, till quite recently nothing has been done. They were compelled to carry their lunch or obtain it in disagreeable places and at an unreasonable price. They had no room where they could snatch a few minutes rest, or speak to one another on subjects of common interest. This great lack appealed to women of means and organizing ability, who have sought to remove it. A place where food of the best quality, at the lowest price, rest, social life, intellectual improvement and moral protection should be combined was indispensable. Although several of the nine clubs for young working women in Chicago were organized by the daughters of the wealthy, no caste distinction has been shown. The members are treated as sisters. What concerns one concerns all.

Thus the Ogontz Club has its charming rooms, its attractive tables, its library and lounges in the top story of one of our sky scrapers. The Wildwood Club came into existence through the efforts of two of Mr. George M. Pullman's daughters. The Alpha Club and the Beta, its counterpart, were formed by Mrs. John W. Thomas, who saw the great need of a place where young women could get food and rest, if need be a night's lodging, at low prices. The Alpha Club occupies two floors of a large business block on Dearborn Street, near State. Here Mrs. Thomas and her family live. The rooms are furnished attractively with choice bits of furniture, pictures, statuary and bric-a-brac. There are books, papers and magazines for every taste. Musical instruments abound. But nothing is more attractive than at the noon hour to see 500 girls seated at the snow-white tables laden with healthful food, delicately cooked and elegantly served. At less than half its former cost they now obtain their food in a place which they can call their own home and where many of them, after the work of the day is over, gather for instruction in such studies as they desire to pursue.

All these clubs have this in common, that each seeks the welfare of its members. The dues are small. In some of them there are different classes of members; the associate members from the more wealthy classes taking upon them by turn the burden of the oversight of the clubs and an honorary class paying ten dollars a year toward their support, thus making the burdens of the active members light.

The Jane Club, which takes its name from Miss Jane Addams of the Hull House, is a sort of co-operative establishment in which about one hundred girls live together at a cost of three dollars a week. Membership is by election. The building occupied is a block of flats near the Hull House, and was selected by the managers of the Hull House, who have been closely connected with the club from the first. The girls manage their own affairs, choose their matron, purchase their own supplies, provide their own furniture, pay their own bills. For extras they assess themselves after full discussion and an intelligent vote. They have a charming home where they lead the independent and self-improving life they love so well and so richly deserve. Other clubs will surely be organized, and each one will meet some pressing want. FRANKLIN.

THE BOY KING OF SPAIN.

BY S. E. BRIDGMAN.

As I write we can look out from our window facing "the Concha," a little harbor of the Bay of Biscay, and note a little ten-year-old boy, in a blue flannel sailor's suit, playing on the beach. Above him a cloudless sky, before him one of the most charming harbors in Europe. On the mountains at its entrance, the lighthouse, watch-towers, bristling cannon, granite fortifications, great walls along the precipitous side. Behind the lad is a little Moorish bathhouse, elegantly finished, and in it are his grandmother, mother and two young sisters, all dressed in simple, modest style. Brilliant statesmen, soldiers in scarlet uniforms are around and, just a little way from shore, a pretty rowboat and a group of sailors in natty costume, with white oars in their hands, ready at any moment for service in case of any accident to the boy.

Do you ask, Who is this child? He is the same little fellow whose face appears upon the postal stamps and upon the silver coin that I hold in my hand, whose photograph is in the shop windows of all the cities in Spain, who when born was gazed upon by representatives from all parts of the world, "from the papal Mexico and the French ambassador to the ministers of England, Germany, Austria, Italy, Russia and the United States, even from the Spanish countries of South America." Cannon were fired, telegraphic dispatches were sent from the city of his birth, Madrid, all over the world. Flags were unfurled, the bells rang out wild peals of joy, great cities, all throughout the peninsula, were alive with rejoicing. And now, near my side is this same little fellow, born "king of Spain," utterly unconscious that he is the most important figure in this great country, upon whose shoulders is to be placed the responsibility of a great kingdom, rollicking about gathering seashells, like any Yankee boy on our South Shore. What will be his career, what good or evil he will accomplish, how he may affect the country of Europe, is a problem that the next century alone can solve.

For a little boy to be saluted with reverence by statesmen and courtiers, to be watched by a nation, to have an army of 10,000 march before him with military bands playing Long Live the King, is an honor no American lad has ever attained, but which seems to come naturally to Alphonso, the Spanish king. The royal family live in San Sebastian, in their palace near us, in the summer. Tomorrow they return to Madrid. Here we have met them twice and each time have received the cordial and gracious salutation of the queen and her retinue. We saw her in the piazza of her pretty Moorish bathhouse, chatting with one of her courtiers, as modest and quiet in attire and in bearing as any American lady taking an outing. Without airs or pretension she saluted those who stood near in a simple and gracious manner, evidently winning the hearts of her subjects as she stole the hearts of her American admirers.

And to what a kingdom is the child born! To be the successor of a long line of illustrious kings, whose reign has changed the fate of millions, to administer wisely the affairs of a realm like Spain, to grant religious liberty or to prevent free thought are responsibilities which almost appall one. Just now the nation is pitiably poor, and the war in Cuba is straining its finances to the utmost, and its choicest young men have been sent and are daily recruited for the war. At way stations all along the way great crowds gather to see the boys, many of them in their teens, start off, and the same pitiful sights of embraces, tears, agony of fathers, mothers and sisters came before us as in the days of '61-'64 in the United States. Said a Spaniard to us: "I met at the club last evening a boy who was to start for Cuba today. He ought to have a nursemaid to go with him." The people are very sensitive and carefully watch the action of our country. Even the young girls in the American mission school at San Sebastian, with fire in their sharp eyes, say to the teacher in geography: "You Americans want Cuba." "No, we do not; our country is large enough already." "Yes, but you don't want Spain to own Cuba," and then they burst out into a patriotic song. To be on Spanish soil is to have our eyes opened as never before to great questions which may effect "Our dear native land."

"He that cometh to God"—what shall I say of this privilege? The tameness of human language is disappointing when we attempt to describe it. Imagine a being so wonderfully endowed that the whole keyboard of nature, Providence and the human heart lies under his hand and, smitten by his mystic fingers, gives forth the harmony which pleases him, and then invest him in your conceptions with an intensity of love which is not discouraged by the deepest moral degradation in its objects—imagine such a being and imagine him accessible to man and you imagine one to whom in their hour of need all the world, unless, indeed, the spell of some deadly fascination were laid upon them, would be resorting continually for guidance, help and comfort. But this is no imagination. It is a reality. God is such a being.—Edward M. Goulburn.

The admirable article entitled The Next Thing, which appeared in the Home Department Dec. 19, was written by Christine Terhune Herrick and inadvertently credited to her mother, Mrs. E. P. Terhune. This is the penalty of having two distinguished writers in the same household.

Closet and Altar

Prayer, which we deem so easy, is, when it is real prayer, the passion of an effort, the wrestling of a life.

In the mind of God, we may be assured, the conception of prayer is no fiction, whatever man may think of it. It has, and God has determined that it should have, a positive and an appreciable influence in directing the course of a human life. It is, and God has purposed that it should be, a link of connection between human mind and divine mind, by which, through his infinite condescension, we may actually move his will. It is, and God has decreed that it should be, a power in the universe, as distinct, as real, as natural, as uniform, as the power of gravitation or of light or of electricity. A man may use it, as trustingly and as soberly as he would use either of these. It is as truly the dictate of good sense that a man should expect to achieve something by praying, as it is that he should expect to achieve something by a telescope or the mariner's compass or the ecletric telegraph.—Austin Phelps.

Soul of our souls, with boundless cheer
Forever near,
Our being's breath and atmosphere,
The world seems bleak
Only when shelter in drear self we seek;
The joy of life is, man to thee may speak!

Nor nursing each our own distress
To thee we press;
Prayer's overflow drown selfishness:
Soul within soul,
One voice to thee our linked petitions roll;
Healer of the world's hurt, O make us whole!

—Lucy Larcom.

Praying is one of the most arduous exercises of the soul. True prayer is the highest attainment of the human spirit. Coming into communion with God is the vastest enterprise on which a man can enter. To gather up all the energies of the soul and set them flowing Godward even for a moment requires a concentration of attention, a culture of heart-life and a strength of will which are as rare as they are priceless. What praying man has not many a time felt the need of being taught how to pray? —C. E. Jefferson.

Our Father, it is good to come to thee. Thou knowest all and yet it is a relief to pour out our hearts, full to the brim with need and sorrow and confession. We come through Christ. He trod the path of prayer before us and now intercedes for us at thy right hand. Teach us to pray. O Blessed Master, draw us aside into sympathy with thyself in thy ceaseless intercessions for thy church and the world. Let it not be enough for thee to pray for us, but pray in us. May thy prayers pass up through our lips. Deliver us from the iniquity of the heart which makes prayer a mockery. Keep us from giving thee the utterance of the lips or the posture of the body, without the consent of the ardent spirit. May we learn to live in God; to talk simply and naturally to him as to a friend. Let our days be full of converse with him. Let the fountain of desire be ever rising in our heart. May we pray without ceasing, in everything give thanks and in nothing be anxious. Amen.

Mothers in Council.

THE PROBLEM OF WHAT NOT TO DO.

The beautiful picture of "a true mother" in The Congregationalist of Nov. 21 rouses in me a feeling of discouragement which almost amounts to despair. How could any mother be and do so much! To me it is not a question of love or of unselfish devotion, but rather one of actual physical incapacity. If this dear New England saint could answer questions, I wonder if, after all, she too might not recall times when the baby was wakeful at night and she overslept in the morning, so beginning the day all wrong; if she did not often feel that it was her duty to stay at home and rest while some one else managed the sewing society; if nerves and temper did not occasionally gain the mastery; if "solid reading" did not sometimes prove beyond the grasp of a wearied mind.

Speaking from experience, I can only say that mothers of young children surely deserve much consideration in view of the difficulties against which they struggle. I believe that I am a woman of more than average strength, endurance and cheerfulness, and the circumstances of my life are not unusually hard, yet there are times when my courage almost fails in meeting the everyday necessities of life. The truth is that a young mother, to whom children have come rapidly and who has a young babe dependent upon her, has little reserve strength. In patience and wise self-management lie her only safety. Instead of setting up an arbitrary standard of excellence and driving herself up to it, with bitter self-scourging in case of failure, she should quietly take the measure of her own ability and arrange her work accordingly.

Any considerate husband would prefer to forego his dessert rather than have his wife come to the table flushed and exhausted. It is better to buy even cheap ready-made clothing for the children than to sew vitality and nervous energy into endless seams and trimmings. It is actually best for baby to be left to the care of clumsy Bridget for an hour while mother gets a breath of the fresh air, which is so essential to his well-being as well as her own; and one hour of companionship with a refreshed and invigorated mamma will be more helpful to the older children than the most unfailing attendance of one who is fagged and spiritless. In brief, I believe I have Mark Hopkins's authority for the paradox that the best mother is the one who takes the best care of herself.

THE MOTHER OF THREE.

HOW TO INTEREST CHILDREN IN THE BIBLE.

In seeking to get the children interested in the Bible three "don'ts" need to be kept in mind by the parents. Don't require the child to read the Bible as an act of piety. You tell your boy that it is his duty to read a chapter a day and that the exercise will be pleasing in the sight of God. But duty is a word which a boy is slow to spell. Mothers who are impressed with the idea that reading a chapter a day is an act of piety always administer the Bible to their children as a dose of medicine. "Read this, now, my son, it isn't bad a bit"; and the boy swallows his chapter in Leviticus with a wry face and a disagreeable conviction that his mother got the "better of him." And the next day, when the mother finds that the coaxing method will no longer work, she must resort to commands or threats.

Don't require a child to read a chapter as a punishment. This ought to go without saying, but one of the most eminent teachers of boys I ever knew always gave a truant his choice between a whipping and committing to memory a part of the Sermon on the Mount. The novice in disobedience usually chose the sermon, but when he got through he solemnly resolved that, if the alternative was ever offered again, he would choose the whipping. There are middle-aged men, who spent their boyhood days at this school, to whom the Sermon on the Mount is but a bitter memory.

Don't misuse the Bible in the presence of your children. The funereal tone so often used at family prayers has turned many a child from the Book. Then there is the pious mother, who puts on a clean white apron Sunday afternoon and sits down with the big family Bible in her lap for a comfortable nap. What boy wants to read a book so dull that even his mother goes to sleep over it?

With these dont's pigeon-holed in the mind the way is open for a few simple suggestions. At that period of the child's life when reading is a novelty—when spelling out words of two syllables is an hourly delight—get him a Bible. I mean a brand new Bible—a nicely bound, well-printed volume, with type a child can bear to read, and with paper strong enough to bear handling. As you value his soul don't impose on him a musty old volume, the property of your grandmother, fished out of the garret with economical intent. When you have bought his Bible (it is better to take him along with you and let him buy it out of his own purse) write his name in it, the date of his birth and every date of interest in his life. This will help him to realize that it is his book and will prepare the way for the truth, which should be early taught, that the message in the Book is a personal one.

This new Bible should have a place provided for it and should be kept in its place, and it should be brought to family prayers every morning by the child himself. Let the morning lesson be chosen with reference to the young reader, who should now join in the alternative reading. It is not necessary, however, that you should always select a passage that the child will understand. Children enjoy many of the Psalms, though they cannot comprehend them, just as some of us older people enjoy high class music which we cannot understand. There are passages which we can read with our hearts when we cannot read them with our heads; such passages you can always choose with safety, for your child's heart is as big as yours.

But if children are to have an abiding interest in the Book they must read it elsewhere than at family prayers. For this personal reading preparation is necessary. Just as soon as a child is able to listen to a simple story he should be told the simple stories of the Bible. Tell them over and over until he can tell them himself. Then when he is ready to read his Bible turn for his first lesson to the narrative with which he is most familiar. Let him discover for himself that it is the very story you have been telling him. Often this simple discovery will of itself bind the heart of the child to the Book. When he has gone thus far your work is largely done. Let him go on with the stories, choosing them for himself under your eye, and do not be in a hurry to start him on another line; he can safely confine himself to the narrative portions of the book until he is old enough to explore beyond them for himself.

A COMMON NEED.

From a private letter we glean a request which is frequently made by mothers, showing a general desire for material of this character:

I was glad of the list of books for children under ten in The Congregationalist of Dec. 5 I am beginning to look up such things for my small daughters. I wonder if there is such a thing as a list of Sunday books, games and toys for quite little children, five and under? Mrs. Colton's Sunday Occupations have been too advanced for us so far.

EDUCATIVE LITERATURE FOR CHILDREN.

A writer in Harper's Bazar deprecates the practice of reading many fairy stories to children and suggests instead such books as Abby Sage Richardson's History of Our Country, or Charles Carleton Coffin's Story of Liberty, containing interesting historical incidents. The wise mother says: "My theory is that a child's mind must be filled with something and that it is wiser and kinder to stock it with what will be of service to him hereafter than with useless material;" and she adds: "Then if my boy wants something wonderful and fairylike in the way of stories I turn him to the tales from Greek mythology. Where will you find anything more fascinatingly marvelous to the youthful mind than the accounts of Niobe and Leda, Io and Prometheus, Daphne, Medusa, Tantalus, etc., as found in Cox's Tales of Ancient Greece?"

The Conversation Corner.

So much interest has been shown in the remarkable story of Pomiuk, the Eskimo boy, printed in the Corner of Nov. 28, that I give you this week later news which I have received about him. You remember that on the receipt of the letter from Dr. Grenfell, of the Deep Sea Mission, telling of the finding of Pomiuk, I wrote him immediately, sending the letter to care of Job Brothers, the famous merchants at St. John's, Newfoundland. They evidently had a chance to forward it at once, perhaps by some vessel going to the coast for "dry fish," and I was surprised by an early reply from him.

S. S. Sir Donald, Anchored in Battle Harbour, Labrador, Nov. 6, 1895.

Dear Mr. Martin: Your letter of Oct. 10 has reached me already. A stray chance put it into my hand today, just as I am leaving for the Straits of Belle Isle. I send answer by the last vessel from the coast. . . . Our Heavenly Father has opened out a work for us here, most thrilling in interest to us who are engaged in it, and above all has allowed us to see fruit in the winning of souls for his kingdom on this dreary shore.

Now about the lad. Thank God, he is better. We had to operate on him again at Indian Harbour and keep the little fellow for some days in a hot bath with antiseptics, for we were afraid he was going to die from pent-up matter. But we managed to borrow a huge iron pot, used for barking nets, and kept up a lot of hot water and kept him under it for many hours at a time. The poor little fellow was so patient and it did him worlds of good, for after it he always rested well. It eased him also of a nasty cough which used to wrack him. On Oct. 20 we took all our patients and all necessary gear from Indian Harbour to Burnt Wood Cove, near Rigolette, in Hamilton Inlet, where we have fitted up a small house for a hospital. My colleague, Dr. Robinson, is living on the Hudson's Bay Company post, and the little building close by is in charge of a very nice, clean Eskimo (Manasseh) and his wife. We have now three Eskimo in-patients there, Benjamin, Salomon (with a badly broken arm, pierced by a bullet—we fear we may not save it)—and Pomiuk.

I was dreadfully sad to say good-by to them. Pomiuk was very happy, among nice Christian people, talking his own tongue, well cared for and fed, the doctor seeing him at least once a day. He knows enough now, I think, about his Saviour to be baptized. Once or twice on the Sir Donald, when he felt better and I was getting him to sleep, he said some prayers of his own accord. A Moravian brother, who got stranded with us at Rigolette in the fall and must stay there until the ice makes and allows him to drive back to Hopedale with dogs, has undertaken to instruct him further, so that before he leaves, if possible, the child will be baptized and receive a new name. The boy will be glad to hear from you, and I am leaving him a letter about your letter to go down the coast by the first dog and mail.

Joe Lucy I saw at Ailik. Yes, he is a good man. Thank God, among the humble dwellers on the coast Christ has now some devoted servants, true as steel, some you would love deeply. . . . I wish it had been in my power to take others, but I could not; my hands were too full and my cabins all occupied. But if you had seen this poor boy as I did, in filth and vermin, covered over with congealed matter, you would praise God for being allowed to help one. Dr. Robinson goes specially to the North this winter. We have arranged for fast dog-teams all along the coast. I have to go and lecture this winter in Canada to raise means to keep the work going, but each year since I began three years ago I promised myself to stay all the year round, and next year I hope to do so. . . .

Yours in his service, W. T. Grenfell.

Joe Lucy, I ought to explain, is an Eskimo whom I got acquainted with at Chicago (and whose kayak I paddled in the Eskimo Village lagoon, although to his great fear that I should "capsize, get wet!"), and I wondered whether he had reached his home. He and Charlotte, his wife, lived at Ailik, about seven hours, they told me, by dog sledge from Hopedale, the Moravian station, and they were Christian converts. I find from the doctor's reports in the Newfoundland papers that the "stranded" missionary was the "house-father" from Hopedale, who had gone to Indian Harbor hospital to take care of Salomon, the wounded man, one of his people. It would seem that this, too, was providential, so that he might teach Pomiuk in his own language. From these same papers I copy other notes which will interest you. One is about the boy's hot bath when the surgeon was summoned back to the shore hospital by the message—received fortunately before he had left the coast—"the little prince is very ill."

The sister informed me all our large water boilers leaked, so we had to devise some way to get hot water. The merchant here, Mr. Smith, kindly volunteered the loan of his barking-pot, a loan I gladly accepted, and twelve strong men slung this over a young tree and marched it up near the house to the hospital. We filled it with water and fenced it around with wood from the wind; we lit a huge fire below it and kept it going all night and all next day. The child has greatly benefited by his prolonged immersion.

The next extract, as you see, refers to an earlier time before he had left the steamer.

. . . We obtained some dry reindeer meat for Pomiuk here. His appetite was improving with his health. He has no pain now, except when he is dressed, and at present he is asleep by my side on the cabinet side with his legs both slung by bandages to picture rings in the deck. He has not lain on his back certainly for two years and several months he spent on his hands and knees, being unable to lie down. Brother Schmidt of Okkak has given him a melodian or concertina, and on this he is generally working out "God save the Queen," or some tune he has heard.

The little prince is quietly sleeping on my bear skin. He is so much better, but is easily frightened. He saw a poor girl the other day have five teeth out at one sitting, and she cried a great deal; since that he has tried to be braver when we dress him. I've been teaching him a little counting, my cartridge belt making an excellent educator. He gets as far as five times five are twenty-five. He still retains his love for "ivik," i. e., walrus. I am glad to say that "bake-apples" (berries) from the hills, which settlers when on board bring to him, share his affections now.

And now I have another letter from Dr. Grenfell, who has arrived at Halifax, on his way to England via New York.

. . . No news from Pomiuk since I wrote you. I shall get some by first dog-mail, but that won't be till next May. . . . Mr. Schmidt, a Moravian missionary, gave the boy a concertina and he used to love to follow the hymns as we sang. I never saw a boy quicker at playing from the ear. (All Eskimos are musical.) He manages "Jesus, lover of my soul," and others, but especially "Over Jordan" from the Christian Choir. He just loved that and I had it in Eskimo, translated by Mr. Schmidt. The chorus goes:

Takpanêle, takpanêle,
Merngotorvikangilak
Siorniorvikarane
Takpanêle, takpanêle
Pillorik pagut illa
Sorairata.

Up in heaven, up in heaven,
There will be no sorrow there,
There will be no parting there,
Up in heaven, up in heaven,
We shall be happy together there,
Forever.

You ask about Pomiuk's keep. Be assured he won't be allowed to want. . . . Several churches have taken a cot to endow in one of the mission hospitals. Your church might like to have a cot in Indian Harbor hospital and call it by some name. The mission is unsectarian. It so happens that the doctor at that hospital these last two years is a Congregationalist—Dr. Willway.

I have more letters but no more room. Yes, our Corner church will take one cot, and perhaps call it the Corner Cot! I have already received about twenty-five dollars, and I know others will want the privilege of helping that dear boy, whom God has so loved as to seek out and to save on that wild and desolate coast. The picture was taken by Dr. Grenfell as the boy lay on deck with the polar bear skin over him. I will have the same photograph put on a receipt and send it to any contributor who incloses a stamp. If any of the children are stamp collectors, I will add Newfoundland stamps which have come in my correspondence—let them tell what ones they have now. I wrote Pomiuk a letter and sent it to Quebec to go by the komatik-mail. I hope he will get it next spring. May God spare his life and give him a happy winter!

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

The Dog-teams of the North. Dr. Willway of the Deep Sea Mission gives in the London magazine of the society the narrative of his last winter's trip of "twelve hundred miles on the Labrador with komatik and dogs":

We left Cartwright for Rigolette behind a splendid team of fourteen dogs. This was my first experience with an Eskimo driver. It was exceedingly interesting to watch the manner of his driving. Sitting in front, with a twenty to thirty-foot whip beside him, he is constantly talking to the dogs as they trot along, seldom urging them beyond a trot unless we strike exceptionally good going. Every dog knows his voice and he knows the name of each, calling to one and another as occasion may require. I may say that each dog has a separate trace, connected with a light skin harness. Each trace is of different length, so the dogs can on occasion trail one behind the other, or, where the ground is open, spread out like a fan. . . . You see that slack trace? Listen as Adam hurls whole volumes of Eskimo objurgations at the offender; but the dog is obstinate, so Adam uncoils the whip and, either getting off or sitting well forward and hauling in some of the trace, he brings his hand forward with a quick half turn of the wrist. Crack! That dog must have thought an earthquake struck him by the way he jumped. Now the whip is coiled up again and the dog is careful to keep his trace well strained. With a good team such as ours, the whip is seldom needed, unless the dogs fall to fighting—a performance they are remarkably fond of, fully justifying Dr. Watts's opinion of canine character. The whip is made of strips of tough sealskin, sewn together and tapering from the butt to the lash; finally, the butt is lashed firmly to a stout handle of wood, some eight or ten inches long. . . . I did manage to hit a dog once and I think I was as surprised as the dog was!

How the Dogs Plow. Dr. Grenfell's report in the same magazine describes his visit, last July, to the Hudson's Bay post at Northwest River, far up Melville Bay, so far in the interior as to have a short but civilized summer:

A steamer seldom, if ever, comes up to this place, and our arrival was an important event. Soon we were ashore, looking at the gardens and houses. There were plenty of potatoes, rhubarb and turnips, while mignonette, chrysanthemums, sunflowers and other familiar plants were growing in the sun. The temperature in the vessel was seventy degrees in the shade at midday. Mr. Cotter, the agent, had manfully attempted to plow his preserves, employing the dogs tied in with sealskin traces for that purpose. One man had to march solemnly in front dragging a seal's flipper to entice the dogs, while another had to shove and guide the plow.

Why Not Use Reindeer? Dr. Grenfell strongly favors a substitute for the dogs:

It does seem a thousand pities the horrible dogs are not discarded in favor of domesticated deer. Sir John Schutz, Governor of Winnipeg, is making strenuous efforts to introduce their use in sleighs. He writes that a herd of two hundred kept in the State have increased in captivity to three hundred, and are to be parceled out in lots of about twenty for experimental purposes. The dirt, the smell, the danger, the noise, and the great difficulty of feeding the dogs would all be obviated. These deer are clean, sweet, gentle, quiet, feeding on the universally distributed moss, and, being larger and stronger, could travel much farther in a day. Also settlers would then be able to grow vegetables and keep sheep or hens, which now can only be done where the dogs permit.

The Experiment in Alaska. The Governor of Alaska reports that there are nine hundred domesticated reindeer in that territory in successful use. At the last meeting of the American Missionary Association, Mr. Lopp, missionary from Cape Prince of Wales, said in his address:

In addition to training these Eskimos to read and write, we are now training a few of them to herd the domestic reindeer which have been introduced from Siberia through the general agent of education, Dr. Sheldon Jackson. In the fall of 1894 the Government gave our mission 100 reindeer, and five of our school boys have herded those reindeer during the last year and they have been very successful. The herd now numbers 171, and the boys think a great deal of the deer and are hoping that the herd will increase.

What a royal team Santa Claus must have to drive on Christmas Eve in that country!

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Jan. 19–25. Secrets of Strong Lives. Luke 7: 19–28.

"What is the secret of your life?" asked some one once of Charles Kingsley. "Tell me that I may make mine noble also." His only reply was, "I had a friend." Who that friend was is perfectly plain to the reader of the delightful biography of the noble English preacher and writer, and Kingsley was not the only man in public life who was able to do his work far better because of another life that stood close to his. Indeed, the first secret of a strong life is dependence upon a stronger. Go back to the first century of this era and who of all its prominent figures impresses us as on the whole the strongest man of his time? Undoubtedly the apostle Paul. But behind Paul was Christ, and back even of the strong Son of God was God himself.

Human friendship is a mighty tonic to those who have entered at all into the richness of the experience, and he is to be pitied who has not some one to whom to go when oppressed with a sense of weakness and ignorance. But the ground of all human friendship is the divine life, and we should not receive much of enduring value from those whom we love unless they were being replenished by a source higher than themselves.

But it is almost equally necessary, also, to ally ourselves with weaker lives than ours. We do not become healthy and vigorous in body if we eat but do not exercise, and we shall never become spiritual giants if our lot is cast altogether with those who are truer and nobler than ourselves. That is one reason why there are so many weak and helpless and needy persons in the world. We, who may count ourselves strong, need them as much as they need us. Think how a little baby coming into a home brings out unknown strength and hitherto hidden beauty of character in the mother who broods over it. Remember how a crippled child, introduced into a circle of romping, thoughtless school children, becomes sometimes a blessing to them as they take it under their protection. It would be a hard, rough world if there were not some delicate flowers to need careful tending, some bruised and broken lives that need to be enfolded in strong, protecting arms. Perhaps, from one point of view, it is the sickness and feebleness and need that are rife in the world today that keeps it from going back into barbarism and from having its heart eaten out by selfish luxury.

These two simple suggestions then are offered: Ally your life with some one stronger, with the strongest, even with the Christ of God, then tie it to somebody weaker. Grow strong by communion with God and by service of your fellowmen.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

The support of a baby in a foundling asylum until he shall be adopted has been assumed by a junior society in St. Louis.

Twenty-five Italians from a Boston mission visited a Chelsea society and took charge of part of the meeting in their own language. A society will probably be organized in the mission.

A souvenir representing a lily, bearing the name and station of a missionary and a fact connected with his work, was given each member at a missionary social of a junior society in Washington, D. C.

A Philadelphia society, with a membership of 215, has an average attendance of 500 at its meetings. ——In the First Church, Snohomish, Wn., the pastor has formed a prayer circle made up of members of the World's Christian Endeavor Prayer Chain.

Two evangelists have been secured by Montana societies to carry on meetings in the leading towns of the State in co-operation with the pastors and societies.——New Mexico now has a prisoners' society in the penitentiary at Santa Fé. It started with twelve active and six associate members.

A ministerial educational fund has been started by the Texas societies among the Disciples. During the past year $1,500 was pledged for the purpose, and seventeen young men have thus been assisted in studying for the ministry. As the money is paid out in loans the amount bids fair to grow from year to year.

A Wisconsin society has a committee of one, whose especial work it is to give cheer and help to the old people at the church services and in their homes.——Fort Wingate, New Mexico, where there have been no religious services on Sunday, now has Christian Endeavor meetings attended by fifty of the soldiers.

Among the Friends the Endeavorers number about one-fifth of the entire membership of the denomination. During the past year those in California and Ohio gave for missions $1 each, on the average, and those in Canada $1.50, while fifteen that are now engaged in foreign work are partly or wholly supported by those remaining at home.

At Carr's Lane Chapel, Birmingham, Eng., in order to assist the Sunday school committee in looking up absentees, the residence of each active member of the society is marked on a large map of the city and any case to be investigated is assigned to some member that lives near, thus insuring the greatest economy of time.

The prisoners in the Pittsfield jail were so interested in the meetings held there during the Massachusetts convention that they have asked for others of a like nature, and the local union has appointed an evangelistic committee which arranges for a monthly service. The good citizenship committee of the union undertakes to look after the prisoners after they are discharged, a work that the county commissioners of Berkshire County have suggested that the Endeavorers should take up.

LESSON FOR JAN. 19. Luke 3: 15-22.

THE MINISTRY OF JOHN THE BAPTIST.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

From the Mount of Olives one may look down on the Dead Sea and the plain to the north of it. The descent, over barren hills, is nearly 4,000 feet. To the east of the valley is a green, serpentine line which marks the course of the Jordan. On the west side, nearest to Jerusalem, in John's time stood Jericho, with Herod's splendid summer palace. The journey from Jerusalem to Jericho can be made in five hours.

That wide plain was the scene of John's preaching. A considerable part of it was then occupied by groves of olives and palms, in the midst of which were villas. Now it is barren, sandy, desolate, dotted with thorn bushes. Green thickets line the river banks, with poplar and tarfa trees. On the higher land grass grows among the stones, which dries when the rains have ceased. When it is set on fire, scorpions and vipers crawl down to hide themselves in the thickets by the river.

John began to preach unheralded. But he proclaimed that the wrath of God was coming on the Jewish nation for its sins, and soon all classes, startled and interested, began to come and hear him. He preached repentance, declaring that that only would save the nation from destruction. He told them that their one hope lay in their experiencing such sorrow for sin as would lead them to renounce it and lead righteous lives. Pharisees and Sadducees came down from Jerusalem, the one class interested in their theological disputes, the other in holding on to their religious and political offices. John pointed to the vipers wriggling down to the Jordan, fleeing from the burning grass, and said to these wrangling Jews, "Ye offspring of vipers, who warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" But they came; and he told them they could not rely on their inheritance as Jews to save them, but must themselves bring forth in their lives fruits worthy of repentance. Tax gatherers, soldiers and others came, all asking what they should do to show their repentance. He advised them to help those more needy than themselves, to be honest, to be courteous and kind in their treatment of others and to be content with their wages.

But the people were not satisfied with this preaching, nor was John either. He told them that neither his baptism nor his teaching would accomplish the reformation that would save the nation; but that, besides all that he said and did, he was preparing the way for another messenger who would establish among them the new kingdom which he declared was at hand. They wondered if John was not the promised Messiah. He told them frankly that he was not, but that the Messiah, or Christ, was soon coming, was already among them, though he did not know him yet. He declared that while his baptism was with water, the coming One would baptize them with the Holy Spirit and with fire. The symbol which John used to signify cleansing from sin dwindled into insignificance beside the fire of holy love which would consume sin and fill the obedient life of the believer with a new spirit from God.

John announced also that the coming One would choose his followers according to their character. The world was to be his threshing floor. He would bring a winnowing fan in his hand—his power of discerning and his authority for selecting good characters from bad, the truly repentant from the hypocrites, according to the tests which John had already applied in his preaching. All men are wheat or chaff. The Christ knows the wheat and will garner it. He knows the chaff and will destroy it.

This, then, was the summary of the great herald's ministry. It rectified men's mistakes. It pointed out their sins. It summoned them to repentance and showed how repentance was wrought by deeds. It called on men to make public declaration of repentance by presenting themselves for baptism, and it promised to them the speedy advent of the Christ who would test their repentance, and, if it proved genuine, would give them a new life and admit them into his new kingdom; while those who did not repent, or whose repentance proved false, he would destroy. This preparatory gospel has been rounded out by Christ's life and teaching and death and resurrection and ascension—the gospel in its fullness which we are called to preach.

The purpose of John's preaching was to introduce Christ to his nation, and the manner of John's disappearance from life, though it occurred some time later, Luke here states in a single sentence. The consummation of John's career is presented in the baptism of Jesus.

The tidings of the stirring words spoken near the Jordan spread far and wide through Palestine. They were discussed in shops and homes, on the streets and in the synagogues. They roused young Jews to new hopes, and to learn more of the wonderful preacher who many thought might be the Christ. The tidings reached Nazareth and, probably with a company of young men, the carpenter Jesus threw aside his tools, made his way over the hills and down to the Jordan valley. How he was moved by the preacher, by the sense of sin that filled the multitude and by the hope that kindled in them as they were baptized to enter the new society which had been announced to them, cannot be known. Not because of his sin did Jesus determine to accept this symbolic cleansing, for he was sinless, but because he would enter, with his nation, into the new era which he came to establish. So he, too, with the others, came to the prophet to be baptized. They were cousins. Whether or not they had ever met before is not stated. But the recognition was instant and complete. Spirit met spirit, and the last prophet of the old dispensation knew that his successor, the first prophet of the new, was before him. It was by the command of Jesus that John baptized him, and the two men, in that supreme crisis in the life of one of them, in that crisis in the history of the world, had testimony as clear to their exalted minds as could be given to the senses of vision and hearing that the God of Israel was calling the young carpenter of Nazareth to the mission which prophets had foretold, not only to the nation, but to the world. They heard a voice in the skies proclaiming Jesus as the Son of God. They saw a halo, in form like a dove, descend and brood over the young man's head. The kingdom prophesied had received its king. The new era had begun. By an unmistakable call Jesus was summoned to his great mission, and a new life opened to him.

The baptism in the Jordan was the gateway through which he was ushered into his public work. From that hour he appears to be impelled by the Holy Spirit to the mighty deeds and thrilling words which have wrought such supreme changes among men. He went into the wilderness impelled by the Holy Spirit [chap. 4: 1]. He returned from the wilderness to teach men in the power of the Spirit [chap. 4: 14, 15]. He wrought miracles by the power of the Spirit [Matt. 12: 28]. He bestowed on his disciples, after his resurrection, the Holy Spirit, and bade them wait for the baptism of the Spirit, and said that the Spirit should remain with his disciples forever.

So the ministry begun that day is continued by us, the power being given to us in measure which was given to him without measure; and it will go on with increasing triumphs till the world shall have been conquered to himself.

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

THE UNKNOWN FUTURE.

At the threshold of 1896 we find any attempt to forecast the progress of the kingdom in missionary lands introduces us into such a maze of contemporaneous events that we are appalled before the social and political problems with which the cause of missions is inseparably involved. In Turkey, it is almost needless to say, the situation is critical in the extreme, the only ray of light in the darkness of crime and suffering being the faith and heroism of our missionaries and their loyal adherents. Only less uncertain is the position of Christianity in China, which has seen such brutal massacres of missionaries during the past year, to which Rev. Henry Kingman referred in our issue last week, and in Madagascar under its new rulers; while in self-confident Japan the religious problem is still far from its solution. South America is in its usual state of unrest and cannot hope for relief of its spiritual destitution until a more liberal and enlightened spirit takes possession of its governments. Since the war has ended the prospect for missions in Korea has been brightening and new centers are being occupied by the small force of workers on the ground, while even in Tibet the outlook is more cheering as negotiations between Great Britain and Tibet give hope for an open door in the near future. In Uganda, now under British control, Christian instruction and preaching are demanded with increasing eagerness, and Siam offers an unusually favorable field for evangelistic work.

Missionary enterprise in the homeland is not without serious perplexities and uncertainties, but the mission boards are trying to hold their own, though lacking sufficient support from the churches. In this rapid survey perhaps we have dwelt too much upon the dim uncertainties of the situation. There are many other signs of the times which confirm us in the belief that the missionary outlook, however dark and lowering the clouds may appear in the immediate horizon, is bright—bright as the promises of God. It is well now and then to have the broad facts of the status of Protestant foreign missions placed before us, and now we are able to turn for our encouragement to a missionary plant embracing throughout the world 5,055 stations, 17,813 out-stations, with 11,574 missionaries, 70,033 native laborers and 1,157,668 communicants, at a total cost of $14,441,807.

SHEATS LAW NOT ENFORCED.

Our readers will recall the decision of the A. M. A. to test the constitutionality of the Sheats act by continuing the instruction of white and colored youth in the normal school at Orange Park, Fla. At latest accounts, however, no arrests had been made. The principal of the institution writes that he understands there is no money to carry on the case and it will probably have to wait until the April term. The county sheriff called on him to make some inquiries, which he did politely and respectfully, assuring Mr. Rowlee that if compelled to serve papers of arrest it should be done in a gentlemanly manner. It is currently reported that the legislature made no appropriation to enforce the act and that Mr. Sheats has given out word that he has done all he could in the case and must now lay further responsibility upon the local county authorities. It is also said, however, that the new law is not popular with the people of eastern Florida, and it is not improbable that funds will not be forthcoming to prosecute a suit against the school.

Rev. J. W. Harding, formerly of Longmeadow, Mass., now in Florida, in a long letter to The Springfield Republican, describes interestingly a recent visit to the Orange Park School. He says: "On entering the main assembly-room there is everything to impress one not only with the high standard of the teaching, but with the exemplary order and good behavior of the pupils. The colored pupils sit apart from the white, there being only nine of the latter. Several who attended last year have been kept out because of the Sheats Law, but not from any dissatisfaction with the school on the part of their parents." One or two Northerners, however, are strongly opposed to the school, one of them being a Massachusetts man who is in close communication with Mr. Sheats and whom the A. M. A. authorities have reason to know is acting as a general spy over the institution.

The correspondent of The Republican, after showing that the normal scope of the Orange Park School makes it very helpful to the superintendent of public education in providing competent Negro teachers, calls attention to the illogical position of Mr. Sheats in his recent biennial report. In this document he says, respecting the summer schools or normal institutes: "In counties where the number of Negro teachers was too small to give them a separate institute, they were encouraged to attend the institutes for the whites and to occupy the part of the building assigned to them, which they cheerfully did at every place." When asked whether his bill, which explicitly forbids white and Negro youth being taught in the same building and by the same teachers, will put an end to this practice, he replies: "Nothing in the law will prevent in the future as in the past, all being done that we are able to do for the better preparation of colored teachers for their responsible position. Separate institutes and summer schools or mixed ones, as the circumstances may dictate, will be established as before. It is the mixing of minors in schools that we fight." Mr. Sheats should be informed that a large proportion of the Negro students in the Orange Park School are not minors and are preparing to become teachers.

PEN AND SCISSORS.

We welcome the American Board Almanac of Missions for 1896 as an old and valued friend. It is as attractively printed as ever and even more indispensable as a reference book, since its general missionary statistics are much fuller than last year.

We are sorry to learn that the Moravian Church reports a deficiency in the missionary treasury amounting to $28,725. The causes are a falling off of income, mainly in the shape of legacies, and an increase in the expenditure of several fields. This is due largely to healthy growth and necessary extension in such fields in South and Central Africa and Dutch Guiana in South America.

A Pittsfield C. E. Society has originated a unique plan for a missionary meeting. The exercises were to be modeled after the proceedings of a court, in which twelve jurymen should consider the question which of three factors, evangelistic, medical missions or the printing press, accomplishes the best results in India. A judge was to preside and each factor to be represented by two lawyers. Here is a suggestion worth noting.

After five years of arduous missionary toil in Uganda Rev. G. K. Baskerville and Mr. G. L. Pilkington have been warmly welcomed by the Church Missionary Society on their return to England. The missionaries report that Uganda is perfectly quiet and peaceful, with no sign of trouble in any part of the country. Statements of the most gratifying kind were given of the eagerness of the natives both to receive and also to carry the message of the gospel to neighbering tribes.

In a letter from Aniwa, New Hebrides, published in an English journal, Dr. Paton says: "You will be glad to hear that the savage-looking chief who said, 'Me die for missionary: me too much like a missionary teach a me,' now has a missionary. I gave $2,500 from my book to pay the passage of himself and wife and give him an outfit. He is an able young medical man who also took the course of study for the ministry and, with an assistant, is now organizing a hospital on his island and has already accomplished wonderful results there. I think he has seven teachers out at different hamlets, and thirty-seven villages have placed themselves under Christian instruction." Dr. Paton says an urgent demand for missionaries and teachers continues to come from many points. A new mission vessel, with steam auxiliary power, for work among the islands, is now being built in Scotland.

Baptist Union in Financial Straits. The Baptist mission boards are confronted with as serious financial problems as are their Congregational brethren. Two years ago the Baptist Missionary Union reported a debt of $203,595, the result of the hard times. Immense reductions in expenses were accordingly made, the appropriations of last year being $109,000 less than those of the previous twelve months. Nevertheless, the union was obliged to face last spring a debt of $189,956. This called for still greater retrenchments which, however, have not accomplished the desired effect, as the union finds itself still threatened with a large debt at the end of the present year. Instead of the hoped-for increase in the receipts of the churches, their donations during eight months have fallen off to the extent of $21,738. Estimating the receipts from legacies and other sources for the remainder of the year the same as last year, together with a continued reduction in donations from the churches, it is feared the union will have a deficiency of $221,995 by March 31, 1896, the close of its financial year.

CHARACTER IN LITERATURE.

In an address before the University of Wisconsin, President Adams affirmed that in literature, as in life, it is not great ability or great learning that succeeds, but great character. After illustrations drawn from the classics, he says of certain modern novels:

We love the beggar in the Antiquary, and we hate Dousterswivel, apart from all considerations of rank and learning, because the one, though he has to beg his herring and his hunch of bread, is all sweetness and is ready for all service, while the other, with all his learning, turns it only to his own selfish advantage. It would be a long journey to go through Scott's novels and put them all to the same test, but the result would everywhere be the same.

Is it too much to say that in the works of Dickens, of Thackeray and of George Eliot our interest is at all times led into admiration or aversion by the moral qualities rather than the intellectual powers of the various characters? Goodness and rightness must be rewarded, and badness and wrongness must be punished. You know in advance, as soon as a great character is developed, that in the end the author will somehow arrange so that it will be well with him. You know also that fate pursues villainy and sooner or later will overtake it. Bill Sikes is too bad to live, and after running to the top of the house to escape his pursuers he ties a rope about the chimney and is putting the other end girded into a noose beneath his arms to let himself down, when, on seeing the staring eyes of the girl he had murdered, he lost his balance, the noose caught him about the neck, he fell nearly to the ground, and "the chimney stood it bravely." Even George Eliot, after Maggie Tulliver had passed the night on the boat, could not satisfy the eternal requirements except by drowning her in the flood. The bishop's son, in The Deemster, repents of his hundred wrongs only after he has taken the life of his best friend; but the most bitter and prolonged repentance and the most abject penance are enough only to bring him for a single moment into the sight of the promised land, without permitting him to enter.

But if crime and wrong must be punished, that steadfast devotion to right, against which the assaults of temptation beat in vain, must be rewarded. We do not see how Ralph Ray can break the toils that are thrown around him. He does not try to break them, for, though innocent, he can do so only by throwing suspicion on the name of his dead father. He refuses to lie by pleading "guilty," or to throw an implication upon the name of his father by pleading "not guilty." He persists in silence and comes upon the gallows. You feel that it would be an unpardonable violence to every moral sense to bring a man with such a life to an ignominious death. Of course the needed bit of information comes just in time to restore him to life and the happiness he so richly deserves.

It is in this way that the creators of literature who feed our souls and solace our weary hours pay tribute to the ever present sense of right and wrong. Everywhere they recognize the pre-eminence, the predominance of character in life.

UNINTELLIGENT ZEAL.

There is a deal of wisdom in a recent saying of Dean Paget of Oxford:

If men take pains about two things they are not likely to go far wrong. The first is to try patiently and reverently to understand, so far as they can, the life, the troubles, the aspirations, the forces of the age in which they live; the second is to maintain steadily their own communion with God, their realization of his presence, their attention to the disclosures of his will, their expectation of his judgment.

It takes thought and time and study and self-discipline to understand one's own day at all; but such understanding is necessary to the discernment and doing of one's work, to resisting or advancing rightly. We may have, perhaps, at times to resist uncompromisingly; only let it not be unappreciatively. For the wisdom or unwisdom of our policy may count for less in the long run than the justice and charity with which we chose and held it. It is the carelessness of antagonism, not its resoluteness, that provokes men to resentment and vehemence; and unintelligent despondency may do as little good as unintelligent zeal.

MOHAMMEDAN FANATICISM.

To those who have never been in Turkish dominions it is almost impossible to give an adequate idea of the extent of religious fanaticism which affects all local relations and finds expression in all business and social life. Dr. G. R. Leavitt, in the Independent, furnishes an illustration of the impression which this spirit of religious hatred makes on travelers. Dr. Leavitt, a member of The Congregationalist's Oriental party, thus describes one of their experiences in crossing the Anti-Lebanon range last April:

In the mountains a traveler is only safe with a guard of armed men. The journey across Anti-Lebanon is dangerous. Two weeks before a small party, with their dragoman, were robbed of everything valuable in their camp at a Druse village where they were resting at noon. Our party stopped at a large Druse village at the top of the mountain pass. Hermon, white with snow, lay just behind the steep hill on which the village was built. We were surrounded at once by the men of the town, fine-looking, bold, fierce men, all armed. They offered for sale knives and daggers. They drew them out of their brass sheaths, long, ugly, crooked blades. Within a month these men had assaulted a Maronite village and murdered from twenty to thirty of the inhabitants. A man in offering me a crooked dagger described in pantomime, most revoltingly vivid, how he had used it in this massacre. He showed how he plunged it into a man, and twisted and pulled it up and down and sidewise, how the blood spurted, how the man fell and wallowed on the ground, and the agony of his dying, to the last gurgle in his throat. As he threw his head back and imitated the dying convulsion, with a fierce gleam in his eyes he offered the knife again to me. And the circle of men and boys about him shouted in exultation, as if they saw the bloody scene re-enacted, and triumphed once more over the cross.

BOOK REVIEWS.

RENAN'S HISTORY OF ISRAEL.

The ninth and tenth books of the late M. Renan's History of the People of Israel are issued in one volume. They cover the period of Jewish independence and that of the Roman rule over Judea. The rulers and their policies, the religious parties and their rivalries, the religious and philosophical literature and its authors, all are described in the picturesque style characteristic of the author, although there are fewer brilliant passages than in his other writings. The book is more a mere chronicle of facts than most of his productions, yet it does not lack interest. There is in it little of that attention to collateral details—the social life of the people, for instance—to which most historians give some space, and the main purpose of the work is adhered to rigidly and exclusively.

The story is told clearly and with scholarly impartiality. The point of view is that of the analytical critic, who dissects and combines his materials coldly and calmly but skillfully. One wishes that he had brought out more effectively the romance of the Maccabean struggle, for example. The subject of his principal enthusiasm is the striking and reprehensible career of Herod; and, by the way, he declares that Herod died before the birth of Christ, so that the story of the murder of the infants at Bethlehem is untrue!

The most interesting and important chapter is the concluding one, in which is summed up the substance of the whole ten books. It declares Christianity to be an evolution from Judaism and destined to give birth in the future to some new and different religion, probably Greek in general character, that is scientific, rational and without revelation. Yet there always will be evident a trace of Israel. He concedes that there is "much historic truth in the gospels" and exalts the nobility of the character of Jesus. But Jesus was not divine and belief in his resurrection was due to a hallucination, as was also the conversion of St. Paul!

This book and the whole history is of great interest as illustrating the methods and conclusions of a zealous example of one school of modern French criticism. But its results often are harder to be accepted than those which it rejects. It will not make much impression upon the world. [Roberts Bros. $2.50.]

CONSTANT'S NAPOLEON.

The Private Life of Napoleon, as found in the Memoirs of Constant, who was the emperor's first valet de chambre, has been before the public since 1830. At that time the publication made a decided sensation. Naturally the estimate of the great emperor's character made by so intimate an associate as his valet, and one who had so much to do with his private life, was of intense interest to the world, and there must have been still living a large number of people who remembered Napoleon personally. The interest in such a work at the present time is different, yet it is none the less real and great. Within a few years public attention has been fixed upon the emperor afresh. More interesting and careful studies of his character have been made than ever before, and the public is in a frame of mind just now to appreciate the revelations of this reprint of Constant's manuscripts.

Its characteristic feature is that already suggested, and, so to speak, it reveals Napoleon's life from the inside. The author has made no pretense of veiling his master's faults and weaknesses, yet shows a warm admiration for the many great and noble qualities of his hero. All readers who care for European history, or for the biographies of great men, and all who value the pictures of life which have to do with everyday matters and with the hours in which men are natural and not on parade will prize this volume. The book has been published in a neat and handsome form, with an introduction from the pen of Imbert De St. Amand. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $5.00.]

STORIES.

One of the most popular books of the season, as indicated by certain investigations which have been made, is Titus, a Comrade of the Cross [David C. Cook Pub. Co. $1.00] by Florence M. Kingsley. It was first published a year ago and the manuscript took a prize of one thousand dollars offered by the publishers of the book for the best descriptive narrative about Christ and his times. The story proved to be a great favorite last year, and with good reason. It holds its own this year in the public good will and this edition, which is simple yet tasteful and prettily illustrated, will add to popular interest in it.

It took us longer than usual to become interested in The Years That the Locust Hath Eaten [Macmillan & Co. $1.25], by Annie E. Holdsworth, but in time the unusual power and pathos of the story secured their inevitable hold upon us. It is a remarkable book, a study of contrasted selfishness and self-forgetfulness in certain respects unique, and the atmosphere of sadness, which deepens into gloom as the story goes on, somehow after all does not veil the bright, hopeful features of the narrative or leave the reader depressed. It is a story of common people in common scenes and yet the people are anything but common and the common scenes have their comedy and tragedy as truly as any drama ever performed to order. Many will not like the book; those who do like it will rank it very high.

The Master Mosaic Workers [Little, Brown & Co. $1.50] is from the pen of George Sand and has been translated by Charlotte C. Johnston. It is a sketch of Venetian life in the time of Titian and Tintoretto. The author has displayed her characteristic and remarkable skill in this study of the early mosaic workers, describing their individual characteristics, their rivalries and the features of the time in which they lived. As a historical sketch the book is worthy of sincere respect and warm praise, and, as a mere novel, although oddly enough only one or two women are mentioned, and those in the most subordinate and indirect manner, it is above the average. Of course, the peculiar features of the author's literary style, which have helped to win for her her conceded pre-eminence in literature, are clearly perceptible in these pages and the book must be, as it deserves to be, a real favorite.

Frederick [Macmillan & Co. $1.25], by L. B. Walford, surprises the reader agreeably by the manner in which its unpretending and, at first, somewhat unpromising plot develops interest even to the point of moderate excitement. It is a sweet and wholesome story of English rural life and the only flaw is the villainy of the villain, who is rather too stagey for his surroundings. Mrs. Walford's many accustomed readers will receive this new book of hers with genuine satisfaction.

Messrs. Lamson, Wolffe & Co. have brought out a new and very pretty edition, in the modern reproduction of the antique style, of Dr. Edward Everett Hale's famous little story, My Double and How He Undid Me [75 cents]. The genial humor of the narrative and the practical pith which it contains deserve being helped on to immortality thus, and this edition cannot fail to be a success, as it deserves to be.

A very different kind of a book, yet in its way almost as interesting, is The Black Lamb [J. B. Lippincott. $1.25], by Anna R. Brown. It is a New York story, chiefly about young Americans, although certain Englishmen are prominent and there is a blending of dash and adventure; and business and journalism receive a tinge of theosophic and, in a way, fascinating interest, and the narrative, if not always as probable as it might be, never veers so far away from probability as to disturb the trained reader, and certainly is fresh and forceful. The strength of the book lies chiefly in its portrayals of character and these are very well done.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Mrs. B. M. Sherman has translated a work by Albert Pulitzer called The Romance of Prince Eugene [Dodd, Mead & Co. $5.00]. It bears the sub-title An Idyl of the Time of Napoleon First. Mr. Pulitzer, although undertaking to write a romance, found it necessary to write a history, and, in spite of his protestations that his work is a love story and not a biography, the reader will find the historical element more conspicuous. Nevertheless, the romantic element is prominent, and the hero and heroine are most attractive personalities. Prince Eugene himself, the son of the Empress Josephine, certainly had a brilliant and an honorable career, and his wife, the Princess Augusta of Bavaria, was worthy of him and they were exceptionally happy in their mutual union and for the most part in the circumstances of their life. Mr. Pulitzer has marshaled the thrilling facts in their career with sympathetic fervor and also with much literary finish and style, and the two volumes form a charming work. There are a few illustrations and one finds in these pages one of the most charming of the many pictures which have been drawn having for their subject the Napoleonic period of history.

Thomas Hughes has been one of the best known of Englishmen to Americans ever since he was a young man and wrote School Days at Rugby, and the American interest in his volume, Vacation Rambles [Macmillan & Co. $1.75], will be gratifying to him, we have no doubt. He has been something of a globe trotter, having traversed various parts of Europe and having made two visits to this country. His custom has been to write home once or twice a month and his letters have been preserved, and now have been edited and issued in a book. His famous lecture, "John to Jonathan," delivered in Boston, Oct. 11, 1870, forms the concluding chapter. Mr. Hughes is a keen observer and a lively narrator, and throughout his pages the same homely, practical common sense and sympathy with others appears which characterized his famous juvenile volume so strongly. His various wanderings in this country are especially interesting to Americans and his account of the attempt to found a colony in Rugby, Tenn., is interesting. The book makes no pretension to preaching but is throughout so manly and wholesome in its sympathy with true religion that the reader will get great benefit from it in more than one way.

It is high time that full justice was done to the achievements of Marcus Whitman, and here is another book describing his noble and permanently useful work in the Northwest. It is The Story of Marcus Whitman [Pres. Board of Pub. & S. S. Work. $1.00] by Rev. J. G. Craighead, D.D. It tells the familiar story of the career of Whitman and the saving of the Northwest in a short but effective fashion, and brings out well the value of his special missionary endeavors.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Prof. John Bascomb has entitled his latest book Social Theory [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.75]. It is a grouping of social facts and principles, a study of sociology. The author excels in definition and in the clear marshaling of facts which he has gathered bearing upon the successive topics which his orderly plan enumerates. This is not a book to be read through connectedly so much as to be studied and referred to, nevertheless it is a continuous treatise and its outline indicates a definite and natural progress of thought. In the first part customs are considered as factors in sociology, customs civic, religious, miscellaneous; then economics are treated similarly, then civics, then ethics and finally religion. Naturally in the course of this discussion a large number of collateral topics are suggested and are touched upon briefly. There is not space in a book of this size for an elaborate discussion of sub-heads, but such matters as the political rights of women, the relation of politics and church, divorce, religious conditions, the service and the evils of the press, single tax, hours of labor, profit sharing, sound currency, pauperism, etc., are brought up, considered and then dismissed, in each case the reader having been given in terse and compact form the results of long study and reflection on the part of the author. The book is useful, therefore, as a source of suggestion and as a reference book and also is adapted to use as a textbook.

One seldom comes across a more thoughtful and rewarding treatise than Anarchy and Government [T. Y. Crowell & Co. 75 cents], an inquiry in fundamental politics by W. M. Salter. The author takes the term anarchy in its strictly literal sense, meaning the mere absence of government and not an opposition to established government. He goes below the surface of the subject and brings out with unusual skill the possibilities of an anarchical state of things and of a definite government. He shows that anarchy in this sense of the term has much which is admirable and desirable about it, much more than many people probably will realize until they think about it. Many current topics are touched upon with shrewd sense and pertinence, yet the author is chary of declaring too many conclusions. The book deserves to be read and thought over and is a plea for nationalization to a considerable extent. There is nothing in it to which the most loyal friend of good order and morality can object. It is a book which, unlike many, makes a real contribution to the reader's wisdom on its subject.

Mr. F. J. Stimson delivered four lectures last July at the Plymouth School of Ethics. They have been reprinted in a little volume bearing the title Labor in Its Relation to Law [Charles Scribner's Sons. 75 cents]. They outline the history of the laws of labor, they describe the employer's contract and comment upon it, they discuss strikes and boycotts and they offer a forecast of the future. They consist largely of a careful and discriminating summary of legislation and of the legitimate inferences and results of legislation. They also go into the reasons of the thing and deal with the subject in a thoroughly sensible, candid and kindly spirit which both laborer and employer must appreciate. We understand the book to be a prelude to a more elaborate discussion of the same central theme by Mr. Stimson, which will appear in due time.

Probably Mr. H. S. Olcott, the author of Old Diary Leaves [G. P. Putnam's Sons $2.00], in which he undertakes to tell the true story of the Theosophical Society, will be surprised if he ever realizes what sort of an impression his chapters make upon the mind of an unprejudiced reader of ordinary intelligence. If anything could convince one of the dreary emptiness of theosophy and the conspicuous worthlessnes of the claims which have been made in behalf of its prophets it would be the account of it here given by its high priest. Any system of belief must be a failure which does not inspire its prophets to attain to a higher level of intellectual and spiritual attainment than that here reached; and when one founder of the society plainly reveals his conviction of the constitutional selfishness of the other and frankly portrays her as a coarse, vulgar and frequently profane woman, and when the only justification of the claim to the supernatural seems to be the asserted performance of inexplicable acts, and when it is recalled that apparently trustworthy investigators have declared that they have discovered the mechanical means by which Madame Blavatsky and her associates accomplished many of their seemingly miraculous performances, it is not strange that confidence in theosophy and its representatives should be denied. This narrative, which is exceedingly long and tedious, would do much to kill public interest in theosophy, but such a dull and pointless book is not likely to be widely read. However, theosophy can be trusted to dispose of itself in due time.

Mr. J. R. Spears has been a newspaper correspondent for some time, and as a reporter of The New York Sun he visited the coast of Terra del Fuego and Patagonia in 1894. His various letters to the Sun have been edited and now make a graphic narrative, The Gold Diggings of Cape Horn [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50]. The region described is not as completely out of the world as it used to be only a few years ago, but is rapidly becoming familiar and is being tinctured by the influences of civilization. Mr. Spears made a thorough personal investigation of the various settlements and his book contains much valuable information about mining, agriculture, cattle raising, fishing and the various peoples, native or immigrant, who there dwell. It is in a newspaper style and it does not profess to be anything else than newspaper work put together, but it is good work of its kind and the kind is not to be despised. The chief criticism which we feel disposed to make probably will not impress Mr. Spears very much because ours is a religious journal, but, unless we are much mistaken, it is likely to be made also by the fairest and most careful secular reader. It is this. Mr. Spears, without actually condemning Christianity, takes frequent opportunity to intimate that it is of small value and importance, that missionaries are deceivers or else incapable, and that where a man attempts to do anything from an avowedly Christian motive he is open to suspicion as an impostor. We thoroughly indorse any one's disgust at nominal, which is not also real, Christianity, but a man who can insinuate that Rev. Titus Coan retired from a missionary field because its hardships were too formidable shows himself to be not only unacquainted with that missionary's personal career, but also ignorant of the history of missions in general. Moreover, the allusions which the author makes to the gambling houses and the drinking places of the region visited, which are much more sympathetic than his pages on the mission stations, certainly seem to throw some light, and not altogether a pleasant one, upon his attitude in the matter. It will be safe at least for the reader, before assuming that his strictures on missionaries and their doings are correct, to take some pains to get at the missionaries' own side of the story.

It will be a long time before the world, especially that of New England, becomes weary of reading about Hawthorne, Emerson, Whittier and certain other more or less renowned and brilliant intellectual writers of the century, and Mr. F. P. Stearns in Sketches from Concord and Appledore [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.00] has taken advantage of this public interest for a motive and of his personal knowledge of some of his subjects as a means of attaining more than the ordinary purpose of such a book. It is not mere literary history which is given here, nor is it only characterization. Both are blended, and Mr. Stearns does not hesitate to run athwart generally received notions in his views now and then. He hopes to restore to Wendell Phillips, for example, something of the fame which the waywardness of his later years caused him to lose. Whether this hope is to be realized it is difficult to say, but in any case Mr. Stearns's critique will be read with genuine attention and good will. His book is thoroughly entertaining and contains much of permanent value.

The American Edition of the Laws and Principles of Whist [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50], by Cavendish, contains all the material of the latest English edition with the exception of one part in which honors are involved, which therefore would not be of much interest in this country where honors usually are disregarded. It is a well arranged and attractive treatise, in which one of the two or three leading experts in the game has supplied detailed information accompanied by ample illustration for the use of the beginner or student. Whether it is worth while to spend upon such a game the time necessary to master it in the modern sense may be a question. Still whatever is worth doing at all is worth doing well. It is a great temptation to many modern men and women to give too much time and thought to the game of whist, but it is not necessary to go to excess in order to appreciate the usefulness and satisfaction of such a book as this.

The Story of the Indians [D. Appleton & Co. $1.50] seems to be the first in a new series called the Story of the West series. It is by George B. Grinnell and tells of the Indian's amusements, manner of living and of getting a living, of his marriage, his religion, his wars, his industries, etc., and it is based upon the personal observations of the author himself. Among the many books which relate to the Indian this will be conceded to rank with the foremost in respect to the truthfulness of its portrayal of Indian character and life and its success in discussing their condition with fairness and good will. It does not go far, however, into the subject of their legal attitude to the rest of the nation, but contents itself with describing them as they are, and the resultant impression is different in some important respects from that which has been received by most of the public in the past. The book is a useful contribution toward correctness in understanding.

The Secret of Mankind [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.00] is a daring and somewhat tedious performance by an author who has concealed his personality while, to the extent of about four hundred pages, he discourses in a metaphysical strain, during an imaginary journey after death to Mercury, about all sorts of topics, chiefly intellectual, moral and spiritual, and confers with many of the ancient worthies of history, gleaning grains of wisdom from each one and endeavoring, apparently in vain, to pose them in argument. When the narrative stops—although why it should stop where it does or anywhere else in particular is not obvious—the reader is supposed to have grasped the secret of mankind, but with nine out of ten and, probably with the other one also, it is more likely to have remained a secret. On the whole, the labor of extracting the kernel from this nut is greater than the possible fruit probably deserves.

The success of Mr. O. S. Marden's former volume, Pushing to the Front, seems to have prompted him to prepare another, called Architects of Fate [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50]. Mr. Marden has a somewhat rare power of giving good advice for young people, young men especially, without becoming tame or tiresome. His pages abound in incident and anecdote and although there is nothing in them that has not been said a thousand times before, and said in very much the same way and for the same purpose, nevertheless there is in his pages the element of virile and attractive personality as well as a wise arrangement and a practical and cumulative force and interest which assures the success of his book. The portraits of more than two dozen heroes enliven the work.

Mr. Noah Brooks has added to the long list of guide-books a neat and compact little volume called The Mediterranean Trip [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25]. It is a short guide to the principal points of interest on the coast of the Western Mediterranean and the Levant. It tells you about the Azores, Gibraltar, Algiers, Malta, Cairo, Jerusalem, Constantinople, etc., and is a compendium of desirable information about localities, national customs, the usages of travel, best hotels and other appropriate matters. It seems to be very well done and has some good illustrations and four maps. It is not as complete in details as Baedeker but in its way it appears to cover more ground than any single volume of those famous guide-books.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have offered the public in The Spectator in London [$2 00] one of the most tempting of the holiday books. It contains several dozen of essays by Addison and Steele, with admirably well conceived and well executed drawings by Ralph Cheever. The artist has caught the spirit of the time with wonderful success, and the work ordinarily is of surpassing merit. By a certain class of readers, and a large class, this book will be welcomed very heartily.

Mr. E. C. Gardner's The House that Jill Built [W. F. Adams Co. $1.00] was published first three years ago and is now reissued in a becoming and inviting form. It is a capital manual on domestic architecture for the use of sensible people about to build and is the more acceptable because written as a narrative and a pleasant one. Those who purpose to construct their own homes sooner or later will do well to examine it.

The Library of Useful Stories has been enlarged by the addition of a little volume, The Story of the Earth in Past Ages [D. Appleton & Co. 40 cents], by Prof. H. G. Seeley. It contains the substance of what beginners need to know and considerable matter which maturer students will appreciate. It is illustrated freely.

A Pocket History of the Presidents of the United States [A. D. F. Randolph & Co. 25 cents] has been compiled by Thomas Rand and is a vest pocket or watch pocket edition, being about two inches square by less than a quarter of an inch thick. It contains the portrait of each president, with a short sketch of his life and a little other public information of value.

Window and Parlor Gardening [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1 25], by N. Jonsson-Rose, tells its own story in its title. How to select and care for house plants is its subject and it deals with the theme in a plain and comprehensive manner. It is illustrated. The bound volume of the Century Magazine [$3 00] from May to October, 1895, inclusive, is issued in the familiar, beautiful and sumptuous style and contains a mass of material which, however much it be appreciated from month to month, never is properly understood in its extent and its excellence until it has been gathered together in this form. Then one realizes what these publishers are supplying year by year.

Dr. Mary E. Greene, in her book, Food Products of the World [Hotel World. $1.00], has gathered into a volume a series of magazine articles begun just after the World's Columbian Exposition and suggested in part by the exhibits there made. It has become in the author's hands a somewhat elaborate study of different varieties of food, their methods of cultivation, their value in nourishment and their practical adaptability to use in different conditions. The print is rather small but it is clear and the book is illustrated.——We also have received several calendars for the coming year. One is the Phillips Brooks Calendar, containing selections from his works for each week and surmounted by fine photographs of Trinity Church and of the bishop himself. Another is Ye Olde and New Boston Calendar, in which views of historic and otherwise characteristic Boston buildings accompany the table of days for each month. They are both handsome and both come from D. W. Colbath & Co.——We also have the American Board Almanac for 1896 [10 cents] which has a large, effective and well arranged collection of missionary material.

NOTES.

—— Numerous illustrations add considerably to the cost of books, but increase sales enough to more than compensate for the extra cost.

—— The American Library Association is planning to hold its annual meeting in Europe in 1897, in the course of a foreign tour which is proposed.

—— The library of the Leland Stanford University has a specially complete and fine collection of railroad books which includes about four thousand titles.

—— Why do foreigners so often write in a tiny hand? The Bookman for January publishes a facsimile of Ibsen's writing which illustrates this quality of minuteness although it is larger than the hands of some other European men of mark.

—— Five thousand copies of Ian Maclaren's The Days of Auld Lang Syne were spoken for in Edinburgh alone and a fortnight before the date of publication, and 30,000 copies were printed of the first English edition. Yet it is hardly a year since the author was unknown in literature.

—— The announcements of stories by English writers in American publications during 1896 are hardly more numerous than those of stories by American authors in English magazines. Miss Wilkins, Prof. Brander Matthews, Bret Harte and Mr. Howells are cases in point.

—— It is an odd fact that the English and American editions of one of the books of the current season, Sir Quixote of the Moors, end differently, the difference occurring in only a few lines, but sufficing to alter wholly the impression left upon the reader. Moreover, it is said that this difference was authorized.

Gleanings From Our Mail Bag.

Sunday Study. Paying Those Troublesome Debts. Possibilities of the Theater. War Deprecated.

MAKE MONDAY THE SCHOOL HOLIDAY.

A few weeks ago there appeared in the columns of The Congregationalist an article on Sunday studying in our schools and colleges. It gave a list of several of our prominent colleges with the per cent. of their students who study on Sunday. To many these figures were a great surprise, and no doubt parents were made to wonder whether their sons were included in these numbers. While some doubt may arise as to the accuracy of the figures published, owing to the difficulty of securing such per cents., yet those who have attended any of the colleges mentioned in the list or, in fact, any of our leading colleges, know too well that Sunday studying is not an uncommon practice and that the figures are all too true. The question naturally arises in the minds of Christian people, What is the cause and how can it be removed? Are the preachers to denounce it from the pulpit? Are the Christian organizations of the college to discountenance it? Are teachers and students to use their influence to discourage the practice? Most certainly. As strong a sentiment should be established as possible against Sunday studying.

But is there not a cause which should first of all be removed? I was for four years a student in one of the colleges mentioned in the list and firmly believe that Sunday studying is largely caused by Monday morning recitations. If the faculty of a college demand as good recitations from its students at 8 30 on Monday morning as on any other morning of the week, when is the ambitious student to prepare for it? Some may answer, Let him prepare his lessons on Saturday afternoon or evening. But is that a just demand? Is it one which can be conscientiously made, or is it a thing to be expected from the average young man? After a student has worked hard during the whole week can it be expected that on Saturday evening he will sit down in his room and study? His nature demands social enjoyment and relaxation. Sunday afternoon comes, with it the thought of Monday morning recitations and the temptation to use the day of rest in a way in which conscience tells the young man is not right.

I have also been connected with a school in which Monday is recreation day and no recitations are held on that day. In it Sunday studying is the great exception. There is no excuse to be offered for it. The student can spend the Sabbath day as the day of rest should be spent, feeling that a day is before him when all lessons can be prepared and he can thus enter upon the work of the week with a clear conscience and a rested brain. Does it not seem that the authorities of our colleges are, in a measure at least, responsible for this practice? Does it not behoove them to think of this matter and see that they remove temptation from those who have been placed under them, not alone for mental instruction but for the development of manly Christian characters? H. N. W.

THE FACULTY AND SUNDAY OBSERVANCE.

The article in The Congregationalist of Oct. 31 upon College Men and the Sabbath reveals a form of Sabbath desecration which is common, viz., Sunday study. Could not the writer pursue his investigations further and ascertain whether there is not some failure of strict Sabbath observance on the part of college officers? Does the Sunday newspaper reach any of them? I know of college presidents who have traveled by railroad on the Sabbath to reach appointments. Could one who did that consistently preach upon the text, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy?" Would he set a right example before students? I. B.

HOW TO PAY THE DEBTS.

In conversation recently with a noted financier, he commended the following scheme as eminently practical and urged us to give it publicity. We have three societies whose whole indebtedness amounts to about four hundred thousand dollars. It seems hardly fair for any church or any pastor to discriminate and exert itself to the utmost to relieve this society or that of its burden, to the exclusion of the others. It is not so much from individuals who are able to pay $50 or $100 that the debt is to be paid, as from gathering in the Peter's pence of all the members in all the churches. What pastor wants to make, or allow to be made to his people, a special appeal to relieve one society from debt, when there are two others just as deserving? Our suggestion is this—to have the Prudential Committee of the American Board and the executive committees of the Home Missionary Society and the American Missionary Association appoint a committee of three—one from each society—thorough-going, business men to take the matter in hand, ascertain the whole indebtedness, and have it wisely apportioned to the churches, with a person in each State to direct and one in each county, association or conference to urge each particular church to raise the amount apportioned, thus making one grand, united effort to wipe out the whole debt. If some such systematic method could be adopted and brought to the attention of pastors there would be something definite before us, and we could enter upon the work with an enthusiasm before unknown.

Ashfield, Mass. G. H. B.

THE WAY THE DEACON DID IT.

The pastor was in a quandary how to persuade the church to undertake a special contribution for the three great missionary societies. The deacon came to the rescue. He proposed that some one be asked to visit every family in the parish and personally give them an envelope and inclosed slip like the following:

A THANKSGIVING OFFERING.

The American Board.
The Home Missionary Society.
The American Missionary Society.

If you wish to confine the offering to one society, please underline that one.

It is hoped that every member of the church and congregation, old and young, will take some part in this Thanksgiving offering. It is to be a special offering outside of our regular contributions.

Please give what you can, inclose it in this envelope and bring or send it to church the Sabbath following Thanksgiving Day.

The deacon did his part most faithfully and a very satisfactory contribution in a very willing spirit was made. The dear old deacon who devised and undertook to carry out the plan is undoubtedly responsible for its success. But there are other good deacons who might make it an equal success in other churches. We tried it for Thanksgiving season. Others might try it with equal success on other Sundays. F. W. G.

REFORMING THE THEATER: A DIFFICULT TASK PROPOSED.

I cannot refrain from expressing my sympathy with the editorial on Reforming the Theater in your issue of Dec. 5. I was brought up in a family and church which utterly condemned the theater per se and I imbibed these prejudices. I lived in a country town and knew nothing of the theater practically. Later in life I became a reporter and literary writer on the staff of one of the large Chicago dailies and came often into contact with successful actors and actresses, as well as with many young people preparing themselves for the stage. I was strongly impressed with the enthusiasm of these people for their "art" and the fact that most of them seemed certain that they possessed a natural talent or gift for their art which it was their duty to make the most of.

Then I asked myself this question, Has God given these people a real gift for which there is no right use? I could not help noticing the throngs of people who attended these theaters. They were not the wealthy and cultured, they were the average people. Here, then, is a class of enthusiastic young persons who possess a gift to which the average people respond quickly and intelligently. What shall we do with this gift? My thought would be, convert the actors and actresses right where they are. Evangelize the actors and the theaters will reform themselves.

WHAT WAR MEANS.

The following note from a deacon in the Congregational church in Shelby, Ala., suggests some of the sadder consequences from which the brethren referred to escaped, and shows the changes of feeling which have been wrought during thirty years of peace.

At what better place could an ex-Confederate soldier and a Grand Army man meet than at a local conference of churches, as happened in a Southern State recently? Now, as brothers in a nobler cause, they advance against a common enemy.

The above item from a recent Congregationalist lights up a feature in our modest work in this South country, as a denomination, that at times has been in danger of being "snuffed out" as you so well know. Our two senior deacons, the one a Confederate and the other a Union soldier, literally touch elbows as they stand side by side, soldiers of the cross, at the offertory prayer, the sacraments and the work of our common faith and communion. This to us is not a little heightened by the well-proven fact that we were directly opposite each other at Cold Harbor in the terrible June days of '64. We tried so hard to make way with each other that our children, who have been playmates and companions from earliest childhood, still wonder "what made them kill each other there." Deacon A. H. Averyt was of the Fourth Alabama Regiment, while I was a youngster in the Twenty-fifth Massachusetts. We have a well-understood sympathy with Russell Sturgis, as walking the streets of, possibly, Toronto in loving converse with Major Hardie, also of the Fourth Alabama, on their way to a Y. M. C. A. appointment, he broke out as he gave the Confederate an extra grip of the arm, "I am awful glad, Hardie, that I did not kill you during the war."

A PLEA FOR REVERENCE IN NEW ENGLAND CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES.

To some visitors from New York city who have spent the past two summers in New England, it has seemed odd that in the Congregational churches of the smaller towns the habit of sitting upright in prayer time prevails so extensively. Very rarely did we see a head bowed in time of public prayer. Is it a survival of the Puritanic reaction against form? If our brothers and sisters in the country churches will accept a criticism in the same friendly spirit in which it is offered, we should like to suggest that Rev. 4: 10, 11 would seem to indicate that an attitude of reverence is not displeasing when we come into the presence of the Almighty King, and it certainly adds dignity and seemliness to public worship when there is uniformity of outward observance. ## THE ENDOWMENT FOR MT. HOLYOKE COLLEGE.

BY REV. JUDSON SMITH, D. D.

Dr. D. K. Pearsons of Chicago, the second founder of many colleges in the land, entertains a high opinion of Mt. Holyoke College and has expressed this opinion in two distinct forms. In the first place he freely declares his admiration of Miss Lyon, the original founder, and speaks of Mt. Holyoke as "the model college in this country." In the second place he has undertaken to increase the endowment of the college. A conditional gift of $50,000 for this purpose he has made payable to the treasurer of the college as soon as other friends of the college have gathered $150,000 for the same object. Dr. Pearsons thus furnishes an added motive to every friend of Mt. Holyoke to combine in this effort. The college has never been in debt, but it also has never had any considerable endowment.

Mt. Holyoke found some of its best and earliest friends in Boston and eastern Massachusetts, and it has laid all this region under a lasting obligation in the persons of those whom it has trained for the places of influence they hold in social and private life. It is only fit that those who have profited by the training in culture and character which Mt. Holyoke gives should make return by contributing generously to the endowment.

The advance in its work, necessitated when the college name was assumed, has called for an increased number of teachers and has otherwise increased the annual budget. The movement toward an endowment came not one moment too soon. The college abundantly deserves the financial re-enforcement it seeks. It has for two generations stood almost in the front rank of colleges for the amount of work accomplished compared with the cost involved. Dr. Pearsons says: "A college that has kept free from debt and made her expenses fit her scant income is an object lesson."

The college maintains unchanged its original character and aims and in enlarging its course of instruction it has but kept pace with the demands of the times. It rightly looks to the public which so generously laid its foundations and has so greatly profited by its labors for the means with which to meet these added obligations and to render this higher service. The graduates, east and west, are combining in enthusiastic efforts to do their part in meeting this call; the teachers and even the students in the college are generously adding their personal gifts. It is only right that the wider circle of friends, among whom are many well able to meet this challenge of Dr. Pearsons with large gifts, should now come forward and enable the college to realize this modest but necessary increase of its resources. Mt. Holyoke makes no apology for thus presenting itself as the recipient of gifts for the furtherance of its work. It is but what all the colleges of the land are doing in one way and another, and have a right to do. In meeting this call its friends will be only meeting a just and sacred obligation. Twelve months still remain of the time allowed for the gathering of these additional gifts. There must be no failure in meeting the condition Dr. Pearsons has wisely attached to his gift. The due share in this effort of Boston and all eastern Massachusetts will surely not be wanting and will not be small.

Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT.

Those pastors who have tried it know that the way to bring up the benevolence of the church is to talk it up first and to keep at it. The experience of a few who tell of the plan this week should encourage others. A Minnesota church has more than doubled its amount, and it explains how.

The list of gifts to our pastors by their churches this year can only be a suggestion of the multitude of expressions of gratitude and appreciation.

Would that every church were in a position to stand by its conviction with that one in Massachusetts, that it is inconsistent to dedicate an unpaid for meeting house.

The statement of the missionary debt in the Canadian letter reads like quite a diminutive item beside those of our own societies. The mere mention of an attempt to pay the obligations to the missionaries, as well as to wipe out all other debts, speaks well for the spirit with which our northern brethren face their burden.

ACROSS THE LINE.

The above title serves both for the geography and chronology of this article. What has been done or left undone with the Congregational churches of Canada cannot all be written with pen and ink. But may God grant that the records of 1896 may be replete with accounts of truer, richer, nobler service! We may review some of the concluding events of the year.

One of the most interesting of these was the starting of a home mission honor roll similar to the General Howard roll in the United States, with the exception that the shares are each ten, instead of one hundred dollars. Mr. Charles Cushing, president of the Home Missionary Society, heads the list, which gives promise of a rapid extension. The total debt to be removed is $1,500, toward which the Colonial Missionary Society of England promises one-half, provided that the other half is removed and the twenty-five per cent. restored which has been deducted from grants to missionaries. There is little doubt that these conditions will be fulfilled.

Among the churches are several reported evidences of activity and aggression. The new organization in Victoria, B. C., has already been noticed. Rev. H. C. Mason, late of Manitoba, has commenced his pastorate in Vancouver in the same province. In Ontario the women have been giving practical indications of their presence in the work of the churches. At Forest they have assumed the responsibility of the debt, and at Bethel, Kingston, the payment of $600 for improvements is just completed, while at Bond Street, Toronto, they have gladdened Rev. Dr. Sims and wife with a token of high esteem. Several anniversaries, too, have been announced, among them the churches of Barrie, Rev. R J. Duff as preacher, Hamilton, where Rev. B. B. Williams officiated, Toronto, Zion, whose sixty-first year was commemorated by special sermons from Rev. G. P. Thomas, Ph. D., of Stockbridge, Mass., and Toronto, Dovercourt, with local supplies in the pulpit at the three services of the day. The season of special services has also commenced, with successful meetings reported at Church Hill, Bond Street and other fields.

Of meetings of a general character the Quebec Association calls for special notice. It was held in Emmanuel Church, Montreal, Dec. 11, 12. Encouraging reports were given from several churches, while that of Rev. W. T. Gunn showed an increase of receipts from the whole field for foreign mission work. The union of the denominational societies of the Dominion provoked an animated discussion, but action was deferred until the April meeting. Earnest and thoughtful papers were read. The one by Mr. J. B. Dougall, editor of the Witness, on The Mission of Congregationalism, was followed by an interesting discussion, in which Rev. Thomas Hall expressed great faith in the future of the denomination and suggested a ten days' conference for the deepening of spiritual life. Rev. Professor Warriner pointed out the increase during the last twenty years to be forty per cent., which was greater than that of the population of the Dominion. Rev. E. M. Hill declared Congregationalism to be a living, moving factor in Canada, though its ability and power had not yet been fully tested.

Professor Warriner's report of the meetings of the National Council at Syracuse, N. Y., was greatly enjoyed at the closing meeting, a gathering which was also marked by the ordination of Mr. A. Lindé for mission work among his fellow-countrymen in Alberta in the Northwest. Mr. Lindé was educated at Christiania, Sweden, and will have a parish comprising over 1 000 persons. In connection with this service, Dr. Evans delivered an interesting address on Swedish Congregationalism in the United States, and referred to the 400 Congregational churches in Sweden which are known as Free churches. The present events may be regarded as prophetic of the work to be done by Congregationalism in Canada. J. P. G.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES.

Hartford.

The winter term, beginning Jan. 2, has been lengthened and the spring term shortened two weeks. This postponement of the spring vacation will enable the students to spend Easter at home. ——The subjects of the theses handed in by the Juniors at the close of the elective course in New Testament apologetics were: The Ethical Teachings of Christ, Christ's Attitude Toward Doubt, Christ's Attitude Toward the Higher Classes, The Significance of Christ's Use of Non-logical Arguments.——With the opening of the winter term the Junior Class has fairly entered upon elective work. A little more than one third of the hours required in winter and spring terms is elective. Nearly the entire class has elected the course in public speaking under Professor Harper.

Last Friday evening in the chapel occurred the inauguration of Rev. Alexander R. Merriam as Samuel Hawes professor of practical theology and Christian sociology. After brief devotional exercises, Rev. E. B. Webb, D. D., president of the board of trustees, gave a short address on The Need of the Preaching of the Gospel, and at the close formally announced the appointment of Professor Merriam to the chair held for several years by Prof. Graham Taylor. The inaugural address on the subject The Scholar, the Poet and the Prophet was a scholarly and at the same time an interesting discourse.

Yale.

The class in systematic theology listened to criticisms of Aubrey Moore's Lux Mundi, Essay on the Christian Idea of God and of Sanday's Inspiration, last week, by Messrs. Sarles and Briggs.——During the present term the class will use Müller's Christian Doctrine of Sin as a text-book.——Messrs. Coolidge and Haines recently gave papers before the Middle Class in homiletics on the preaching characteristics of Phillips Brooks.——During the present term Brooks, Beecher and Mozley will be discussed ——Much sympathy is felt for the Armenian members of the school, one of whom has just learned of the murder of one brother and the imprisonment of another. The Armenian students at Yale are among the most faithful, earnest and sincere scholars in the school.

Chicago.

There are four students pursuing post-graduate studies. One was a student in Germany for two years as a fellow of Hartford Seminary. Another graduated from Harvard Divinity School, studied a year and a half in France and Germany, nearly completed a course of study for the degree of Ph. D. at the University of Syracuse and last summer received the degree of D. D. from one of our colleges. These two are engaged in the preparation of theses. The others are alumni of the seminary.

The total number of students connected with the Swedish department during its ten years is 158, of whom seventy-four have graduated, twenty-five are pastors of Swedish churches in the East, nine in Chicago, forty-three west of Chicago, two in Norway and one is superintendent of a Sailors' Home in Christiania. Two are missionaries to the Finns, one in Massachusetts and one on the Pacific Coast. Nine are missionaries among the heathen—one in West Africa, one in India, six in China and one in Alaska. Thirty-four are undergraduates. The success of the department is due to the untiring labors of Prof. Fridolf Risberg, a graduate of the University of Upsala, and, at first, a minister of the state church, but identified with the Free Church movement. He has since been recalled at least twice in the service of the Free Church in Sweden, and earnest efforts have been made by the Mission Friends in America to draw him away from his present chair. But they have all been in vain. During his connection with the seminary, in performing missionary labor among his people, he has traveled more extensively on the American continent than any other member of the faculty.

Pacific.

General improvements about the seminary buildings are noticeable. North Hall, the gymnasium and the library have all been repaired or remodeled. The abundant trees set out on the grounds last spring are flourishing and promise much added beauty.——The students number twenty-two this year, including both sexes, and their spirit of work is excellent. Their assistance in the neighboring churches is given regularly, some acting as pastors, others as helpers in various capacities.——Professor Nash has been quite seriously ill of late, but his condition as last reported gave hope for rapid restoration.——A Christmas gift of $100 was made to the seminary by Edward Coleman, Esq., of San Francisco.

NEW ENGLAND.

Massachusetts.

BOSTON.—Union. Despite the removals by death and by the shifting of population during the seven years of Dr. Nehemiah Boynton's pastorate, the membership has in that time advanced from 335 to 553. Last year witnessed forty-three additions. The financial showing is equally gratifying, the comparatively slight excess of disbursements over receipts being fully made up before the annual meeting, last week, which was an occasion of much rejoicing and of renewing courage for another year.

CHELSEA.—First. The past year has been one of unusual prosperity under the guidance of the new pastor, Dr. R. C. Houghton. Not only have the expenses of the year been met, but a floating indebtedness of $1,200 from previous years is provided for. Moreover, one of the original members of the church, Mrs. Lucy A. Hartt, has, by two gifts within a few months, canceled a long standing mortgage of $4,000 on the parsonage. The additions of the year are sixteen. The church rejoices in the return of its missionary, Miss Ellen M. Stone, formerly a valued member of The Congregationalist staff, from Bulgaria, and already she has given several addresses on her work there and on the troubles in Armenia. Last week Thursday a reception was tendered her by the church and hundreds of her friends in this church and from the Central and Third Churches, which also have united in her support, welcomed her back. The occasion was made delightful by a reunion of many former members and by the presence of an unusual number of young people. The decorations added a charm to the vestries, where light refreshments were served. The membership, after recent careful revision of the roll, is about 375.

SOMERVILLE.—Many hundreds of people last Sunday evening attended the mass meeting held with the Winter Hill Church in behalf of the Red Cross Mission. Among the several speakers was an Armenian, M. H. Gulesian, who had recently learned bad news from his home. His utterances were heart-rending.

ALLSTON.—The $400 needed, beyond the ordinary sources of income, to meet the annual expenses, which included some extraordinary outlays for repairs, were raised by an open box collection last Sunday, no special pressure being brought to bear. Rev. J. O. Haarvig, the new pastor, had the pleasure of welcoming fifteen persons to membership last Sunday, nine coming on confession.

AUBURNDALE.—The annual report gives benevolences of $4,950, of which $228 came from the Extra-Cent-a Day Band, $249 from the Endeavor Societies, $255 from the Sunday school. Of the total $1,475 went to the American Board. The annual reception to the pastor was held New Year's afternoon and evening.

NEWTON.—Eliot. The unanimous call by the church to Rev. Dr. W. H. Davis of Detroit will undoubtedly be followed, as soon as legal limitations of time permit, by similar action of the society. Dr. Davis's acceptance will fill the pastorate of one of the most important pulpits in the vicinity of Boston to the entire satisfaction of all concerned.

MELROSE HIGHLANDS.—The keen anticipations with which Rev. B. F. Leavitt and his people have been awaiting the opening of the new edifice were more than met by the happy and inspiring character of the services of last Thursday evening, which were attended by an audience that thronged the house. The structure adjoins the chapel, which has been their place of worship for a number of years, and represents an outlay of $20,000, thus securing to the church a property valued, apart from the land, at $30,000. The new auditorium accommodates 780 persons, and, by utilizing the chapel, which can be made easily available, a congregation of 1,200 can be seated. A large dining-room, a reading-room and a gymnasium comprise part of the equipment. Much credit belongs to Deacon Joel Snow, chairman of the building committee, who, though eighty-three years of age, has pushed the construction with vigor and prudence. To the efforts of Miss S. E. Morgan the church is largely indebted for the organ. The services of dedication included an address by Rev. Arthur Little, D. D., a historical sketch by the pastor, congratulations from a representation of sister denominations, the presentation and acceptance of the keys and appropriate prayers and hymns. The church is now in a position, under its consecrated and hard-working pastor, to minister more effectively than ever to the community.

HARWICH CENTER.—Rev. A. J. Haynes has been presented with a petition, signed by all the leading citizens of his parish, asking him to withdraw his resignation.

WELLFLEET.—First, though steadily losing in numbers and resources, gave more money last year and to a greater number of objects than at any time for ten years. The parish finances are also in good condition. The increased liberality is not the result of an unusual enthusiasm on the part of the church or of individuals, but because the pastor, Rev. Albert Donnell, made a special request of the people to give.

NEWBURYPORT.—Prospect Street. The annual roll-call was held Dec. 26. About 100 members responded in person and a number by letter. During the past year the church has expended nearly $500 for benevolences outside of a large charitable work among the poor of the city. There has been a marked increase in attendance at all the services during the year, and eighteen persons have been added to membership, thirteen on confession. Notwithstanding a good sum expended in improvements, the society closed the financial year free from debt. Special helpers are to assist the pastor, Rev. M. O. Patton, during the Week of Prayer.

LOWELL.—John Street. The church has had a prosperous and successful year under the lead of Rev. G. H. Johnson. There have been fifteen additions and the New Year opened with the addition of four more.——First. Rev. G. F. Kenngott has decided to take a month's vacation out of the city. A reception was tendered him on New Year's evening at which over 2,500 persons presented their good wishes and congratulations. He was also the recipient of several valuable presents.

TEWKSBURY.—The church building, having been thoroughly renovated at a cost exceeding $3,000, was rededicated New Year's evening. The sermon was preached by Prof. J. W. Churchill. Among those taking part was Rev. S. F. French, a former pastor. Nine memorial windows of stained glass have been given, the pews have been rebuilt, walls and ceiling frescoed and new pulpit furnishings and carpets provided. The church was organized in 1737 and has had but eight pastors. The present edifice, the second one, was built in 1824 and was extensively repaired in 1850 and 1878. In 1871 a hall for the use of Sunday school and evening meetings was built.

WORCESTER.—Clara Barton addressed a large company of business men Dec. 31, Mayor Marsh presiding. A committee of twenty-five was appointed to raise funds for relief of suffering Armenia.——Pilgrim. About 500 persons met at the annual church reception. The unanimous and enthusiastic welcome to the new pastor, Rev. Alexander Lewis, and his wife is an indication of a large future. ——Piedmont held its eighteenth annual reception Jan. 2, with over 500 persons in attendance. Congratulations were read from Mayor Marsh and the former pastor, Dr. Mears. Addresses were given by a number of friends.

WARREN.—During last year there were fifty six additions to the church, fifty-one on confession, making the net gain forty-eight. The present membership is 319. The benevolences for the year were $2,162, a gain of $396 over last year. There is a deep interest and an earnest hope for the new year. Rev. H. G. Hale is pastor.

WEST SPRINGFIELD.—First held one of its most successful reunions Dec. 26. Reports of the various departments were encouraging. This venerable church, standing among over thirty others whereas once it stood alone, faces the next year with renewed courage in view of the growth in population which begins to appear along the line of the electric road between Springfield and Holyoke. Rev. S. K. Perkins is pastor.

CHESTERFIELD.—As long ago as October the pastor, Rev. H. E. Thygeson, held extra meetings leading up to a recent series in which four neighboring pastors participated. The outcome has been the indication on the part of over twenty-five persons of a desire to lead a Christian life. Five of the boys in the pastor's Sunday school class are among the number. These lads and their mates took part in the Christmas entertainment, reciting passages of Scripture in connection with scenes in Christ's life pictured with the aid of the lantern.

CONWAY.—First. At the annual meeting the attendance was unusually large, fully two-thirds of the members responding to the roll-call. During the year the church has given to the six benevolent societies, and the Y. P. S. C. E. and Sunday school have also contributed to home and foreign missions. The Ladies' Aid Society has renovated the parsonage throughout, at an expense of $1,200. The outlook in all departments is hopeful. Rev. Caldwell Morrison is pastor.

EAST CHARLEMONT.—The church held its yearly roll call and church "family day," Dec. 27. It has been a year of special advances. A jubilee observance renewed its historic life, and a new chapel, with a children's balcony and other apartments, cathedral glass windows and new horsesheds have been provided. The gifts of the church to the seven societies were over $600, an average of $10 to each resident member. Dr. Lyman Whiting is pastor.

DEERFIELD.—Rev. E. N. Munroe, the pastor, has resigned to take effect April 1, after a pastorate of about four and one-half years. During that time twelve persons have united with the church, six on confession. A new chapel has been built at a cost of over $1,000. A renewed interest in the Y. P. S. C. E. was maintained during the two years of its weekly sessions at the house of the pastor, and it has conducted special meeetings occasionally in outer districts. A large, long standing indebtedness and other complications have hindered the work. The parish assured the pastor of its hearty appreciation of his services.

Maine.

PORTLAND.—St. Lawrence Street celebrated in a happy manner the twenty-fifth anniversary of Rev. A. H. Wright's pastorate, Jan. 1. The other churches were well represented and the pastors of the city, including all denominations, responded cordially to their invitation. The success and spiritual earnestness of Mr. Wright's ministry made remark spontaneous. He is universally beloved throughout the city and State and these happy tributes were richly merited. The membership at the beginning of the pastorate was 116; today it is 303. Since 1871, 345 persons have united with the church, 274 on confession. This long period of work has been thoroughly evangelistic. Revivals have been frequent and the revival spirit continues. The commanding site for a new edifice purchased last year at a cost of $4,500 promises a large future for the church. The field is a large and open one and with ample equipment will develop rapidly. All of his twenty-nine years of service have been in Maine. The record is a noble one. At the public reception given by the church to the pastor and his wife, Jan. 3, the spirit of friendship, affection and esteem was marked.

NEW GLOUCESTER.—Last year was one of prosperity for this church, of which Rev. H. G. Mank has been pastor more than seven years. Less than two years ago the interior of the meeting house was entirely remodeled and this year there have been additional improvements and also repairs on the parsonage. The interior of the vestry has been thoroughly repaired and includes a convenient audience-room, a pleasant parlor and a convenient kitchen. The women, organized this fall under the leadership of Mrs. Mank, held a fair at which they cleared $315, to be devoted to exterior improvements. Three hundred dollars have been added to the invested funds of the church and the benevolences amount to nearly $750. The missionary interest has increased and the Sunday evening services, which are devoted to missions, are largely attended. The interest in prayer meetings has been greater than usual. There have been a number of conversions, which have resulted in several additions to the church. There have also been serious losses by death and removal.

EAST FAIRFIELD.—The Charles E. Moody school building at Good Will Farm was dedicated New Year's Day. It is a fine and well equipped edifice, costing $25,000. Beside recitation rooms it contains a library with 2,000 volumes, and natural history and art rooms. The exercises were of great interest. President Chase of Bates College gave a sketch of Mr. Moody's life and character and presented the building, which was accepted for the trustees by Hon. Moses Giddings, president of the association.

WATERVILLE.—The field workers of the Maine Bible Society, seven in number, met here in conference. It was a helpful meeting. Eighty six towns and ten plantations have been visited by the workers, who labor alone in hard fields and often in thinly settled regions along rough roads. The address was by Rev. C. S. Cummings on the Bible and Its Influence upon Men and Nations.

SOUTH BRIDGTON.—The late Mrs. Mary M. Cram of Portland left $1,000 to this church. She was one of the Perley family, who have been stanch friends and promoters of the work here.

CALAIS.—First. A new furnace has been put into the vestry and provision is on hand for inserting electric lights.

LEWISTON.—Pine Street. During the twelve years' service of Rev. G. M. Howe 250 persons have been added to the membership. Every department of work seems encouraging.

BANGOR.—A conference of the pastors has resulted in the decision to invite Dr. Chapman of Albany, N. Y., to hold a series of meetings here as soon as practicable.

EAST HIRAM.—This church, with the Methodists, is holding a series of revival meetings. Messrs. Boardman and Cullens of Bangor Seminary assist the pastors.

DOVER AND FOXCROFT.—A good degree of interest is manifest. Much help has been gained by cottage meetings two or three times a week in different neighborhoods.

LITCHFIELD.—A large picture of Rev. J. T. Hawes, pastor of this church for twenty six years, has been given to his friends.

MINOT CENTER.—A new pulpit and modern furnishings have improved the meeting house. Sheds to accommodate twenty teams have been built.

SHERMAN MILLS.—A new furnace and lamps have been provided by the Ladies' Society at a cost of $175, and further improvements are planned.

Maine adds five new churches to her list for 1895. This is the largest number since 1869, when six were added to the roll. The new churches are Little Deer Isle, Sebago, South Portland, Stoneham and The Forks.

New Hampshire.

NASHUA.—The Congregational churches of the city have gladdened the hearts of many needy ones by generous gifts. A recent Sunday evening was devoted especially to temperance. The pastors spoke to large and interested congregations, urging them to help forward the cause by more decided and vigorous efforts to enforce the prohibitory law.

HILLSBORO BRIDGE.—Through the generosity of ex-Gov. J. B. Smith, a fine system of electric lighting has been put into the meeting house and, with funds raised by a children's entertainment, the vestry used for the primary department of the Sunday school is undergoing renovation and a refitting for its improvement.

BARNSTEAD.—First. A series of revival services has lately been conducted by the pastor, Rev. L. E. Bell, lasting two weeks. They were largely attended by people in this and neighboring towns and resulted in spiritual quickening to the church and a few conversions.

WOLFBORO.—A movement has been made for the erection, in the near future, of a $10,000 edifice. Good success is following endeavors to raise the money.

BROOKLINE.—The council called by the church for the recognition of Rev. J. A. Belanger as pastor entered its protest against "councils of recognition" instead of "installing councils."

EAST DERRY.—By vote of the church a system of pledge cards and envelopes is hereafter to be used for raising money for benevolence.

The church in Wentworth receives $1,000 from the Cook estate.

Vermont.

CORNWALL.—Thirteen persons have been added to this church during the year, making a net gain of eight. A Junior Endeavor Society, organized a few months ago, is doing good work. On an average about seventy-five per cent. of the Sunday morning congregation attend the Sunday school and some years the average is over eighty per cent. At the recent annual meeting Rev. S. H. Barnum was invited to remain as pastor for a seventh year.

MIDDLEBURY.—Forefathers' Day was celebrated for the fifty-third consecutive time in this city. The address was on The Puritan Standpoint.

Connecticut.

NEW HAVEN.—The Mills meetings, to be held for a month, commenced last Monday. Daily noon and evening meetings are held with different churches. The Sunday services are held in the afternoon and evening at the Grand Opera House.—United Much regret is felt at the resignation of Rev. H. R. Miles, who has served as Dr. Munger's assistant for three years. He accepts the pastorate of the Windsor Avenue Church of Hartford.—Howard Avenue. The church recently celebrated the tenth anniversary of the ordination of the pastor, Rev. W. J. Mutch, and the thirtieth of the organization of the church. The anniversary sermon and addresses, by members of the church and others, were features. The roll-call and consecration meeting and the reception following were largely attended. The Endeavor Society presented the church with a handsome frame, containing portraits of all the pastors of the church. A souvenir of the occasion was published, containing fine half-tone engravings of the edifice and all the pastors.—Plymouth. A series of popular lectures and entertainments will be given weekly during the winter.

NEW BRITAIN.—South. At the annual meeting W. H. Hart, who has held the office for thirty-seven years, was re-elected treasurer. Resolutions of sympathy were passed on the recent death of Professor Bartlett. The new organ is now being put in position, and when completed will be one of the finest in the country, costing not far from $18,000. It is largely the gift of Hon. Phillip Corbin. Rev. Dr. James Cooper is pastor.— Rev. G. H. and Mrs. Sandwell of the First Church kept open house New Year's, their reception in the evening being largely attended by their parishioners and friends. Refreshments were served during the evening.

HARTFORD.—Three meetings addressed by D. L. Moody were held last Saturday and Sunday. The first was for the general public and over a thousand persons were present. The second was for men only Sunday afternoon. The third was a general meeting.—Fourth. The report of the special committee favors locating the new edifice on the corner of Main and Windsor Streets. The report is accepted and a committee appointed to secure an option of the land, also to devise means to raise the extra money for its purchase. The architects are instructed to adapt their plans to the new site.

WEST HARTFORD.—The average attendance at the Sunday school has been 134. Last year there were fourteen removals and sixteen additions, making the present membership 333. The total benevolences were $20,438, of which $15,350 goes to missions from the estate of Miss Nancy Gaylord, a former member. A spirited discussion took place over the proposal to turn over the free library to the town. For twelve years it has been a department of the church and by an almost unanimous vote it will continue to be for the present.

MANCHESTER.—North. The annual reports are satisfactory. Rev. C. H. Barber enters upon his tenth year in this parish, a longer period than any previous pastor. A feature of the roll-call was a letter from Mrs. Clarissa Spencer, now in her ninety-seventh year, and a church member for over eighty years. The Sunday school has been provided with quite a large library through the efforts of the young women.

BRISTOL.—A special meeting was held last week to discuss the adoption of individual communion cups. No definite action was taker, but a committee was appointed to look into the matter and report at a meeting to be held in April. The prevailing sentiment seems strongly in their favor.—Swedish. The day of dedicating the new meeting house was a jubilee occasion. The attendance was large. Rev. T. M. Miles gave the address.

COLEBROOK.—The 100th anniversary of the church and of the installation of a former pastor, Rev. Jonathan Edwards, was celebrated last week Tuesday. Rev. Mr. Dean gave the historical address, covering the events in the church for the past century. After the dinner addresses were made by many neighboring clergymen. There was also an exhibition of relics and antiques.

ROXBURY.—After being closed several weeks for repairs the house was opened last Sunday. It has been largely remodeled and with the new pews and furnishings presents a pleasing appearance.

WINDSOR.—First. The society gives annual reports which are encouraging, all indebtedness of the society having been paid during the past year, leaving a good sum in the treasury.

KENT.—The annual reports show that the aggregate contributions to charities and to foreign missionary work during the past year amounted to nearly $700.

BETHEL.—The ninth reunion included an unusually large number of the older members. The reports were helpful and the prospects are for a successful year. The total membership is 426.

WOODSTOCK.—The annual reports show benevolences amounting to $532. The additions have been twelve. The total Sunday school contributions amounted to $106, $84 going for benevolences.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

NEW YORK.—Broadway Tabernacle. The foreign missionary department of the Society for Women's Work held a deeply interesting meeting Dec. 31. Thrilling letters were read from Rev. Mr. Gates and Misses Bush, Barnum, Wheeler and Daniels, missionaries at Harpoot, Eastern Turkey. This society has paid the salary of Miss Bush for more than twenty years, and she is a member of this church. Fervent prayer was offered and an earnest desire was expressed that something should be done to help her in her extremity. More than $150 was immediately raised among the women to be sent to her without delay. The realities of the massacre are brought home to this church by the presence of several young Armenians who have es aped from Turkey and who are waiting anxiously to learn whether any of their friends or relatives are left alive.

BROOKLYN.—Plymouth's present membership is 1,783. Dr. Lyman Abbott, the pastor, is preaching to larger congregations than ever. For the expenses of the year $32,734 were collected. Besides its regular work the church has in its care two branches, two kindergartens, three working girls' clubs, two sewing schools, a Boys' Brigade, three C. E. Societies and a number of other organizations. There are employed three pastors and three women workers, all salaried.

WEST BLOOMFIELD.—The problem of successful annual meetings has been solved for this church. The plan which seems best to serve is an entire day devoted to the two meetings. The services included a roll-call, at which sixty per cent. of the resident members and many absent members responded. Dinner was served and the afternoon was devoted to the annual meeting of the society. A largely increased attendance was the result. Rev. N. W. Bates is pastor.

WELLSVILLE.—Evangelist M. S. Rees of Elmira, assisted by his wife as singer, held a successful series of revival meetings with the churches here in December. Many persons were reported converted and Christians were greatly quickened. Mr. Rees is an able preacher and wise in his methods.

DUNTON.—This church, about a mile from Jamaica, Long Island, only fifteen months old, has now forty-four members, a fine chapel costing $2,800 and a debt of only $900. Rev. M. H. Fishburn supplies the pulpit. It has received no outside aid.

The new church in Rockville Center, Long Island, a mile and a half from Rockaway, is building a chapel.

Pennsylvania.

PHILADELPHIA.—Kensington Sunday school is negotiating for a lot on which to build.——The Oxford Street Sunday school, just two months old, numbers seventy-five scholars and five teachers. Plans are on foot for securing larger quarters and a chapel will soon be built.

ROCHESTER.—The new meeting house was recently dedicated, two sermons being preached by Dr. T. W. Jones and Pres. W. G. Ballantine of Oberlin The building is of brick and stone and the style semi-colonial. The furnishings are handsome and blend beautifully. The seating capacity is 500. There are fine accommodations for Sunday school work, kitchen, dining and cloak rooms.

OLIPHANT.—Some time ago the church decided upon needed repairs and an extension of the edifice, the whole to cost $3,000. All the money has been raised and paid over, rejoicing the heart of the pastor, Rev. Peter Roberts, and all concerned. Sunday, Jan. 19, will be celebrated as jubilee day.

SCRANTON.—Puritan. The pastor, Rev. A. F. Ferris, is holding a second service Sunday evenings, specially for the purpose of interesting the unconverted.

THE INTERIOR.

Indiana.

INDIANAPOLIS.—People's cleared $240 at its fair. The Sunday school made Christmas gifts instead of receiving them and each class provided a dinner for one or more families. Large barrels were filled and given to the Charity Society, $75 worth of eatables being distributed.

KOKOMO.—First. The annual reports indicate the church to be prosperous under the wise leadership of Rev. R. J. Smith, who has been here seven months. The financial obligations of the church have been promptly met, leaving money in the treasury. Increasing congregations make an enlarged home a felt need, and it is proposed to build a modern edifice in the spring. The women have raised a debt of $1,600.

ELWOOD.—The new Welsh church, Rev. Richard Powell, pastor, is prospering. Nearly every seat in the house is occupied evenings. The Sunday school attendance is 125. A friend made a Christmas gift of two serviceable Bibles and a cover for the pulpit. Superintendent Banfield of the tin plate works has given the church a fine organ.

Christmas was observed as usual in the Coal Mine Mission.——At Cardonia the church and reading-room were taxed for standing room, and 260 miners' children were remembered.——At Perth the attraction at the meeting house was such that even the saloons closed.——At Coal Bluff there was a crowded house and a paid entertainment. The gifts came largely from two Indianapolis churches, Plymouth and Mayflower.——The new Caseyville church is now seated with chairs and will soon be ready for dedication.

The coming session of the Indiana State Association is to be a celebration of the semi-centennial anniversary of the Michigan City Convention of 1846. The National Council at its late meeting in Syracuse passed resolutions indorsing this plan of the Indiana Association and expressing the denominational interest in the convention of 1846. The work of this pioneer gathering of Congregationalists is better recognized and its importance more fully appreciated in the Central States than in the Eastern. It was the mother of the Chicago Theological Seminary and an important factor in securing the Albany convention in 1852. The National Council elected as delegates to the anniversary Rev. J. M. Sturtevant, D. D., of Aurora and Rev. G. S. F. Savage, D. D., of Chicago. Dr. Sturtevant's father was present at the convention fifty years ago and Dr. Savage was a member.

Michigan.

GRAND RAPIDS.—Park. The strong and energetic Young People's Guild has recently become a C. E. Society.——South has a flourishing good citizenship league.——East is planning to move within the city limits to a more popular center.——Plymouth. The pastor, Rev. R. M. Higgins, has organized, by request, a class for the study of English literature.——Waterloo Mission, supported by all the denominations of the city, keeps a place open every night for gospel meetings and rescue work.

DETROIT.—First. The annual sale and supper in December netted over $500. The collection for State and city missionary work Dec. 15 was $2,800.——Plymouth. Rev. Morgan Wood, the pastor, begins with the new year down-town Sunday evening services at the Opera House. They are in charge of an executive committee of prominent business men of all denominations.

VIENNA.—Since the coming of Rev. Stephen Vaughan to this district and Briley, reaching over twenty miles, there have been revivals and great increase of interest in all the field. Seventeen persons have united with the church here on confession and as many more are ready to join at the next communion. A parsonage has been secured in this place.

GREENVILLE.—The reports show that in the last year 170 persons have been received to membership, making a total of 483. The membership of a recently organized C. E. Society is 110. The benevolences were $800.

THE WEST.

Iowa.

GRINNELL.—The people here are taking a lively interest in the hitherto neglected South Grinnell district. Last summer the C. E. Society started a Sunday school there and has continued in the work until now. State Evangelist Tillett held services in the summer and secured a favorable hearing from a good many non-church-goers. Meanwhile a college house has been erected in the district and provision made for a six months' course of entertainments and lectures. The latter are to be given mainly by members of the college faculty, while instruction in such departments of study as may be called for is to be furnished by the young people interested in the mission.

HUMBOLDT AND WEAVER.—Rev. C. P. Boardman held his closing service with the former church, Dec. 30, at which time he received three new members, making a total of 240 additions during his pastorate of nearly five years. Of these 190 were on confession. The present membership is 232. At Weaver there were fifteen accessions, making a total of fifty-one received in the three years and eight months during which the church was supplied by Mr. Boardman. Both the churches have flourishing C. E. Societies organized during the pastorate just closing, and the Humboldt church has also a good junior society.

MASON CITY.—The annual meeting was made an occasion of joy for all the churches in the vicinity, whose pastors took part in these anniversary exercises, both morning and evening. The pastor of the Algona church, a member of this same association, has recently been laid aside with typhoid fever. During his illness brethren took turns in supplying his pulpit. By a series of well-organized exchanges special revival services have been held in the various churches with excellent results.

WINTHROP.—The annual reports show a gratifying condition in all departments. There have been about fifty additions to the membership during the year, all but three on confession. The congregations have steadily increased at the Sunday services, midweek meetings, Sunday school and Y. P. S. C. E. By unanimous vote the pastor, Rev. C. B. Carlisle, was asked to remain another year at an increased salary.

FOREST CITY.—Rev. J. D. Mason seems to be successful in his second pastorate here, which has now reached its fifth year. He has been able to unite opposing elements and to win to evangelical religion many influential families once bitterly opposed to it. This he has done by his firm and judicious conduct as well as by his steady advocacy of the simple Scriptural gospel.

LAKE VIEW.—The annual meeting was held Dec. 26, with addresses by Rev. R. L. McCord, a former minister, and Secretary Douglass. Rev. T. J. Woodcock is the pastor. The present membership is seventy, fifteen persons having united during the past year. The benevolences amounted to $95. The church closed the year without debt.

GARNER.—A reception was given, Dec. 17, to the new pastor, Rev. N. F. Douglas. The Sunday school gave a cantata the evening of Christmas which was listened to by a congregation of 500 at the Opera House. Union revival services are now being held, conducted by Mr. W. A. Sunday.

THOMPSON.—The church building is not yet completed but has been used for services for two weeks. Two English services and one Norwegian were held there Dec. 23. A short time previously a fair held by the young people netted $189.

GREEN MOUNTAIN.—Rev. O. H. L. Mason preaches to large congregations both morning and evening. A lecture was given in the church recently by President Gates of Iowa College, who also preached the following day.

BURLINGTON.—Dec. 29 was the forty-ninth anniversary of Dr. William Salter's installation as pastor. It will be fifty years next March since Dr. Salter began his labors here.

AMES.—The annual meeting was held Dec. 18. The present membership is 173. The expenditures for the year were $850 and the benevolences $542. Rev. F. J. Douglass is pastor.

Evangelist Tillett is now engaged in a series of special meetings at Van Cleve, which are opening with great interest.——At Buffalo Center the church is planning for a series of special meetings.——At Ledyard a series of union meetings is now in progress.——A new parsonage has recently been completed in Rockwell at a cost of $2,200. Rev. D. G. Youker is the pastor.

Minnesota.

MINNEAPOLIS.—Plymouth. A largely attended reception was held New Year's evening as a farewell to Dr. Wells. The various ministers of the city were in attendance.——Lyndale. The annual reunion of the Congregational ministers and their families was held, Dec. 30, with this church. There was a large representation, seventy-five being present. The occasion was pleasant, but saddened by the immediate and prospective departure of so many brethren. Dr. Wells leaves at once. Rev. C. E. Page goes to Buffalo, N. Y., where he enters business Rev. E. C. Whiting has just resigned at Fifth Avenue Church, and one or two other brethren have expressed the determination to go.

EXCELSIOR.—Rev. T. A. Turner has closed his four years' pastorate. Removals from the town have weakened the church, but there is a hopeful feeling and determination to go forward. This is the second Congregational church organized in the State. It will be supplied by different ministers for a few weeks and in the spring a pastor will be secured.

GROVELAND.—This little enterprise on the shores of Lake Minnetonka has a small field, but has decided to become self-supporting, much of the sacrifice, however, coming upon the faithful pastor, Rev. E. E. Rogers.

GRACEVILLE.—An ecclesiastical society has been formed at the out-station, Chokio, and a subscription of $350 raised to erect a small meeting house. The pastor was pleasantly remembered with Christmas gifts.

GRANADA.—A series of meetings has been held by Rev. C. B. Fellows. There have been a number of conversions and three additions upon confession, with more to follow.

SOUTH BEND.—This church is united with that at Belgrade under a student from the Moody Institute, Chicago, and is making progress. Five united with the church on confession last Sunday.

Rev. J. H. B. Smith and family have moved to Wadena. Mrs. Smith is an ordained minister and will assist in the work.

Nebraska.

LINCOLN.—First. Seldom has an investment of the Home Missionary Society brought forth better fruit than here, where the missionary contribution in a single year exceeds by nearly $100 the $500 put in by the society twenty years ago, when the church was so weak that a council was called to consider the question of disbanding. How great would have been the loss to the religious interests of this capital city—and, indeed, to the State—had this timely aid not been extended. The record of the church in benevolences is remarkable, showing a steady increase and an unswerving loyalty to the interests of the denomination at home and abroad. When the congregation was using every effort to erect its new house of worship and to dedicate it free of debt, nearly all of the money being raised by the pastor, Rev. Lewis Gregory, the contributions never shrank but rather increased. Mr. Gregory has not only been a successful pastor, but he has been a public-spirited citizen of large usefulness in the city, and a leader in the denominational work of the State. In the formative period of the public schools of the city he was a prominent member of the school board and his voice and vote were always for the best interest of the work. He has been for eighteen years a trustee of Doane College, is now president of the Nebraska Home Missionary Society, and was elected a corporate member of the A. B. C. F. M. at its last meeting. His influence for good and his hearty word of cheer have helped many a struggling home missionary enterprise in Nebraska.

NORFOLK.—There is great rejoicing over the excellent record with which the year closed. Every debt has been paid up to date including the pastor's salary. The Ladies' Aid Society during the past year has finished paying a floating indebtedness upon the church property, furnished the meeting house with electric lights and continues to pay for the lighting. The weekly offering system has been pushed with so much success that the pastor's salary has been paid monthly throughout the year, and nearly the full amount necessary for the coming year has been pledged at a public service without any personal canvass on the part of the trustees. Congregations are increasing. Prof. E. B. Gere of the Conservatory of Music has charge of the choir and has added largely to the value of this part of the service. Rev. J. J. Parker is the pastor.

CHADRON.—Dec. 31 was made memorable by the annual meeting combined with a watch night service. Though the financial condition was found to be full of difficulties, the tone of reports was cheerful, and the Ladies' Aid Society rejoiced over the payment of a troublesome debt, having raised during the year nearly $175.

Idaho.

Special help is needed from the C. H. M. S. to meet an exigency arising from the opening of an Indian reservation in the western part of the State.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

SAN FRANCISCO.—Bethany celebrated Dec. 22 as Pilgrim Sunday, the customary day of settling church accounts. The offering was $922, a trifle more than was needed.

OTHER CHRISTIAN WORK.

Rev. D. O. Mears, D. D., formerly pastor of Piedmont Church, Worcester, Mass., and more recently of Calvary Presbyterian Church, Cleveland, O., has accepted a call to the Fourth Presbyterian Church of Albany, N. Y., succeeding President Raymond of Union College. Dr. Mears has written several valuable books.

L. P. Rowland, well known throughout New England as the first General Y. M. C. A. Secretary on this continent, serving in that capacity in Boston for fifteen years, is still prosecuting with vigor and success evangelistic work, having just closed a series of union meetings in Grand Rapids, Mich., which resulted in 120 professed conversions. In that city too, at present his home, he lately celebrated his silver wedding. Many tokens of friendly interest from men like Hon. John Wanamaker, Sir George Williams, Russell Sturgis, Jr., and H. M. Moore testified to the high esteem in which he and his wife are held. Mr. Rowland is now laboring in Williamsburg, Va.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Blackboard work is being undertaken by many persons who have doubted their ability to do it acceptably.

The new year is accompanied by numerous changes in the officers of schools. It is estimated that about one-fourth of the superintendents are changed annually.

An increased average attendance has been secured in a number of schools by the use of a thermometer. It is a simple device and keeps before the school from week to week the record of attendance.

The use of the Bible in the school in place of lesson leaves in any form is increasing. The question has been frequently discussed during the past year and has brought forth numerous strong arguments in favor of the Bible as the text-book.

A commodious building for the school connected with the Congregational church at Campello, Mass., is being completed. It is the gift of Mr. George E. Keith and will accommodate the present school of nearly 700 with room for growth. A prominent feature of it will be a large number of classrooms opening on all sides of the main audience-room.

SLEEP.

Do you ever sleep?

Most persons try to. They make a more or less successful attempt at sleeping, but it isn't the undisturbed sleep of childhood.

Sleep, to be restful, must be continuous. To secure that kind you need one of two things: either a tired body or one of our upholstered box spring beds, overhung with hour-glass spiral springs and laid-hair top.

You will say it is the greatest luxury you ever enjoyed. No more twisting and turning in sleep, no more stiff backs and rheumatic twinges in the morning, but a bed on which you can maintain one position for a dozen hours without fatigue.

And you sleep! In a month's time you will see the difference in an increased bodily and mental vigor.

DR. CLARK'S FUNERAL.

The assemblage which filled the West Roxbury church last Monday afternoon was in itself an impressive witness to the love and reverence in which the lately departed secretary of the American Board was held. The residents of this quiet suburb, with whom Dr. Clark has sustained for so many years friendly and neighborly relations, representative pastors and laymen in the circle of Boston churches, the full staffs of the American Board and Woman's Board, workers in the Congregational House, as well as others who labor daily there, missionaries now in this country on a furlough—all drawn by a common impulse joined in the solemn, yet beautiful, Christian burial service.

For the note of gratitude for the rich, ripe life that is ended, and of hope in Him who is the resurrection and the life, dominated the exercises of the hour, which were under the direction of the local pastor, Rev. F. W. Myrick. The first address was that of Dr. Clark's successor and "son in the gospel," Rev. J. L. Barton, D. D., who touched on these three phases of Dr. Clark's character: his power over young people, his tender relations to the missionaries and the sympathy and love which he carried into his work as secretary. After Dr. Barton, Dr. Quint spoke in a familiar, simple and touching strain, as only one could who knew the man in an affectionate intimacy continuing through many years. The prayer was by Rev. E. B. Webb, D. D., One solo, Lead, Kindly Light, and the congregational hymn, In the Cross of Christ I Glory, constituted the appropriate music of the occasion.

The calm, cold winter day was melting into a radiant twilight when this company of sincere mourners filed out of the church after taking the last look at the beloved form which is to be laid to rest in Montpelier, Vt. But to their Christian thought Dr. Clark was not within the casket crowned with a shock of golden grain, but in a wider realm of joyous and painless activity.

PROGRESS IN PHILANTHROPY.

The Boston Ministers' Meeting last Monday was opened with a short devotional service, after which Rev. W. J. Batt, chairman of the Woburn Association, read a resolution, supplementary to those presented at a recent meeting of the Congregational Club, which recommended the formation of an international league, between all English-speaking peoples at least, which should adopt measures to police the earth, with a view to prevent great evils such as the present condition in Armenia. The resolution was approved by the meeting.

The moderator then presented Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant, and announced that she would speak on philanthropy in the last hundred years. Mrs. Chant laughingly said that inasmuch as the time was short she would spare her hearers the hundred years, and went on to speak particularly of the notable English women who have accomplished much in philanthropic ways. She referred first to Mrs. Elizabeth Frye, who inaugurated prison reform in Europe, then to Mary Carpenter, who began the inquiry as to how men came to be prisoners, and was practically ostracized for her efforts in behalf of the street boys in London, since, as Mrs. Chant says, we are still persecuting the prophets and later building their tombs. This work was the origin of the reformatory and industrial schools of England. After Mary Carpenter came another woman whose name stands high among honored women of England, Mrs. Josephine Butler, whose efforts in behalf of fallen women did so much to bring about a realization of the duty of Christians to this class of humanity, and of the fact that there is in the Bible only one law for both sexes and all ranks. Mrs. Catherine Booth was characterized as a marvelous woman, the inspirer and heart of the Salvation Army, and a fifth name, well known in this country as in England, was that of Lady Henry Somerset. Mrs. Chant said it was not a good thing for any reform movement to become fashionable, and it was a most unfortunate thing when society took to slumming. Christianity has not altered one iota from what it was in the days when only the "common people heard him gladly."

Speaking of present conditions Mrs. Chant said we were perhaps in danger of taking a wrong view of things, of listening too much to the noisier part of the community and depending upon wealth and material prosperity for helpfulness rather than upon personal character and righteousness. Christianity is as creative and developing a force as when it overthrew the Roman Empire, and it is the divine power of divine truth which always has and always will redeem.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

Trade continues quiet and the volume has shrunk, if anything, because of stocktaking throughout the country. The first week of the year is always a period of dullness, between seasons as it were, and so it is without special significance.

But at the present time there have been additional reasons for a dull trade, and, moreover, there is no means at the moment of knowing when these causes will disappear. These causes are the recent panic, the chaotic condition of the money market and the deadlock at Washington.

The scarcity of greenbacks and the desire to hoard gold has caused the latter to go to a premium. But this virtual premium has caused no alarm for its causes are understood.

After the bonds of the new issue have been placed and the money market resumes its normal status, we believe that general trade will undergo great improvement. The size of the new issue, $100,000,000, will render a recurrence of these gold scares an impossibility for a long time to come, and will afford merchants and manufacturers a chance to go about their affairs without fear of waking up some fine morning soon to another Treasury crisis.

In other words, the Treasury reserve question will be lifted from the minds of the people, and ere the situation can again become acute it is the opinion of many that the necessary changes in our currency laws will be accomplished.

MR. JOSEPH COOK'S CONDITION.

So many contradictory and varied, not to say alarming, reports have been in circulation regarding Mr. Cook that we have taken pains to ascertain the exact facts, and we are glad to say that they present, on the whole, a more favorable showing than the public has been led to expect.

Mr. Cook sailed from San Francisco the 15th of June last and spent the first two weeks in Honolulu as the guest of Chief-Justice Judd, delivering, during his stay there, the Fourth of July address. Immediately thereafter he took ship for New Zealand, where he lectured ten times in twelve days. Australia was his next stopping place, where he received a warm welcome from many who recalled his former visit in 1882. His public addresses there were mainly under the auspices of Y. M. C. Associations.

On the evening of Aug. 31 Mr. Cook delivered at Melbourne his lecture, Seven Modern Wonders. The next day, which was Sunday, he had an engagement at Dr. Bevan's church, but, during his preparation for the service, was seized with a sudden attack of vertigo, the effusion of serum so affecting the optic nerve as to cause almost total loss of sight for the time, but by the end of September he was sufficiently restored to justify the physicians in allowing him to embark from Sydney for Japan, where he was to meet his wife. This voyage, however, of thirty-nine days in a freight steamer, through tropical seas and fierce storms, was a very trying experience for one alone and just recovering from a serious illness. When he reached Japan, on Nov. 21, he was weak in body and depressed in spirits and the best medical advice that could be secured favored a speedy return to America.

It was certainly providential that the Japanese deputation of the American Board, having completed its labors, was just setting sail for this country and its members gladly afforded Mr. and Mrs. Cook every assistance in their power. During the trip across the Pacific he was able to come to the public dining-room more or less, where he talked as interestingly and rationally as ever on many themes. He slept, however, only under the influence of opiates and nervous indigestion necessitated extreme care with reference to his diet. He was, moreover, like others in a similar condition, the victim of melancholia, and worried almost incessantly over his condition, fearing that he might not live to reach his native land.

At San Francisco the physicians felt that it was perfectly safe for him to travel East, although Mr. Cook himself feared the consequences of such a journey, but the overland trip was begun under the careful oversight of Drs. Barton and Bradford and was successfully completed. The only stop of any length was at Chicago, where the party stayed five hours, and Dr. Bradford detached himself from it to go to Montclair by another route, Dr. Barton accompanying Mr. and Mrs. Cook to Clifton Springs.

Mr. Cook's case, then, may be described as one of severe nervous prostration due doubtless to prolonged and unceasing activity as lecturer, author and editor for the last twenty years, but in the judgment of Dr. Barton and of the physicians at Clifton Springs there is reason to anticipate a favorable termination of this sudden collapse and his restoration in due time to the ranks of the world's workers, among whom he has taken so conspicuous a place.

Asthma, Bronchitis and Kindred Diseases "Catarrh Permanently Cured"

BOSTON, MASS., April 20, 1894. (Care Jordan, Marsh & Co.)

Dear Sir: I had catarrh for twenty years, and the last ten years (all of which time has been passed in this great establishment) I suffered fearfully. One half-dozen handkerchiefs per day would be used. It extended to my throat; the base of my tongue was badly affected. I constantly kept in my mouth cardamon seeds, or some such breath purifier. I could not sleep with my mouth closed. I began using Hyomei in December, and in two weeks I was entirely—and now, after four months and no return of the disease, I can say, permanently—cured. I am going to ask the head of the firm, Mr. Eben D. Jordan, to indorse this statement. MRS. ELVIRA E. B. GIBSON.

Indorsed—Eben D. Jordan.

Hyomei is a purely vegetable antiseptic, and destroys the germs which cause disease in the respiratory organs. The air, charged with Hyomei, is inhaled at the mouth, and, after permeating the minutest air-cells, is exhaled through the nose. It is aromatic, delightful to inhale, and gives immediate relief. Consultation and trial free at my office.

Pocket Inhaler Outfit, Complete, by Mail, $1.00, consisting of pocket inhaler, made of deodorized hard rubber (beautifully polished), a bottle of Hyomei, a dropper, and full directions for using. If you are still skeptical, send your address; my pamphlet shall prove that Hyomei cures. Are you open to conviction?

Cod-liver oil is something more than a fat. Its peculiar action depends on a number of substances, among which might be mentioned iodine and phosphorus. There can be no substitute for cod-liver oil, because there is no other oil known which has in natural combination with it such a large number of valuable medicinal agents.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil, with the hypophosphites contains the whole oil, with its natural properties, and in a thoroughly emulsified or digested condition. The hypophosphites increase the appetite and impart strength to the nervous system. This combination has marked curative properties in a number of diseases of the skin and scalp, to which scrofulous persons are peculiarly liable. Such diseases as chronic eczema, ringworm, and other skin affections, are often quickly cured by the constitutional effects following the use of Scott's Emulsion.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING.

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, JAN. 3.

Mrs. C. H. Daniels presided and spoke of "assured victory" which can make the individual daily life more courageous, which has power to brighten the aspect of events transpiring in the world today, and which crowns the new year with hope.

Miss Atkinson brought a message from Mrs. Hiram Bingham, now in Honolulu, where she and Dr. Bingham are both laid aside from active service, and Mrs. Goodell led in prayer for them. The calendar topic, Prayer for Increased Missionary Zeal in the Churches at Home, opened the way for several encouraging testimonies. Mrs. Kellogg alluded to the increase of personal work in behalf of home missions, and said that the attempt to raise the debt seemed to have been a blessing to women. "Every one who gives a large sum helps another to do it."

Miss Dyer quoted Phillips Brooks: "No man or woman of the humblest sort can be really strong, gentle, pure and good without the world being better for it, without somebody being helped and comforted by the very existence of that goodness," and applied the thought to the heroism of our missionaries as entering into our lives here at home. Mrs. Talcott of Talcottville, Ct., had just brought in new subscribers for Life and Light. Mrs. Stedman had found increasing interest in the prayer calendar.

Miss Pierson of Meriden, always in the rooms associated with North China, said: "I would be back there now if I could, and to stay, war or no war." She also gave some of the experiences of herself and associates when in danger from marauders and the word was given, "Pass on; these are our friends."

Miss Kyle told of some encouragements which she had met in touring in Vermont, and Mrs. Woodbury almost duplicated them in relating some of her experiences in touring for the A. M. A. A story of recent trials and heroism at Marsovan was well told by Miss Washburn as she had gathered it from late letters. As the verse:

> Thy saints, in all this glorious war,
> Shall conquer, though they die, was being sung, a messenger came with the tidings that Dr. N. G. Clark had passed away. Miss Stanwood spoke of his relations to the Woman's Board, his cordial indorsement of its organization from the very beginning, even when others who afterwards favored it were doubtful, his wise counsels often sought and always kindly given, the delightful association with him in the work for many years, and the deep sense of personal loss which this announcement brings to a large circle here, and which it will carry to many a missionary heart in distant lands. The closing prayer was thanksgiving for what he has been and has done, and petition for his nearest and dearest and for all who are bereaved in his translation.

Dr. Hunter's Lectures on the Lungs.

No. 7.

Will Any Climate or Change of Air Cure Consumption?

COD-LIVER oil, cough mixtures and change of climate used to be the stereotyped treatment for all consumptive cases, and under it the disease was so invariably fatal that it came to be regarded as incurable. And it cannot be doubted that physicians rather encouraged the belief in its incurability, because their ministrations always resulted in failure.

The thought that consumption could be cured by air alone was one of the oldest delusions of its treatment. It has been persistently tried for centuries, in every climate of the globe, and invariably terminated in disappointment.

We now know that consumption is a germ disease of the lungs, common among the natives of all lands. It is a little less common in warm than cold countries, because in the latter congestions of the lungs are more prevalent. The difference, however, is very slight, only a fraction of one per cent. Those, therefore who go to warm countries with the disease are no better off than natives of such countries who have consumption contracted in that climate. As the latter get consumption and die of it, despite the climate, it is folly to suppose northern patients would be cured by going to it. Change of air is always beneficial to the general health, because it is helpful to the appetite, digestion and strength of the patient temporarily, but the benefit is only general and in no sense curative of the lung disease. As no natural air can kill the germs in the lungs, or heal the wounds they have inflicted, no climate in the wide world will ever cure consumption. California, Texas, Colorado, Florida and the Adirondacks in this country, and Nice, Naples, Villa Franca, Egypt, Algiers and Madeira in the Old World, have all been tried in vain. The graveyards of those countries attest the failure of their climate to cure the disease. It is a cruel deception to pretend that living parasites, which are devouring the tubes and cells of the lungs, as moths feed upon wools and furs, can be destroyed and expelled by any natural atmosphere in the world. No other germ disease of the body was ever cured by air alone, and all medical experience goes to prove that the germs of consumption cannot be got rid of by any change of climate.

Do not, however, imagine from this that I am opposed to change of climate, or do not regard pure air as necessary to a proper treatment of the lungs. The air is the life of the lungs. "God breathed into his nostrils and man became a living soul." Air is the natural purifier of the blood and the element which assimilates and makes new blood out of the foods eaten, and is therefore necessary to health, just as good food, proper clothing and regular exercise are necessary to good health. Wherever they can be best obtained with the least exposure to injury is the best place for the sick. But what I wish to impress upon all is that no climate in the world will kill the germs of consumption, or save from death those afflicted with lung disease. This can be done only by inhaling germ destroying medicines into the lungs. Such germicides have been discovered by me, and I am now applying them with great success in all forms of lung disease. It is only by properly medicating air that it can be made healing and curative of lung complaints. The germs in the lungs are the source of all the danger to the patient. If they are not reached and expelled they destroy the very citadel of life. They cannot be reached by anything taken by the stomach, nor by any hyperdermic injection through the skin. The germicides must be brought into actual contact with the germs in the tubes and cells of the lungs, or no cure will result. That is why I say that my treatment by inhaled germicides is the only course that can possibly arrest and cure consumption.

IN the beginning of a new year, when the winter season of close confinement is only half gone, many find that their health begins to break down, that the least exposure threatens sickness. It is then as well as at all other times, and with people even in good health, that the following facts should be remembered, namely: that Hood's Sarsaparilla leads everything in the way of medicines; that it accomplishes the greatest cures in the world; has the largest sale in the world and requires the largest building in the world devoted exclusively to the preparation of the proprietary medicine. Does not this conclusively prove, if you are sick, that Hood's Sarsaparilla is the medicine for you to take?

NERVOUSNESS CURED.—"My little girl has been troubled with fits, but she has not had any since I have been giving her Hood's Sarsaparilla. She has gained two pounds in weight and it has helped her very much. I have also been relieved of nervous trouble by Hood's Sarsaparilla." Mrs. Helen Scott, 92 Monument St., Charlestown, Mass.

EDUCATION.

—— The Roman Catholics have expanded the special season school idea and will have a "winter school" in New Orleans in February.

—— The American Society for the Extension of University Teaching of Philadelphia announces that Mr. C. R. Ashbee of King's College, Cambridge, Eng., and Mr. Joseph Wells of Oxford University are to be in this country from March 21 to April 20. Both these gentlemen are experienced university extension teachers and have been exceedingly popular as such in England. Mr. Wells is prepared to give single lectures on such subjects as The Intellectual Life in Oxford, The Oxford Movement, The English Universities, and courses of lectures upon the general history of Oxford and the great movements that have had their origin there. Mr. Ashbee, who is an artist and a practicing architect and was the organizer of a guild and school of handicraft in East London, where he had the aid and sympathy of such men as Walter Crane, has courses on Architecture as the Language of the English People, The History of English Handicrafts, The Workshops of Mediæval England, Design in Its Application to Furniture, Design in Its Application to Pottery, The Florentine Workshops of the Early Renaissance. Both these gentlemen will come prepared to use the stereopticon and their superior collections of slides, and colleges, art schools, preparatory schools and university extension authorities will do well to communicate with the Philadelphia society officials at 111 South Fifteenth Street.

The Congregationalist; Gentlemen: You will please find $2 inclosed for The Congregationalist for the year 1896. I am a home missionary and in the past, till last year, I received the paper free, but I can now pay for it and am very glad to be able to do so.

Owing to the hard times we shall have to part company. I am sorry that I have to write this, for I find your paper to be of great help to me. Please discontinue The Congregationalist after Jan. 1, unless you find some one that wants to send it to this home missionary.

I have received The Congregationalist another year as a gift from your Home Missionary Fund, and thank you and other donors very much for it. I do not feel any more able to pay for it the coming year, as my total salary is $475, with which to support a family of five persons and keep a team.

WHEN ten thousand doctors indorse Pond's Extract, it certainly must be the best.

EVERY FAMILY SHOULD KNOW THAT

PERRY DAVIS' VEGETABLE PAIN-KILLER

is a very remarkable remedy, both for INTERNAL and EXTERNAL use, and wonderful in its quick action to relieve distress.

Pain-Killer is a sure cure for Sore Throat, Coughs, Chills, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Cramps, Cholera, and all Bowel Complaints.

Pain-Killer IS THE BEST remedy known for Sea Sickness, Sick Headache, Pain in the Back or Side, Rheumatism and Neuralgia.

Pain-Killer is unquestionably the BEST LINIMENT MADE. It brings speedy and permanent relief in all cases of Bruises, Cuts, Sprains, Severe Burns, &c.

Pain-Killer is the well tried and trusted friend of the Mechanic, Farmer, Planter, Sailor, and in fact all classes wanting a medicine always at hand, and safe to use internally or externally with certainty of relief.

IS RECOMMENDED

By Physicians, by Missionaries, by Ministers, by Mechanics, by Nurses in Hospitals.

BY EVERYBODY.

Pain-Killer is a Medicine Chest in itself, and few vessels leave port without a supply of it.

☞ No family can afford to be without this invaluable remedy in the house. Its price brings it within the reach of all, and it will annually save many times its cost in doctors' bills.

Beware of imitations. Take none but the genuine "PERRY DAVIS."

The Electropoise TRADE MARK

CURE WITHOUT MEDICINE.

A SIMPLE HOME TREATMENT OF UNEQUALED VALUE.

Administered by attaching an instrument to the flesh, which aids the system to take on Oxygen from the Atmosphere, to the utmost amount the system can use.

IT IS A TREATMENT OF THE BLOOD, and by purifying, revitalizing, and loading it with Nature's Nerve Food, ejects DISEASE, by removing its causes. It applies of necessity to all diseases as no other treatment ever has.

THE OXYGEN COSTS NOTHING, the price of the instrument being all the expense necessary for years. It can be used by the entire family.

"I sought the aid of a dozen of the best physicians I could find, but they helped me very little. I also tried Compound Oxygen thoroughly, and the Electric battery, but they helped me very little. On Dec. 17, 1891, I commenced using the Electropoise, and continued it about four months. During this time my disabilities were greatly removed. In the course of a year from the time I commenced using it I enjoyed almost perfect health, which has continued to this date. I have great faith in it." REV. J. H. MANSFIELD, Athol, Mass.

☞ And Hundreds More.

NO HOME SHOULD BE WITHOUT IT.

THE PURPLE EAST.

England lacks a Cromwell, but has a Milton ready awaiting his advent. Was there ever a more awful indictment and stirring trumpet call than this poem of William Watson's?

Never, O craven England, nevermore
Prate thou of generous effort, righteous aim!
Betrayer of a people, know thy shame!
Summer hath passed, and autumn's threshing-floor
Been winnowed; winter at Armenia's door
Snarls like a wolf, and still the sword and flame
Sleep not; thou only sleepest; and the same
Cry unto heaven ascends as heretofore,
And the red stream thou might'st have stanched yet runs,
And o'er the earth there sounds no trumpet's tone
To shake the ignoble torpor of thy sons;
But with indifferent eyes they watch and see
Hell's regent sitting yonder, propped by thee,
Abdul the Damned, on his infernal throne.

You in high places, you that drive the steeds
Of empire, you that say unto our hosts,
"Go thither," and they go, and from our coasts
Bid sail the squadrons and they sail, their deeds
Shaking the world: lo! from a land that pleads
For mercy where no mercy is, the ghosts
Look in upon you faltering at your posts—
Upbraid you parleying while a people bleeds
To death. What stays the thunder in your hand?
A fear for England? Can her pillared fame
Only on faith forsworn securely stand,
On faith forsworn that murders babes and men?
Are such the terms of glory's tenure? Then
Fall her accursed greatness, in God's name!

Heaped in their ghastly graves they lie, the breeze
Sickening o'er fields where others vainly wait
For burial; and the butchers keep high state
In silken palaces of perfumed ease.
The panther of the desert, matched with these,
Is pitiful; beside their lust and hate
Fire and the plague wind are compassionate.
And soft the deadliest fangs of ravening seas.
How long shall they be borne? Is not the cup
Of crime yet full? Doth devilry still lack
Some consummating crown that we hold back
The scourge, and in Christ's borders give them room?
How long shall they be borne, O England? Up,
Tempest of God, and sweep them to their doom!

Alfred Austin, the new poet-laureate, has attempted to reply to this, but it can be held as representing truly the Nonconformist Christian sentiment of Great Britain. We find that the Methodist Times says: "Never in the history of political treachery has Lord Salisbury's perfidy towards Armenians been surpassed. In the avenging providence of God, England's turn may come some day. When that day comes she will perish unpitied," and The Christian World confesses that "the Nemesis of Lord Beaconsfield's pinchbeck glory is complete, and we are humiliated by the compulsion that lies upon us to endure a peace maintained through dishonor."

Religious Notices.

GORDON MISSIONARY TRAINING SCHOOL, Clarendon Street Baptist Church, Boston, opens Oct. 2. Evening classes Oct. 10.

THE GENERAL THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY, at its new building, 53 Mt. Vernon Street, Boston. Founded for the benefit of clergymen, theological students, Sunday school teachers, authors, and readers of a Christian literature of all denominations. It contains 17,000 volumes and 100 periodicals in the reading-room. Its books have circulated in more than 500 towns and villages in 12 different States of our country. It is supported by donations, bequests and fees from life and annual members, who have the full use of the library, and by the perpetual membership of churches, whose pastors have the use of the library, including the drawing of books, forever gratis. Donations and fees should be sent to Rev. Luther Farnham, secretary, at the library.

THE AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION has been at work seventy-one years for the retired rural districts. Its union methods specially commend it to communities of sparse populations divided in religious sentiments. Its missionaries visit families, distribute religious literature, hold evangelistic meetings and organize Sunday Schools. Probably no evangelizing agency has larger results for the amount expended. 11,000,000 children are yet out of Sunday School. Will you help to save them? Send to Rev. Addison P. Foster, D. D., New England Secretary, 1 Beacon St., Room 40, Boston.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the Society at New York.

Have You Tried It?

If you are suffering from any ailment which has baffled the skill of your physicians, it will pay you to send to Drs. Starkey & Palen for their treatment by the inhalation of Compound Oxygen, or, if convenient, call upon them and try their office treatment. Consultation, either personally or by letter, will cost you nothing. They do not pretend that their remedy will cure in every case, but in a majority of them. If you write them a full account of your symptoms, they will tell you frankly whether they think their remedy will help you or not. The Compound Oxygen, being a revitalizer and not a drug, will leave no ill effects behind. It will pay you to try it. If you wish further information, proof, etc., write us for our book of two hundred pages, and we will send it free of charge.

CHURCH REMODELING.

THOMAS W. SILLOWAY, Church Architect.

10 Park Square, Room 8, Opposite Providence R. R. Station, Boston.

Mr. Silloway's long practice in remodeling churches enables him to save and utilize all the valuable parts of an edifice, and for a comparatively small outlay produce a building preferable in most respects to a new one of much greater cost. He proposes to continue this work as a Specialty, and tenders his services to committees who would practice economy, and where the means are limited. A visit to the premises will be made, and an opinion and advice given on receipt of a request so to do.

Their Price Betrays Them.

ALUM baking powders make unwholesome food, and no housewife having regard for the health of her family will knowingly use them. Resist all efforts of pedlers and grocers to sell them to you.

Aside from the fact that low-priced baking powders contain alum and are unwholesome, their use is extravagant. It requires two pounds of the best of them to go as far as one pound of ROYAL BAKING POWDER, because they are deficient in leavening gas.

Economical food, pure and wholesome food, and food that is of finest flavor, light, sweet, and palatable, require the use of ROYAL BAKING POWDER.

BAKING Powders sold, either wholesale or retail, at a lower price than the "Royal" are almost invariably made from alum, and should be avoided under all circumstances.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

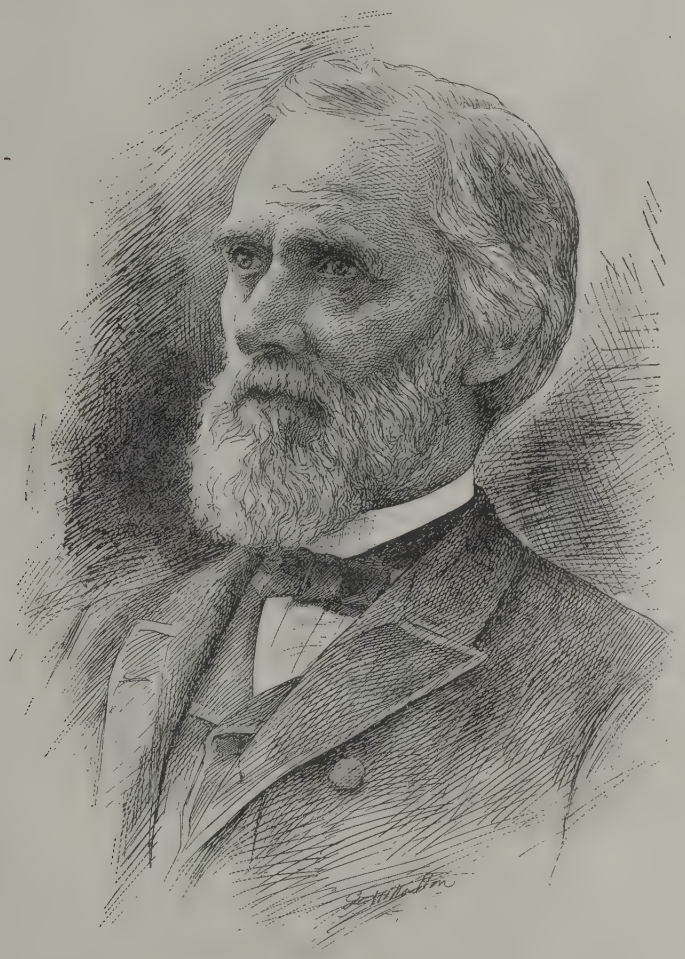
Boston Thursday 16 January 1896



REV. HERMAN N. BARNUM, D. D.
Missionary of the American Board at Harpoot, Turkey.

WE are glad to be here whatever may happen. If the Lord permits us to be cut off in an uprising of fanaticism, it will be because we can bless the country more in that way than in any other. Perhaps something of the kind is necessary. If so, for my part, I am ready. These are very delicate times and we need to live near to God, and I hope we do. The people are excited, but we are not, for we are sure that God's hand is in all this movement and that whatever may happen he will see that no grave mistakes are made.—From a recent letter from Dr. Barnum.

MONEY AND BANKING

ILLUSTRATED BY AMERICAN HISTORY.

By HORACE WHITE.

12mo. Cloth. 488 pages. Illustrated. $1.50.

The following letter from the Hon. A. B. HEPBURN, Comptroller of the Currency under President Harrison, has been received by the author of "Money and Banking":

NEW YORK, November 11, 1895.

MY DEAR MR. WHITE: You may well feel proud of your success in "Money and Banking." It is the best presentation of the current questions of finance that has been given to the public. Your diction is concise, clear, and cogent, and your conclusions are fortified by historical object lessons as well as abstract reasoning. You show the antiquity of all the popular fallacies of today and the evils that followed in their train in the past, letting your readers see clearly the dangers they portend. Your historical matter gives your book a readable interest which similar treatises seldom possess. I am sure it will command the attention of the reading public, and that it must prove a boon to mankind.

Sincerely, A. B. HEPBURN.

IN one of the small churches just outside the Boston circle a band of perhaps thirty men and women, in their respective homes, at an hour agreed upon every evening, have been praying for a number of weeks that God would signally bless the church to which they belong. These brethren and sisters are specific in their requests and are asking first of all for the descent of the Spirit upon themselves, then upon their fellow believers and then upon the community. This is certainly the right way of proceeding if human agency is to be employed to bring about a revival. How simple the method seems. How easily applicable to any church in city or country. Already there are signs of a deep and widespread awakening to divine things in this little community. It will be so everywhere that thirty, yea half or one-third that number of Christians, set themselves to secure it in the way that God approves.

Constant vigilance is the price of honesty and even of safety in administering public affairs. Many advocates of reform in government seem to believe that when right principles have once been victorious they will remain in power. A recent incident ought to teach them better. Boston has of late felt confident that substantial reform has been established in its city government. But a city official, who is also a member of Congress, recently sued for libel a citizen who charged him with dishonesty. After some testimony had been taken, the suit was withdrawn with a humiliating confession of defeat, and the plaintiff has expressed his astonishment at the gravity of the charges sustained against him. He appears to have been quite ignorant of the kind of public official he was. Yet we are told that many reputable persons voted for him who knew his record better than he assumes that he knew it himself. They regarded his administration of public affairs as so enterprising that they felt confident that he would look well after the interests of their part of the city. But good citizens want the whole city looked after, and know that when a man seeks office on the ground that he will discriminate in favor of those who vote for him, he will place his own interests before theirs every time.

The Advance of last week purports to quote Dr. J. G. Johnson as saying that one of the purposes of the deputation (of which he is a member) of the American Board to Japan was "the adjustment of the creed of the churches to the latest scholarship, with a view to maintaining their truth to Scripture." We do not believe that such instructions were given by the Board, and we are confident that the deputation will repudiate the statement that they had any such purpose. In former years the Board has been charged with attempting to adjust the creeds of Congregational churches, but the controversy over that matter has been decided. We are gratified to see that the brethren in their parting letter affectionately invited the Japanese Christians to join with their American brethren in maintaining the great truths on which we stand in common fellowship with those who acknowledge Jesus Christ as their Redeemer and King. But they imply no authority to set forth a creed for Japan or to adjust the creed of the Japanese churches to the latest scholarship. That would be too large a contract for any deputation or any Congregational missionary society. The possible implication that the deputation was committing itself to the higher criticism, assumed by many to be the latest scholarship, would excite great alarm among our churches. These are the excellent words of their letter:

Will you not unite with us and with all Christians in exalting the personality and fatherhood of God, the saving work of Jesus Christ, the need of regeneration by the Holy Spirit and his constant misistry, the duty of all men of every land and condition to love and serve one another, and the power of the endless life? In short, may we not, together with all evangelical Christians, unite in so presenting the gospel of our blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ that your land and our land and all lands shall in due time acknowledge him as Master and Lord?

Times of political excitement are times of commercial and financial unrest, and financial uncertainty is the father of speculative activity. With wars and rumors of wars in Europe, Africa and South America, with the tariff again under debate and the governing forces of the country hopelessly divided upon the question of the use of gold and silver in our currency, and in the face of a contest for the presidency with its debates and uncertainties reaching into every corner of the land, business enterprise is likely to be timid and speculation to be bold for the next few months. It is well for those who believe in the providential ordering of the world to keep a quiet mind and to avoid the speculative nets which are certain to be spread for the unwary. And those who are in places of leadership in the church owe it to the rank and file not to lend their names and influence to schemes which tempt the unwary to doubtful speculative investment. The recent announcement of the resignation of a college president and editor of the official missionary newspaper of one of our great denominations, in order to take the presidency of an investment company which offers large returns to small investors, seems to us a sign of the times, and one which is greatly to be regretted.

A REPRESENTATIVE FOREIGN MISSIONARY.

The picture which we print upon our first page affords an excellent opportunity to call attention to the fact that among our missionaries are some of the ablest men and women connected with the Christian Church in any department of work in any land. The care with which these special workers are selected, taken in connection with the developing and enlarging nature of the broad work into which they enter, makes such a result inevitable. Rev. Herman N. Barnum, D. D., has been for nearly thirty-nine years a missionary of the American Board in Eastern Turkey, residing in Harpoot. Equipped by the best training Amherst College and Andover Seminary could give him, he has been a commanding figure in the Turkish missions during the years of their largest growth. From the first, changes in the Turkish Government have always affected the mission work and thus the missionaries have necessarily been compelled to shape mission activities to correspond. For twenty-five years Dr. Barnum has kept himself thoroughly informed of all activities of the government through his constant intercourse with Turkish officials of all ranks and with the representatives of European governments, who have long since learned that it is well for them when in that country to consult this missionary before advising their respective governments upon important matters.

It is well known that at various times during his life in Turkey he has had great influence in preventing local outbreaks between the government and the governed. Dr. Barnum stands out pre-eminently as a man of marked diplomatic skill and rare good judgment, which is recognized equally in Turkey and in Boston. He is also a theological teacher of acknowledged ability and a preacher of remarkable spiritual force and power. Indeed he has won distinction in each of these respects.

In 1860 he married Miss Mary E. Goodell, a daughter of Dr. Goodell of Constantinople, whose name and memory are so intimately associated with the beginnings of Christian missions in the Ottoman Empire. Mrs. Barnum's name must not be omitted in speaking of the distinguished labors of her husband.

One would naturally think that the qualifications mentioned above were sufficient for one man, but the baptism of fire and blood that recently swept over the Harpoot field has revealed a depth of power and a strength of character that must forever stamp the spokesman and the brave body of missionaries whom he represents as Christian heroes.

On the 11th of last November, after the Kurds and Turkish soldiers of Harpoot had plundered and burned nearly all of the Christian houses in the missionary quarter of the city, including eight of the mission buildings which were then in flames, when massacre was rife and the air was rent with the cry of the wounded and dying, nearly 500 Christian refugees with the missionaries, driven from place to place by fire and bullet, found themselves in the large, new stone building of Euphrates College. The Turkish officers, seeing that in order to reach the refugees they must withdraw the Americans whom they feared to kill, attempted to induce the missionaries to come out from the building "that they might be the better protected." Dr. Barnum replied, "You can protect us here better than anywhere else; we shall remain and if you burn the building we will die with these Christians." They were all spared. Certainly the age of heroism is not past.

THE RESULTS OF THE JAPANESE DEPUTATION.

At the request of officers of the American Board we have hitherto refrained from attempting to anticipate the report of the deputation to Japan, two of whose members returned to Boston week before last. It was thought proper that the report should first be presented to the Prudential Committee, and afterwards to the public with the committee's recommendations. But as publicity has by one of the members of the deputation been unexpectedly given to the substance of the results of its investigations, and to the letter left with the Japanese brethren, courtesy does not require us to wait longer. Our correspondent from Japan, in another column, outlines the probable fruits of the deputation's work.

The visit of these brethren has had important influence in strengthening the faith of the Japanese churches and in deepening their evangelistic spirit. On this vital matter the words of our correspondent are very reassuring. A closer sympathy between the missions and the independent churches and a more careful supervision of mission enterprises by the churches are other important results expected. The unity of the churches has been greatly promoted by the visit of the deputation.

The educational work will continue to be controlled by the Japanese Christians who, by the laws of the nation, hold the mission property. We regret that they do not appear adequately to recognize the moral claims of the Board upon the contributions of American Christians invested in Japan which Japanese law has disbarred it from legally maintaining. At Kyoto and Kumamoto they even have proposed to charge rent for property purchased and paid for by the Board and now used by missionaries. For the honor of the Japanese brethren it is to be earnestly hoped that they will not press such claims. On this point, as our correspondent states, the deputation did the only thing they could do. They left with the churches a dignified statement of the Christian view of the requirements of common honesty, and every well-wisher for the churches of Japan will expect that they will show themselves faithful to their trusts. They will no doubt see that such action is necessary to the maintenance of the sympathy between American and Japanese churches which is for the highest welfare of both.

The deputation will not advise that new missionaries be sent to Japan or that the money appropriations shall be increased. It is probable that the committee will feel it necessary to reduce the amount to be expended in that country. To maintain the present force of missionaries and continue such gifts as seem necessary to carry on their work is all that can be expected or would be wise; and the independence and vigor of the Kumiai churches point to the assumption by them of an increasing proportion of the burdens of their great work.

That the best interests of the kingdom of Christ were much promoted by the visit of the deputation our correspondent's account places beyond question. The tone of hope and confidence in his letter is more encouraging than any we have recently heard from Japan. No doubt the fruits of this visit will appear yet more important as time passes. Other missions may be greatly quickened by the same means which this emergency has called out. We believe it would be a wise new departure in missions for our churches to send, from time to time, some of their ablest and most trusted men to the most important fields in the care of the Board.

CONFIRMING ONE ANOTHER.

Private correspondence contains much that if given to the world would confirm faith in the reality of religion and in the ultimate triumph of good over evil both in the individual heart and throughout the world. The holiday season is increasingly rich year by year in the volume and helpfulness of this kind of what may fittingly be called the literature of the inner Christian life. People are learning that a friendly note, a little word of sympathy affording a glimpse into the heart of the writer, is worth far more to the recipient than costly Christmas or New Year gifts.

Never did a New Year open when the world needed so much this reassuring of faith, these counsels of hope that pass in private channels from man to man. The stoutest hearted among us are not too brave in the face of all that looks today so calamitous. When a man like Dr. Parkhurst, who has in the darkest midnight sung a song of hope, gives utterance to the fear and doubt that find temporary lodgment even in his noble and buoyant heart, how can the naturally timid and shrinking Christian shake off the burden of anxiety and apprehension? It is to the refuge of Christian friendship as well as to God himself that we must betake ourselves. One writes, "As life goes on I can look into the future more steadily than I used. I can cling with a sort of desperate faith to the love and care of my Lord. Very largely it is because I have been so helped and cared for in these last years. Very dark places have been made bright, very tangled ways have been made straight and very hard places smooth." And another says, "My work does not show any large results in numbers added to the church and I am a little downhearted thereat, but I shall not descend to the plain of miserable pessimism. If a collapse is coming, which I do not believe will come, I am going down in the general wreck shouting that God is good; we are his children and the kingdom is slowly being realized."

Such words reveal not an exceptional faith but a state of heart and mind which almost any one can find even among a comparatively narrow circle of friends. All about us are souls that are working out their salvation, sometimes in tears and even in bloody sweat. In the midst of the daily struggle for material gain they still cherish the vision of the Eternal. Looking out upon nations apparently ready to spring at one another's throats, these believers in Christ cannot think for a moment that the world which he redeemed is going to pieces. Brutality, lust, sordidness and selfishness apparent on every side are powerless to quench their faith in God and goodness. If ever our own faith ebbs—and these are days that test it to the quick—let us cast ourselves upon the faith of others, which still encircles the world and sweeps it onward to its divine destiny.

PEACE WITH GOD THROUGH JESUS CHRIST.

Everybody seeks for peace. Even they who claim to care least for it, crave it and are restlessly striving, in one or another way, to attain it. It may not mean to some precisely what it means to others but all desire it as they understand it. If true peace, the peace of God, that peace which is due to inward consciousness of oneness with God in spirit, be sought, it can be obtained only in the way which God has appointed and approved. It can be gained only through accepting Jesus Christ as our Saviour.

It needs to be emphasized that peace is not stagnation, the utter absence of action and effort. Nor is it mere outward tranquillity, the quiet due to the lack of disturbing forces. Nor is it always even freedom from inward doubts and anxieties. It is that sure and serene confidence that all is going well, and will end well, for us which is due to the assurance that God reigns, and that he loves and cares for us unfalteringly. It is the dictate of philosophy and the testimony of experience that this peace with God is granted only to those who are disciples of his Son, Jesus Christ.

They are blessed indeed who possess it. It promotes stability of character. Our virtues and moral graces are enabled to root themselves firmly and to grow sturdily. It is like a soil hostile to sin and refusing any stimulating nourishment to evil. It promotes symmetry and beauty of character. It enables us to take just views of duty and to plan our lives so as to render them most fruitful and winsome. It promotes large usefulness, because it enables us to make our plans harmonize with God's plans and it gives our spiritual energies room to develop, while it saves us much of the friction and hindrance which are due to the necessity of correcting needless mistakes and of overcoming obstacles which might have been avoided.

Peace with God through Jesus Christ, the peace of forgiveness, of childlike trust in Christ's intercession, of honest consecration, of loving endeavor—this indeed is that peace which the world can neither give nor take away, nor even understand.

THE WEEK IN REVIEW.

Limitations of Saloons and Sunday Closing.

It has been one of the anomalies of the situation in New York State for the past year that while both of the great cities of New York and Brooklyn were under "reform" administrations in one there was no pretense of obeying the law closing liquor saloons on Sunday and in the other a very strict enforcement of the law. Mayor Schieren of Brooklyn, a German Lutheran, not only ignored, but deliberately refused, to execute the law, and though otherwise an admirable administrative officer, in so far as he was responsible for the neglect to close the saloons was a dangerous anarchist. A few days ago he ceased to be mayor and another German, Mr. Wurster, entered upon his career as mayor of the City of Churches, supposably intending to interpret and execute the Sunday-closing law as his predecessor had. But last Sunday a concerted movement of the Brooklyn churches began which threatens to give Mayor Wurster and the Republican managers of the city more trouble than anything they have yet faced. Led by Rev. Dr. R. J. Kent of the Lewis Avenue Congregational Church, 125 clergymen, representing fifteen denominations, have pledged their aid in educating public opinion and then forcing the city authorities to obey the law, and their sermons on Sunday set the keynote of the campaign. On Monday they waited on Mayor Wurster and informed him of their purpose. He was noncommittal but courteous.

Mayor Strong of New York city in his annual message issued last week was loyal to his police commissioners, and while he asserted his belief that it would be well to permit the citizens of the metropolis to determine by their votes whether they wish the saloons closed on Sunday, he also made it very plain that so long as the present law remains on the statute-book he intends to stand resolutely behind Mr. Roosevelt and his colleagues in their enforcement of it. This is a pleasant answer to the claims of those who predicted that Mayor Strong and Mr. Roosevelt were at odds.

The Raines Bill governing saloon licenses, introduced in the legislature of New York last week, would, if passed, reduce the number of saloons, increase the license fees and divert much of the income from town and municipal treasuries to the State treasury.

The charges of the Boston Herald against the New Hampshire Law and Order League are damaging if true, and call for action and explanation by the officials and friends of that organization.

Great Britain and the United States.

The outlook for the peaceful and honorable solution of the dispute between the two great English-speaking peoples grows brighter as the days go by. Within a week sentiment in England has changed greatly, thanks chiefly to the messages sent from Washington to the Chronicle by Mr. Henry Norman. They have revealed such a longing among public men in Washington for arbitration and peace; the sentiments expressed by the members of the committees on foreign relations, for instance, the men most directly responsible for formulating our foreign policy, have been so brotherly and manly that the British Foreign Office officials, British editors and British men have come to see that it will not do to refuse to make concessions. Coming at a time, too, when, harassed on every side, Great Britain has felt especially the force of friendly sentiments and "an honorable and courteous reserve," as the Standard put it, this revelation of the real American feeling has had peculiar force, and it is now announced semi-officially that Lord Salisbury has decided to publish, even before the assembling of Parliament, all the documents supporting the British side of the dispute with Venezuela and is willing also to submit the question to arbitration and give partial though not full weight to any decision that our boundary commission may make, though refusing still to arbitrate on the terms proposed by Venezuela or to recognize our right to trace the boundary line of a British colony.

It also has been both interesting and welcome to note the rapid growth of sentiment in Great Britain favoring the creation of a permanent arbitration tribunal to which all disputes of every kind, present and future, between Great Britain and the United States may be referred. This is an idea which Edward Everett Hale has been urging, in its international aspect, for years. In its narrower range, as between Great Britain and the United States, it has had other advocates, some prominent and some not so much so. But when Parliament assembles in February the scheme is likely to come before it, with enthusiastic and influential supporters.

Christians as Peacemakers.

Messages of fraternal regard and pledges of aid in commanding peace continue to come and go across the Atlantic between American and British Christians. Thus, last week, the committee of the Congregational Union of England and Wales cabled to Rev. Dr. H. A. Hazen, secretary of our National Council, the following message:

> The committee of the Congregational Union of England and Wales are confident of the abiding affection between the two countries and assure their brethren of their continued trust. They rejoice in the attitude of the American pulpits and promise that the churches on this side will watch and labor for peace.

To which Dr. Hazen replied as follows, Rev. Drs. A. H. Quint and F. E. Clark, representative brethren, also appending their names:

> We rejoice in the sentiment of our English brethren whom we love and trust. We share your desire for peace. We believe in righteous arbitration and are relying on your aid.

The president of the British Christian Endeavor Societies, F. F. Belsey, wrote to Dr F. E. Clark:

> I felt that I could not let 1895 breathe its last, among all these threatenings of strife and discord, without sending you a few lines, in my capacity as president of our National C. E. Council, to beg you and the 2,000,000 dear young Christian Endeavorers on your side to believe that we, their brethren and sisters here, would almost prefer death to hearing that an English gun had been fired against the United States, the broad America so many of us know and love.
> May God avert so direful a calamity. Bid them not only pray for peace, but remember that we will join them at the mercy seat in earnest entreaty that this, to us, inexplicable alarm, may be the occasion for a new and stronger alliance between all Christian hearts on either side of the Atlantic and that we, the Christian Endeavorers of both countries, will, in the spirit of Christ, do our utmost to create a public opinion in favor of righteousness and peace whenever either is threatened by our statesmen or our press. Let this be a "holy alliance" that shall leave its traces on the future history of our world.

And in reply the president of the international organization cabled:

> The officers of the United Society of Christian Endeavor heartily reciprocate your sentiments. We pray for peace and for righteous arbitration of all difficulties between nations.

Great Britain, the Transvaal Republic and the British South African Company.

Peace at the present time reigns in the Transvaal. Dr. Jameson and his leading lieutenants in the filibustering expedition are still under arrest, and sixty or more of the leaders of the Uitlanders—including a brother of Sir Cecil Rhodes—also have been arrested by order of President Kruger. The expedition seems to have come to naught mainly because of the failure of the Uitlanders of Johannesburg to co-operate with Dr. Jameson after they had given pledges to unite with him should he venture to come to their assistance. The shrewdness and determination of President Kruger made such co-operation by them with Dr. Jameson impossible. In general it may be said that President Kruger's handling of the affair from the beginning has been masterly. He seems to know just when to be conciliatory and when to be most resolute. He apparently has in his possession evidence that Sir Cecil Rhodes and the British South African Company instigated the expedition. Holding this, and Dr. Jameson as well, as hostage, he is in a position to demand from Great Britain large indemnity, and at the same time reveal at his pleasure facts concerning the attack on the Transvaal which will compel the British Government to make a most searching investigation into the South African Company's condition and its relation to Dr. Jameson's exploit. Sir Cecil Rhodes already has been compelled to resign the premiership of the Cape Colony, his brother is under arrest at Johannesburg, the military supplies of the company have been ordered placed under the control of Sir Hercules Robinson, governor of Cape Colony, and Secretary Joseph Chamberlain of the British Foreign Office announces the British Government's intention to begin promptly a most thorough investigation of the matter in all its aspects.

Mr. Chamberlain's management of this critical affair has exalted him in the opinion of friend and foe in England during the past week. Radicals and Tories unite in praising him and he has received from Queen Victoria and the populace peculiar demonstrations of their regard for the force and tact he has displayed as colonial secretary. But the most trying ordeal is still before him in the work of adjusting the relations of the Boers and the Uitlanders, in the settling of accounts with Sir Cecil Rhodes and men who follow him implicitly, and in maintaining the British rights to suzerainty over the Transvaal, living up to the treaties with the Boers and at the same time refraining from giving occasion for an uprising which might result in the creation of a South African republic freed entirely from British control, with Cecil Rhodes as president.

Senator Morgan has introduced in the United States Senate a resolution of sympathy for the Transvaal, which it is to be hoped will go no farther than the committee to which it was referred. The Transvaal Republic as at present constituted is an oligarchy, and resolutions attacking Great Britain by inference may do much to complicate and retard the rapprochement now under way between the United States and Great Britain. There are 500 Americans in the Transvaal, many of them holding most important positions, and some of them under arrest at the present time. The British authorities have been asked to guard our citizens' interests and complied gladly. This act has beneficent import.

Germany and Great Britain.

The rapid assembling of a special naval squadron by Great Britain, the preparations for aggressive action made at Woolwich and other centers of naval and military operations, the tone of the English papers voicing accurately the intense popular feeling, have made it very clear to Germany, and the rest of Europe as well, that Great Britain is alert and not disposed to cringe even though she be without allies and seemingly thoroughly isolated in her foreign relations. Opinion in Germany is much less truculent than it was a week ago, and while there are conflicting reports from Berlin as to the exact meaning of the emperor's action, it is true that, as we go to press, the outlook for peace is much brighter than it was a week ago. There are those who attribute the emperor's action to his constitutional defects, his impulsiveness, his love of notoriety. There are others who see in his message to President Kruger of the Transvaal a link in a chain of events indicating a temporary or perhaps a permanent alliance between Russia, Germany and France, to check if possible the colonial expansion of Great Britain in Africa and elsewhere. If the more peaceful attitude of Emperor William at the present time is due, as some assert, to the pertinent advice of his grandmother, Queen Victoria, a new motive inducing Great Britain to submit longer to the rule of a dynasty of German origin may have been created.

Turkey, Armenia and the United States.

No news of very recent massacres has been cabled across during the past week, but further details of the awful slaughter of the past months has been coming in to the officials of the American Board, to the relatives and friends of missionaries on the field and to the Armenians in this country. With the tension between Germany and Great Britain as strained as it has been during the week, and the combinations and re combinations of European Powers under way, the sultan has had no special pressure put upon him. If it be true that the British fleet in the Mediterranean has been ordered to disperse, then it is useless indeed to hope for any further "concert of the Powers," and to Russia must the appeal be made for intervention and occupation of the territory now under the harrow of the sultan, and there are some reasons for thinking that Great Britain would not stand in the way of such a step and all that would legitimately follow from it. Our fleet off the Turkish coast is vigilant, useful in affording relief in the seaboard towns, and to a degree helpful in protecting our citizens and their property in the interior. No new vessels have been dispatched from this side. Possibly Miss Clara Barton and her assistants in the Red Cross work, who expect to sail in two weeks, will be sent to Turkey on one of our cruisers. There is much opinion in favor of this finding expression now.

The Evangelical Alliance of the United States has issued an appeal to the Christian public asking that it aid Miss Barton. The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions is co-operating enthusiastically in this Red Cross move, which, if successful, means such an inexpressible relief to the missionaries, who are now the only ones on the field to succor and comfort the distressed. Though the times are unpropitious for giving, the financial resources of this enterprise certainly must be made equal to the degree of love and self consecration of those who probably soon will sail for Turkey, and now that the sultan has definitely asserted his intention to exclude the Red Cross workers, and expressed his refusal in terms so full of untruth and contempt for those who stand behind the movement, it is imperative that we as a Christian people and a liberty loving nation act in such a way as to put an end to the Armenian inferno.

NOTES.

When President Cleveland describes a newspaper as "maliciously mendacious," he probably means that its editor is a liar.

Out of twelve candidates backed by the Toronto Prohibitory Alliance in the Toronto municipal election last week eight were elected.

For the next six months look out for daily discussion in the newspapers of presidential candidates. Many will call and several be called, but only one will be chosen.

Governor Lowndes of Maryland, in his manly inaugural, let it be known that he intended to guard the civil rights of the Negroes and secure for them their just educational advantages.

Toronto bought its street cars four years ago and leased them to a company. The city makes a handsome profit, so does the company, while the people have adequate service and get free transfers. Why should not American cities learn from Toronto's experience?

Sir McKenzie Bowell is still in power in Canada. For treachery and selfishness history has few parallels to the desertion of the Conservative premier by seven of his former colleagues. Instead of benefiting them or their party it has injured them and strengthened the premier.

The petty trick played by Boston's aldermen in authorizing glove contests, which are nothing more or less than prize fights, should lead to such State legislation as will make it impossible for those supposed to represent the people in the municipal legislature to act in this way again.

Alabama's prison convicts are to build a cotton factory and operate it on the penitentiary farm and the State will get the profits. That is far more sensible than to shut up prisoners in idleness and make the public support them because there is not work enough to go round.

Twelve governors of States have responded to appeals for advice to Christian Endeavorers as to their duties as citizens. Several of them advised the body to join one of the political parties. All of them wanted the Endeavorers to render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's. Some wanted Cæsar to have them altogether.

President Cleveland, by naming Mr. Francis E. Leupp of Washington as Indian commissioner, has shown his sincere interest in the welfare of the Indian. Mr. Leupp succeeded Rev. C. C. Painter as agent of the Indian Rights Association at Washington, and has long been a faithful friend of civil service reform and securing to the Indian his rights.

The weather bureau last week gave notice of the approaching cold wave twenty four hours in advance of its arrival. The timely warning saved enough money to shippers of perishable goods to pay the expenses of the bureau for a score of years. The practical application of scientific discoveries is making the whole country richer. Thus the colleges pay back large interest in kind to their donors.

The Hawaiian republic is trying a small band of conspirators recently discovered. As before, in one of its trying hours, a lottery franchise seems to have tempted to indiscretion and brought about discovery and impending punishment. Hon. George Spalding of Michigan has introduced in the House of Representatives a measure which calls not only for the annexation of Hawaii but decides its form of government.

Mayor Strong married Mrs. Alva E. Vanderbilt, the divorced wife of Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt, to Mr. O. H. P. Belmont, a divorced man, last Saturday. Presumably Mayor Strong was asked to officiate because no reputable clergyman would act. The plutocrats of New York are fast developing the free and easy notions respecting marriage which have always accompanied civilizations resting on lucre.

IN BRIEF.

Our next issue will have a special bearing upon the approaching Day of Prayer for Colleges, which falls this year on Jan. 30. We shall present a graphic picture of the religious life in three representative colleges, Yale, Oberlin and Colorado, together with other matter pertinent to this important anniversary.

Pay to your church what you promised last year. The New Year is not even yet well begun till that debt is canceled.

The Interior says, "It is time for Britain to be rid of her sneering Salisburys and for us to be rid of our bloviating Olneys." What in the world does bloviating mean?

Wellesley College has a promise of $50,000 when the present legatee is through with the use of it. Would that Wellesley had many such gifts and more that could be received at once!

There are about as many ministers who think it shows patriotism to shout for war as there are who think it shows bravery to encourage prize fights. But those who do think so shout very loud.

A clever critic of Theodore Roosevelt's statement that "the Monroe Doctrine had for its first exponent—Washington," says it reminds him of Henry Ward Beecher's statement that Moses was a Christian.

Now that what some considered the "impossible" has been overcome, and Drury College set upon its feet by Dr. Pearsons's generosity, it would seem as if Mount Holyoke, Whitman and Fargo could not fail speedily to comply with the conditions upon which their endowments may be so richly increased.

Dr. Edward Everett Hale says, wittily, that the first thing to be avoided in a hymn-book is theology, the second is ethics, the third is metaphysics and the fourth is history. As hymn-books are supposed to be collections of hymns, it is obvious what Dr. Hale thinks a hymn should not be. Will he please tell us what it may and should be?

Respectfully commended to the warring factions of the North Avenue Church, Cambridge, the First Church, Lowell, and to any others in similar affliction: "Do all things without murmurings and disputings, that ye may be blameless and harmless, children of God, without blemish in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation, among whom ye are seen as lights in the world."

A cable to the American press last week announced the meeting in London of the committee appointed to arrange for the reception of The Congregationalist's pilgrimage party next June. Courtesies were offered from persons of prominence, and it was decided that an English party will accompany the Americans to Holland. Our correspondence with those who contemplate the trip is already extensive.

The years move so swiftly that it seems hardly possible that three can have sped by since the man who occupied so large a place in Boston life, Phillips Brooks, entered into a larger sphere of activity. Yet there are hundreds, no doubt, who keep this anniversary quietly in the inner chambers of their own hearts and to such, as well as to all admirers of the great preacher, Mrs. Smith's article in this issue will be particularly welcome.

The Outlook, publishing an appeal for money to erect a new building for the First Church at Plymouth in memory of the Pilgrims, says, "The church is in no sense sectarian." That the church is Unitarian, and that the building projected is managed by Unitarians, ought to be well known. Perhaps the Outlook meant to say that Unitarians are not a sect. But it is right that people should be informed to what they are asked to give.

Monuments and inscriptions are constantly yielding new discoveries of records of prehistoric times. Central America is disclosing buried treasures of wisdom, as well as Asia and Africa. Dr. Le Plongeon has found in Yucatan, in temples, hieroglyphics and wall paintings of ancient times, accounts which he believes correspond to those in the early chapters of the Bible. He thinks he has discovered a version of the story of Cain and Abel, and that the early dwellers in Yucatan made their way to Egypt. He expects to find that Egyptian inscriptions will support his interpretation of the hieroglyphics of Central America.

From the north of Scotland comes, in a private letter, a call for peace as clear and ringing as any note of alarm that ever roused the brave Highlanders to the defense of their liberties. Writes this bluff Scotchman, an ardent Congregationalist, by the way: "I do hope this unexpected tension will lead to an immediate fraternal and mutually satisfactory arrangement between America and Britain that will forever hinder a mad engineer sitting on a safety valve in either country from being in a position to blow up the boiler and sacrifice millions of innocent lives. God forgive politicians of whatever nationality that would dream of setting our English-speaking race a-fighting."

It is a pleasure to announce that Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster, as for half a dozen years past, will continue to write frequent articles for The Congregationalist this coming year. We are sure that hosts of our readers have not only profited by her strong and helpful words, but have learned to love the woman through the medium of her writings. It is pleasant, also, to be assured by her in a private letter that she loves her work for The Congregationalist because of the evidence that she is the means thereby of helping many souls. "I seldom write," she says, "a heart article for you that does not bring me letters from the tried or the comforted in return."

The scribe of the Mendon (Mass.) Conference insists that the credit of having been the first to send in its annual report to the Year-Book is due, not to him as we said last week, but to the clerks of the local churches. Well, they all worked together, and if their example were followed, as it easily could be, in all the churches, the Year-Book would be issued many weeks sooner than it has been. We think, however, that it is the clerks rather than the conference scribes who as a rule need the most prodding, and we regret to say that a disproportionate number of these delinquents reside in comparative proximity to the Congregational House.

Rev. Dr. Emery of Taunton wishes to explain the omission of Professor Park's name from his list of "veteran ministers" published in our issue of Dec. 19, for the reason that he gave only those whose names are recorded in the Minutes of the General Association of Massachusetts. Professor Park not being at present member of any local association, the date of his ordination does not occur on the tables of the association. As a matter of fact, however, he is doubtless not only the oldest minister of our denomination—in date of ordination—in the State but, according to the Year-Book, in the country. That list gives two men ordained in 1826, Dr. Edward Beecher, who has died within the year, and Rev. William R Egleston of Kansas, in whose case the ordination date should evidently be 1862.

The one Christmas sermon we have heard of against peace on earth was preached in a prominent Unitarian church in western Massachusetts, the pastor taking Jesus' words, "I came not to send peace, but a sword," and frankly arguing the benefits of war, through which the world had made its greatest advances and by which the manliest qualities of men and nations are developed, while in peace they become self-indulgent and corrupt. The theory sounds fine, but how about the loss of a few hundred thousand lives, the destruction of all the industries and philanthropies of two great nations? If the preacher is right, the Peace Society should disband, arbitration be forever set aside and Christian civilization give itself up to manufacturing the enginery of war and leading the way in promoting the welfare of the world by universal carnage! But is he right?

A cheerful view it is that Dr. Lyman Abbott takes of the power of the pulpit today. At least his lecture last week before the Yale theological students was marked by a positive, hopeful note, while to those who differ from him he put the pertinent question, How many people could be gathered year after year, month after month and week after week to listen to lectures about art, literature or any department of human culture? His wonder is not that more people do not go to church, but that so many do go. We trust Dr. Abbott is not misled by the size of the congregations that usually flock to hear him. One of the numerous naïve stories credited to Phillips Brooks, but which we are inclined to think Apocryphal, is one that says that he once innocently remarked that he did not understand all this hue and cry about people not going to church, "for wherever I go throughout the country I find the churches extremely well filled."

The Sacred Heart Review is concerned to know what we will say to the facts stated in Rev. W. B. Hale's article in the January Forum. It wonders whether we will be as alert to condemn the "living picture shows," "skirt dances," etc., in Protestant churches in Massachusetts as we were to condemn the lotteries at Roman Catholic church fairs in Canada, lotteries that the Review still believes are "usually harmless." In so far as Mr. Hale's article contains facts, and so far as the facts reveal reprehensible methods of raising church revenue, we condemn such methods unsparingly. The point to be proved first is, Are Mr. Hale's facts facts or distorted imaginings? Mr. Hale's past contributions to the information of the American reading public have not given him rank as a safe guide, nor elevated The Forum in the estimation of the public. The Congregational church of the town in which he is a neighboring pastor had before this endured the odium of his exaggerated statements and misrepresentations, which, however, have pretty much ceased to gain credence. The Forum is more to be blamed for giving publication to this Pharisaical gossip than the gossiper.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

Chicago and the Armenians.

There is no less interest in the Armenian sufferers here in Chicago than in New York or Boston, yet for various reasons little has been done for them and it seems hard even now to secure the large gifts which the situation demands. This is due in part to the way in which the cause has been presented and in part to the multiplicity of objects which are appealing for money. Probably never in the history of the city were there so many objects, all of them worthy, pleading for help. One who is conscientiously desirous of doing what one can for one's fellow-creatures in their distress is puzzled to know which way to turn. Only the very rich can give to all, and to most it seems to be a duty to sustain one's own church and its work even at the expense of everything else.

Last Sunday afternoon a large audience gathered in Central Music Hall, with Mayor Swift as chairman, to consider what could be done for the Armenians. Resolutions of sympathy were adopted and long telegrams sent to Queen Victoria and the Czar of Russia proposing, very foolishly as it seems to many, that the Armenians be encouraged to emigrate and pledging the aid of the United States in this direction. General Howard and Miss Clara Barton were heard with great interest. Dr. Henson made some good points, but on the whole the meeting failed to arouse the enthusiasm which had been anticipated. The collection was turned over to Miss Barton for the Red Cross Society. The mayor was authorized to appoint a committee of twenty-five to secure funds. The ladies, led by Mrs. S. E. Gross, propose to raise $50,000. The men ought not to raise less and probably will not. But it is unfortunate that, amid the excitements occasioned by the bluster between England and Germany, the fiasco of Dr. Jamieson in South Africa, affairs in Cuba and the Venezuela matter, attention has been temporarily turned away from the needs of Armenia. Sunday evening Dr. Noble opened his pulpit to Rev. F. D. Greene of Turkey and other churches have also been placed at his disposal. Dr. Greene addressed the ministers Monday morning and appealed to them earnestly not to delay any longer to do something to help the survivors of the Turkish atrocities.

Dr. Hitchcock of the American Board s.

ready to forward to the missionaries anything intrusted to him for the Armenians. But it is thought, on the whole, better that the gifts from Chicago should for the most part go through the Society of the Red Cross.

Return of Dr. Johnson.

Last Sunday New England Church gave a hearty welcome to its pastor, Dr. J. G. Johnson, on his return from his visit to the churches of Japan. His ministerial brethren will welcome him as warmly as the members of his church, for no one among them all has been more ready than he to serve on committees, or to give time and counsel for objects which are continually appealing for aid. During his absence Professor Mackenzie has supplied his pulpit with great acceptance. This week the professor assumes the care of the Washington Park Church, an organization which bids fair to become very soon large and important. The second term of the seminary began Monday, with most of the students ready for work and the professors anxious to get out of them all they can.

Drury and the Impossible.

When Dr. Pearsons offered his money to Drury with certain conditions its friends said, "We cannot meet them. It is impossible that we should." Nevertheless they were willing to try. The result is that Drury now has an endowment of about $270,000, Dr. Pearsons's last $25,000 having been sent the treasurer of the college this week. Of the $150,000 requisite to meet Dr. Pearsons's offer of $50 000, $125,000 came from the West and all except $15,000 from Missouri. About one-half of the remaining $25,000 came from Worcester, Mass. Well may Dr. Henry Hopkins of Kansas City congratulate Dr. Pearsons on the success of his great undertaking, especially in view of the discouragements and difficulties which have multiplied as the canvass has gone on. No wonder that he writes, "Nothing is impossible for those who believe in God and live to help their fellowmen." To this success no one has contributed more than Dr. Hopkins himself. All the trustees have done their part nobly. Mr. Benedict of St. Louis has gone forward in the work like a prince in Israel. President Fuller has been untiring in his efforts to obtain money and marvelously successful as an administrator and a financier. The subscriptions are in good securities or in cash. Dr. Pearsons has not been willing to take anything that was not first class.

Business of Chicago.

The increase here, which has been considerable in almost all departments save that of building, is indicated by the income of the post office, $4,878,136, an advance of half a million on the business of 1894. The expenses of the office have decreased, but Postmaster Hessing thinks its efficiency has been greatly increased. There are thirty-seven stations or branch offices. The trade of the city, after making the proper deductions, is set down at the enormous figure of $1,316,700,000, or about three per cent. more than in 1894. The jobbing trade has improved ten per cent., but some other branches of trade have done little more than hold their own. As a jobbing center the city is admirably situated, and is likely to become more pronounced in its rivalry with Eastern cities. While in general it may be said to have been a good year for iron and steel interests, the outlook just now is far from favorable. The Illinois Steel Mills at Joliet and Thirty-first Street, as well as at South Chicago, have shut down, ostensibly for repairs, really no doubt on account of a lack of orders. About 4,000 men have been thrown out of work. No one walking along our streets and observing the crowd that frequents them would see any indications of hard times. Nevertheless, there is a general complaint that times are not good, that everything is uncertain, that farmers are obliged to sell their produce at too low prices to permit them to buy freely such things as they need, and that till the financial system of the country is on a secure basis times cannot actually improve.

FROM SCOTLAND.

Carlyle Centenary.

Since the publication of Mr. Froude's memoirs our great author and countryman has been subjected to plenty of abuse and criticism. On Wednesday of last week the centenary of Carlyle's birth was duly celebrated at the little Dumfriesshire village of Ecclefechan where he first saw the light, at Edinburgh where Professor Masson presided at the dinner held in Carlyle's honor, and at Chelsea, the London suburb and residence of the great man of letters, where Mr. John Morley delivered a suggestive and discriminating speech. Nearer home Dr. John Hunter, our foremost Congregational preacher, delivered an appropriate eulogy on Carlyle at the ordinary week night service. Speaking from the text, "To him that made great lights" [Ps. 136: 7], Dr. Hunter agreed with the well-known Carlyle dictum, that the world's great forces have been its great men. Without being blind to Carlyle's limitations and even self-contradictions, the minister of Trinity Congregational Church emphasized the sage of Chelsea's title to real greatness, and the fact that in spite of faults he was a hero still. Carlyle's books, he added, did not go off in big editions of 30,000, but his writings and ideas lay at the root of the higher thinking and striving of the present generation. His readers, indeed, got illumination for their problems and inspiration for themselves.

Another significant and outspoken speech was delivered last week by Dr. Hunter at the opening of a crematorium in our neighborhood, the first building of the kind erected in Scotland, at a cost of about £5,000. Dr. Hunter's ideas on the bodily resurrection are not of a literal, but of an advanced and spiritual kind.

Clyde Shipbuilding Dispute.

This unhappy industrial conflict is still before the public mind, but there are signs that now both masters and men are weary of it. As I write a conference is being held in Glasgow, attended by representatives of the shipbuilding firms and of the locked-out engineers, and presided over by Lord James, formerly Sir Henry James, the parliamentary representative for a district in Lancashire. Lord James is well qualified by his past experience in the House of Commons and as member for a laboring and manufacturing constituency, as well as by a highly-trained, legal mind, to act as arbiter in this unfortunate dispute. There are many who are not given to indiscriminate sympathy with workmen or the labor point of view who on this occasion are forced to regard the masters as having acted hastily and harshly in decreeing the lock-out, which has been felt keenly on the Clyde here and at Belfast where the dispute originated. Our Lord Provost and the mayor of Belfast are present at the conference in a non official capacity; the former has worked hard to bring about a reconciliation. All sections of the community join in the hope that this struggle is now coming to an end. It would be lamentable to have so many skilled workmen still out of employment in view of the new year, and to have their own trade resources and those of public charity strained to meet an unfortunate and unnecessary amount of distress.

Visit of "Ian Maclaren."

We were favored at the end of last month with a visit and lecture on Traits in Scottish character from that new risen star in the literary horizon, "Ian Maclaren." The lecture was marked by one or two candid and, from a patriotic point of view, rather damaging assertions. The first was that the Scottish people are destitute of wit, and the second, the coarseness and profanity of certain of our old Scottish writers like Lindsay and Dunbar, features still reflected in the immorality which continues to prevail in many districts of Scotland. It is well, perhaps, to have the weak side of our character thus castigated and exposed, but Mr. Watson was not let off without some counter criticism and castigation when his lecture was finished, and this refreshing sequel to the audience was performed by our perfervid townsman and city clergyman, Dr. Donald Macleod, the accomplished editor of Good Words. Dr. Macleod believes that there is more humor in a Scottish parish than in an English county. He was not wrong when he said that "Ian Maclaren's" works were the best refutation of parts of his lecture. Dr. Stalker and Prof. G. A. Smith, both warm friends and admirers of "Ian Maclaren," were present at this lecture, but did not take part in the amusing fray that came on at the close. With equal tact and conciliatoriness Mr. Watson wound up by declaring that he and his critic and the audience generally were, on that occasion, "a' John Tamson's bairns." This sentiment is always pleasing to a Scottish gathering. Its use by "Ian Maclaren" proves that he knows the art of the popular lecturer.

"Eucharistic Worship."

Some of our Presbyterian ecclesiastics have been arguing with one another and vexing the plain minds of unprofessional readers by a discussion the other day as to the meaning and legitimacy of what is known in High Church phrase as "eucharistic worship." The discussion was started in the Glasgow Established Presbytery by Dr. John Macleod of Govan, who, in his love of ritualism and generally his advocacy of High Church doctrines and ceremonies, is to be distinguished from his broader-minded cousin, Dr. Donald Macleod. Dr. John Macleod, in a carefully prepared but abusive speech, fell foul of the Free Church Presbytery in this city for its forward movement at present on the lines of church extension and its opposition (as he jealously thinks) to the growth of the Established Church and in particular to his cherished doctrine of eucharistic worship. Several of Dr. J. Macleod's brethren have little or no sympathy with this latest attempt to revive High Church tenets and practices and, in reality, to exaggerate the importance of the church as an institution, with the temptation involved to make clergymen, of the type of Dr. Macleod and Dr. Cooper of Aberdeen, think themselves superior beings as they stand apart from the mass of their countrymen and discharge their spiritual and sacerdotal functions. Indeed, Dr. Marshall Lang, of the historic Barony Church, declared frankly he did not know what eucharistic worship meant. The bland simplicity of remarks like this makes reading of ecclesiastical controversy tolerable. There are many who sympathize with the effort now going on in Presbyterian and Congregational churches to improve the conduct of praise and worship and to make our services more seemly and orderly, but Scotch worshipers have been accustomed to make the pulpit more conspicuous than the altar and to minimize priestliness and ceremony.

Keir Hardie's Return.

The local branch of the society which rejoices in the mystic letters I. L. P. welcomed Mr. Hardie on his first public appearance since his return from his propagandist tour in America. He seems highly incensed at the inequalities of the social and economic state that prevails in American society as here, and he had hard words to utter on the condition of the white man as an economic slave. Even the Marlborough-Vanderbilt wedding did not escape bitter criticism. The upshot, in Mr. Hardie's view, is that socialism is spreading and that his visit has strengthened the friendly relations between America and Britain and tended to increased international solidarity.

FROM JAPAN.

The Victories of Peace.

Marquis Ito, Japan's "first citizen" abroad but most abused official at home, has yielded to the inevitable and taken one more step toward the country's goal of responsible party government. He and his cabinet have formed a coalition with the Liberal party by which it is hoped the Diet, which convenes on Christmas Day, may be controlled and the business of the nation peacefully conducted. The mutual concession needed to bring about this desired result, although thoroughly Asiatic, reflects great credit alike on the premier and the politicians of the Jiyu to (Liberals). Following closely on the peaceful settlement of indemnity and other questions with China, the subjugation of Formosa, and the return from the scene of war, amid the wild huzzas of the nation, of the Imperial Guard, it forms a fit ending to the striking occurrences of a most eventful year.

Government by party is now an assured fact in the near future and another laurel is thus added to the crown of the reigning emperor. Or, to change the figure and employ one used by the Japan Mail: "This consummation completes the quincunx of great Meiji issues. In the center stands the promulgation of the constitution, and on the four corners the resumption of specie payments, revision of the treaties, the war with China and the introduction of party cabinets."

The country is at peace. Notwithstanding the war cloud in Europe, there is no immediate prospect of a duel with Russia. The reserves are being disbanded, business has revived, new lines of commerce extending even to Australia, America, India and Europe are being planned for, the Japan Red Cross Society has sent large gifts of tea to French and Spanish soldiers in Madagascar and Cuba, fresh manufactories of all sorts are springing up on every side, the railway commission has its hands more than full obtaining charters for new trunk or branch lines, and the year closes amid a burst of business and a blaze of material progress.

Things Educational.

In official circles there is a demand for a higher grade of ethics in the schools. Thoughtful men realize that no sure foundation for morals is laid at present in the instruction given or examples set. An insular system of ethics will not suffice for a nation facing the world. Afraid of the name Christian, Japan's minister of education and others high in influence yet crave the thing itself, and are moving slowly but steadily toward it. The acknowledged success of Christian work in behalf of the soldiers both at the front and in the hospitals is turning the attention of many teachers and school superintendents to the inherent value of a Christian training.

Eighteen months ago no one would have dared predict that the army would yield in so short a time to the gentle ministrations of Christian nurses, Bible women and preachers. Eighteen months hence there may be a similar victory to announce in the schools of new Japan.

As a signal reminder of the brief time in which aggressive Christian training has been on exhibition in this part of the far East, let me add that Kobé College and the Doshisha at Kyoto celebrated, Nov. 25 and 29, the twentieth anniversary of their founding. In both instances the exercises were of deep interest. Aside from local talent, stirring addresses were given by Mrs. J. G. Johnson and Dr. A. H. Bradford at the ladies' college and by Dr. J. L. Barton at the young men's institution. These schools have had a noble past and they have the opportunity for a yet grander and more useful future.

Deputation Results.

The four brethren from abroad with their one wife have come and gone. So far as their time allowed they patiently canvassed the whole situation. I have purposely waited one mail before attempting a summing up in order to give time for the smoke of their battle to roll by and as well to allow the generals in charge to be their own heralds. The results reached fit Asia better than they may suit America, and this must constantly be borne in mind by those who are likely to be disappointed at certain features of the deputation's report. In regard to a few missionary residences in Kyoto the visiting brethren were unable to come to an understanding in writing with the trustees of the Doshisha. The legal ownership is solely with the Kyoto school, but the trustees do not, as it seems to Americans, sufficiently recognize the moral ownership claimed by the Board. The only thing, therefore, remaining to be done was for the deputation to leave a dignified statement of their view of the case and trust to the honor of the trustees as Christians and Japanese to do nothing that would bring a stain upon the good name of the Doshisha.

Now, when it is remembered that the school founded by Neesima and his friends was at the start a faith enterprise of the most daring sort, and has been conducted on that principle through all its twenty years of wonderful history, the decision reached seems a natural, if not inevitable, deduction from such historical premises. As for the theological question, which enters so largely into all problems here, the Board's committee came to feel that the turn of the tide has been reached. There is still cause for grave anxiety in some circles, but evangelical views and practical, positive movements are asserting themselves more and more. There is almost a revival spirit in some churches. Public opinion is rising. Provincial views and a negative faith are at a discount.

The stalwart faith, genial spirit and strong speeches of the brethren from Boston, Montclair and Chicago have given things a long push in the right direction. Their earnest plea in private and public that the church of Japan keep fast faith and locked hand with the Christian Church of America and England created a deep impression and will show increasing results as time goes by. Although appalled by the size of territory yet remaining to be possessed in this island corner of the East, the deputation will hardly advise the sending out of new missionaries or larger grants in aid. Even the mission asks only that the force be kept up to present numbers and gifts to the present amounts, the money saved from places that become independent to be used for work in new regions.

The special mission meeting held at Kyoto during Thanksgiving week, in the presence of the visiting friends, reached a high level of wit, wisdom and worship. The practical measures adopted look to a more careful superintendence of distinctly mission work and to a sympathetic co-operation with the body of independent Kumiai churches. No rival denomination will be started, as has sometimes been advocated. Notwithstanding some vagaries and an alarmingly wide fellowship, the Kumiai churches retain the confidence and esteem of the mission and the Board. The look is upward and onward and each party is to serve in its own way and place. The encouragement afforded to missionaries by the presence and counsel of the deputation is incalculable. The variety of talents and devotion to work which those brethren disclosed and the nature and unanimity of their decisions were eminently satisfactory. In short, the deputation was a success and the mission may be tempted to encourage further failures for the sake of encountering similar successes in the future.

The Outlook for 1896.

One large church is reorganizing its work on Christian Endeavor methods, other churches are in a revived state, seven inquirers are reported in one town where for four years previously not a single one had been met, total strangers are writing to missionaries expressing an interest in Christianity, prominent pastors and preachers have their hands more than full responding to calls of every sort, the Salvation Army is winning recruits, the Okayama Orphan Asylum is growing fast into a Christian colony, with its own workshops, schools and church, and there appears to be a hushed state of expectancy all along the line. Many persons hitherto indifferent or hostile are feeling, and some are proclaiming openly, that Christianity is the coming power. These are facts, not prophecies. Let every man draw his own conclusions. We here at the front pray and work and wait with larger hopes and more abounding joy than for many months gone by. God reigns and the right will prevail.

The Minister in Recent American Fiction.

By Rev. Newton M. Hall.

Since the immortal Vicar of Wakefield became a canonized saint in literature the minister has not been a favorite character with English-writing novelists. This reticence has certainly not been due to any respect for the cloth. From Miss Edgeworth's Patronage down to the Victorian writers whenever the minister has appeared the unattractive side of his character has been almost invariably presented. He is represented usually as bowing and cringing, rubbing his hands together with a deprecatory air and suing some high and mighty personage for a "living." Even then he is of little importance to the story. Unless we except Hawthorne's Arthur Dimmesdale in The Scarlet Letter, we shall find in the works of our great masters of fiction no full length portrait of a minister, nothing certainly to be compared with Balzac's Village Rector and Halévy's delightful Abbe Constantine.

In recent fiction, however, the minister has sprung into unusual prominence. Bliss Perry's Salem Kittredge, Theologue, and Eva Wilder McGlasson's Ministers of Grace are not of course very seriously intended and yet they illustrate a common attitude of many writers toward ministerial character and perpetuate the traditions of English novelists in this respect.

Salem Kittredge, Theologue, is a guileless youth, whose knowledge of the world and the ways thereof is extremely limited. It happens that a millionaire manufacturer of patent medicine is in need of a keeper for his son, who is a hopeless dipsomaniac, and he engages our innocent young student for the cheerful task. It is needless to say that the gilded youth is much more than a match for his attendant and he manages to enjoy life quite comfortably at Bar Harbor, where the scene of the story is laid. Both young men fall in love with the same attractive young woman. She accepts the hand of the gentleman who is addicted to drink, in spite of his obvious failing, and the fact that her distinguished armorial escutcheon must be crossed by a box of patent pills. The inference is that such a result was to be expected; that in every quality which is really desirable the wealthy young man of the world, in spite of his dissipation, is easily superior to the unsophisticated student.

Sensitiveness under criticism is not a mark of power, and the ministerial profession can well afford to smile at the cleverness of such a tale and the pleasantry which is all at the unfortunate hero's expense. We will presume that no covert sneer was intended by the writer, but the impression is at least unfortunate. The story was a serial in a great magazine. It entered thousands of homes. What was the effect upon young men and women, who in our day are certainly none too serious in regard to religious subjects? Would it not convey the idea that ministers in general are prigs and cads, and would it not tend to produce a good hearty contempt for the whole class? If there was ever a time when young people ought to be taught that Christianity is a manly, virile thing that time is now, but we shall have hard work to do so if our writers of fiction continue to convey the impression that young men who study for the ministry are milksops, feeble minded individuals, without any practical knowledge of life and of the world. Besides, the imputation is untrue. Is it not time to retire from the stage of fiction the minister who is an artless, confiding, callow creature, the easy victim of shrewder men in his contact with the world? The childlike youth who shyly emerges from cloistered retreats, the elderly clergyman with lean and shrunken limbs inclosed in misfit garments, with pinched features and long hair, are now to be found only in fiction and the comic papers.

The young minister from the West in Eva Wilder McGlasson's Ministers of Grace —is there not a thinly veiled satire in the title—is, in character, the opposite of poor Salem Kittredge. He is in the ministry solely as a matter of business. He conducts his hustling church on the same business principles which he would apply in the management of a store or market. By way of contrast we have an old-time pastor, whose bigotry and intolerance are as thoroughly unlovely as the cool assurance of the younger man. The other characters of the story, the young journalist with his honest philistinism, the variety actress whose innate goodness of heart keeps her just on the hither verge of respectability, have a deeper claim upon our regard than either of the ministers. But here again the characterization is untrue. Because the minister of the present day mingles with men, it is not fair to represent him as impelled by the mercenary methods of unscrupulous men of the world.

The Rector of St. Stephen's is a more serious piece of literature. The attempt is made to portray the life of a minister who begins his work in a country parish. Called to New York he finds himself drawn into the tide of fashionable society; he loses the sense of reality in his work and discovers that he is as worldly as his worldly congregation. He renounces this life to engage in self-sacrificing labor in the slums.

It is difficult to be fault-finding with a story of such evident sincerity of purpose, and yet it leaves an unfortunate impression. Are city churches so demoralizing that an earnest young man must be drawn perforce to the slums to fulfill a Christlike mission? Is there no gospel for the rich as well as for the poor? The splendid service of men who have been called from country parishes to the great churches certainly does not warrant the assumption. Either the portraiture must be unfaithful, or the hero was an extraordinarily weak young man, and the fact that he took up a work in the slums, when by training and natural abilities he was fitted for moral leadership in a different and no less important field, does not save him from the charge of moral cowardice.

Mrs. Phelps-Ward, in the most ambitious of recent attempts to pic ure the minister in fiction, has created a character of great attractiveness and power, drawn with admirable penetration and skill. There is, however, an artistic defect which detracts seriously from the great merit of the novel. Unwarranted means are taken to highten the character of the hero. We expect that the stage settings will be arranged with reference to the actors, we expect the subordinate characters to recognize the hero, even in rags, and pay him suitable homage, but we do not expect the trees in the background to be painted blue, nor heed the obsequious lackeys to be hewn out of wooden blocks. It may have been necessary, in order to bring out in greater prominence the self-sacrifice of Emanuel Bayard, that he should have been endowed with all human qualities of excellence, but was it also necessary that all his unfortunate fellow-students should have been boors—that not one of them should have possessed even the rudiments of common politeness and good breeding? Throughout the story a fundamental canon of fiction, namely, that when public personages and historical events are described there shall be substantial accuracy of statement, is often violated in order to give dramatic intensity to the hero's life. Then, again, the life described is not "singular" in the sense evidently intended. Emanuel Bayard was not the only minister to apply the principle of self sacrifice in dealing with the outcast and the poor.

In many a city a "Christlove" mission has been established, but not by individuals who have been despised and rejected by a dominant orthodoxy, who pursue their way unfriended and alone. Such work is being accomplished in a perfectly definite and orderly way, through the out-reaching sympathy of the church, under the direction of men who are perfectly healthy and sane and who are applying their lives of self sacrifice in a way which is both scientific and reverent to the solution of the great social problems of the day. No doubt the peculiar circumstances of the hero's work at "Windover" are possible, but it is an injustice to brave and earnest men to imply that such service is extraordinary or exceptional.

It is no doubt the privilege of novelists to seize upon and accentuate oddities of character, and yet it seems hardly just to a great profession that it should have no other treatment nor representation in fiction. There ought to be artistic possibilities in the careers of our city pastors, whose lives are brought into constant and vital contact with humanity at its most intense and dramatic movements. There ought to be enough to inspire an American Barrie or Crockett in the experiences of some of our old-school ministers of the hill towns, whose quiet lives, fulfilling Chaucer's ideal,

> Benigne he was, and wonder diligent,
> And in adversitee ful pacient, are yet rich in humor and pathos.

May we not confidently expect that some great writer of the future will portray a minister who is not undeveloped, nor unlovely in character, who is not a recluse nor a freak, but who, in all the broad relationships of life, is every inch a man?

One of the most successful efforts to contribute to the gayety of nations which we have noted recently is the argument of a contributor to the Minneapolis Times, who says it does not strain his credulity to Believe that if the American Board fifty years ago had sent out more music teachers and fewer preachers we should have had less massacres, and our flourishing missions in China and Turkey would not have been utterly demolished.

BRITISH VERSUS AMERICAN JOURNALISM.

BY ARTHUR REED KIMBALL, WATERBURY, CT.

The view published recently in The Congregationalist of Rev. Dr. G. A. Gordon of the Old South Church in Boston, on returning from a trip to England, that the most pronounced impression left on his mind as he resumed life here was the disgraceful "inferiority of the American secular press as contrasted with the British," is a view shared, as a rule, by cultivated and thoughtful Americans after a trip abroad. It is very largely the result of reading too exclusively the editorial pages of the British papers, ignoring the news pages beyond a casual skimming of them. But the editorial writing is by no means so important a feature in determining the character of a nation's journalism as its news editing.

Taking up the latter, it may be said that there are three respects in which it is claimed that British journalism is superior to American journalism. First, the reporting is claimed to be more accurate and freer from partisanship. Second, it is claimed that English newspapers can be safely taken into the household without the chance of contaminating it by the offensive details of scandals. Third, that British newspapers have the sense of proportion.

Last summer I, a newspaper man, passed some weeks in England, and read the newspapers, both those of London and of the provincial cities, critically, with these claims of alleged superiority in mind. The time was a good one for making the test. Political excitement ran high, owing to the elections then pending, and the opportunity to note the way in which the British papers are edited at such a time was thrust under one's eyes. It was a shock to my preconceived notions of the superior fairness of British reporting to find that the editing of political meetings was not kept strictly to the editorial page. For example, I was present at Albert Memorial Hall when Lord Rosebery made the only speech of his political campaign. In numbers and enthusiasm the demonstration surpassed anything I had conceived of as possible or probable in English politics. The hall seats, perhaps, 12,000 people, and was certainly two-thirds filled. It was fully as enthusiastic a gathering as the Republican convention in 1880 which nominated General Garfield.

What then was my surprise the next day, on taking up a leading Conservative paper, to find this demonstration minimized and belittled, not only on the editorial page, but in the account on the news page which purported to give the details of the proceedings. An introduction of about three-quarters of a column was given up to telling how comparatively poorly the hall was filled, and how small was the enthusiasm manifested for the Liberal leaders. This article in a leading London newspaper was an exact reproduction of many a Republican account of a Democratic demonstration here in America, or a Democratic account of a Republican demonstration, in its unfair tone and in the twist it gave to trivial incidents. When the reporter came to the speeches themselves, they were given fully and correctly. This is in striking contrast to similar reports in America by partisan journalism, where speeches of the opposition are sometimes actually tampered with and significant parts suppressed. The reports in the other papers were much nearer to fairness, but fell far short of the ideal that we over here have been ready to accept as typical of British journalism. Similar examples of the same thing were found later in the larger cities of Scotland and even in some of the smaller provincial papers away down toward Land's End.

Passing next to the question of sensationalism, he who reads British newspapers thoroughly would be surprised to find in them, stated with great frankness, many things which an American newspaper would suppress or only hint at. The proceedings in divorce trials, for example, are printed with a fullness which would not be found in an American newspaper of the better class save under exceptional circumstances. The difference is that no sensational headlines are put over these divorce proceedings to call attention to them. What is true of divorce trials was found to be equally true of other news classed as sensational. Facts brought out of the police courts were given with brutal frankness, but no attempt is made to draw attention to them by the headlines.

Coming, lastly, to the sense of proportion, to the proper prominence to be given to serious news, British journalism must again be pronounced a comparative failure. I was in London when the international congress of temperance women was held there, and attended the remarkable meeting in the City Temple when Miss Willard and other prominent women of America made the opening speeches. This was on a Sunday afternoon, and in the evening there were something like a hundred meetings all over London in which these women appeared again. The next morning I hunted through five papers before finding one which contained anything like an adequate report of what actually happened either at the City Temple or at any of the other meetings. In one of the most prominent London papers the whole matter was dismissed, so far as the news columns were concerned, with a short, flippant paragraph of a "couple of sticks" (which really ought to have been editorial), devoted principally to the question whether women ought to speak in public or not. Next to no names were given, and one who had not been present could not have formed the least idea as to who were there, who spoke, or what it was all about, except that in a general way it touched upon temperance.

The fact of the general apathy of the British public on this subject hardly excuses such remarkable treatment of it. Here was a convention and a series of meetings lasting something like a week, of interest to thousands of people in London, to speak within bounds, yet it was passed over in the London papers with the most inadequate treatment, in one or two cases being simply burlesqued. This is a fair example of how far the provincialism of the British mind affects its newspapers when the news matter does not seem to be of particular interest or importance to the editor himself or to the people whom he personally represents. Like Mr. Podsnap, he dismisses it from his paper with a magnificent wave of the hand, on the theory that if it does not interest him it cannot and should not interest others. In this respect American journalism is far superior to British journalism. The American editor atones somewhat for his sensationalism by the fullness with which he reports news that interests only a part of his readers.

To sum up the difference between American and British journalism so far as the matter of news editing goes, it is largely a difference of headlines. Put over a news article in a British newspaper an American headline, and put over a news article in an American newspaper a British headline, and the champion of British superiority would be greatly surprised to find how sensational, inaccurate and out of proportion is British journalism, and how unsensational, accurate and of true proportion is American journalism—speaking comparatively, of course, and not with reference to an ideal standard.

PHILLIPS BROOKS'S LARGER SYMPATHY.

BY HARRIETTE KNIGHT SMITH.

About three months before the sad daybreak when the great heart of Phillips Brooks ceased its throbbing and the busy brain its planning for the good of others, I was one noontime seated at a table in a well-known Boston café, when two young women, earnestly engaged in conversation, entered and took the opposite seats.

One could not help hearing the conversation that ensued, so intense were the tones of the speakers. A regret was then experienced, that has since deepened, that it was impossible to have taken it verbatim.

One of the two, or a near friend of theirs, had evidently been grievously wronged and, after the manner of so many Boston people, had gone to talk it over with the good man, who was, in a large sense, the bishop of us all, and now, at this midday hour, were meeting by appointment to tell what had been the advice of Phillips Brooks.

"Well, what did he say, for I suppose you have seen him?"

"Yes, and he said just what we might have known Phillips Brooks would say. He listened so quietly, with that sad smile of his, speaking never a word until we were done and then he said, so gently: 'I am sorry for you, very—it is hard to be misunderstood, injured, wronged, in this manner—and yet, shall I hurt you more if I tell you that I am not so sorry for you as for some one else?

"'Really, my friend, my larger, deeper sympathy is not for you, but for the wrongdoer, the one who has so needlessly caused all this pain. It is so, so pathetic to have made so much trouble in a world already so full of heartaches. I am, O, so sorry for him. As I have listened I have been wondering if it were not possible, after all that has occurred, to yet bring some gladness out from this pain, and if you had not best just have your revenge by forgiving all the wrong and helping him to awaken to a new life, with the hope of his yet amounting to something good.

"'That would be such a splendid way to surprise him and would make you so much gladder than to cherish the wrong. Are you willing to do this?' That was what he said to me," she exclaimed, with her face flushed and smiling almost through tears, with the glad consciousness that she had been led to act worthily of her larger womanhood and was going to do this very "forgiving and helping to something good."

These two young women were of the higher type of wage-earners, who, having associated their lives with Trinity Church, had also enriched them with a personal relationship with its now sainted pastor.

To them, as to all others, Phillips Brooks's message to the suffering and the wronged was the same, whether in private council or public teaching: "Suffer if you must; do not quarrel with the dear Lord's appointments for you. Only try if you are to suffer to do it splendidly. That's the only way to take up a pleasure or a pain!" These were his oft-repeated words, and he never seemed more majestic than when he uttered them, straightening himself to his full hight, while his voice echoed and re-echoed through Trinity with his closing adjective, "Yes, suffer splendidly!"

The surroundings, the women and the principle of this bit of pastoral work have all lodged so helpfully in memory that an impulse of almost responsibility impels me to send on this conversation, as another laurel leaf which time is but weaving about the blessed memory of simple, plain, but Christlike Phillips Brooks.

This larger, deeper sympathy for poor, sinning, struggling man, which Phillips Brooks made every man know that he felt for him, was what brought full 40,000 persons to surround Trinity Church, and to stand for hours on that bleak winter's morn three years ago just to catch a glimpse of the casket which held all that was mortal of him whose love never distrusted them before it should be laid beside father and mother in peaceful, snow-clad Mount Auburn. No attempt was made to conceal the big tears which splashed down the cheeks of strong men when Phillips Brooks went home. The secret was his larger, deeper sympathy for the wrongdoer.

Under the perhaps somewhat tautological caption of No More Debts Hereafter, the Assembly Herald, which is the agent of the Presbyterian mission boards, urges that, when the present debts are paid, steps should be taken to prevent a recurrence. "To incur liabilities beyond actual, visible resources is—unless the circumstances are exceptional—not sound business method," it says, and dwells upon the acknowledged fact that recurring debt impairs confidence and chills enthusiasm. The difficulty is (in the continual increase of opportunities) to determine what cases are exceptional. The Herald's remedy is that "the appropriation of any board for the year should in no case exceed the average of receipts for the five preceding years." This would no doubt prevent any serious deficit at the year's end, as there has been, in the long run, a steady increase in the contributions of the churches, and would probably result in the accumulation of a guarantee fund, which would be a most desirable balance wheel for the financial machinery. On the other hand, the managers of mission funds rightly regard themselves as the agents of the contributors and wish to put every dollar of their gifts immediately at work, and it would require nerves of iron and hearts like adamant to refuse the calls of the missions while idle money was accumulating in the treasury. A doubled contribution for a single year would set the matter permanently right, but, lacking that, we question whether the formation of such a reserve might not be wise economy. Such a fund some of our boards have had in the large legacies which have come to them, and it would be well if private gifts on a large scale might establish funds for this express purpose in connection, at least, with our larger boards.

By the Way.

They were talking at the breakfast table about peculiarities in pulpit delivery. The father of the family started the ball of conversation by remarking that he did wish somebody would tell last Sunday's supply not to preach with his hands in his pockets. "One hand," said he, "is bad enough, but when it comes to two hands the sermon has no further effect on me." "I don't mind that myself so much," responded his vis a-vis, "but I always used to wonder why our last minister invariably stood on the right side of his pulpit, preaching thus to only a part of the congregation; he never seemed to think that we people on his left had any need of the gospel." A visiting relative then took up the strain, saying: "The trouble with our minister at home is that he never looks straight in front of him, but keeps his head continually moving from east to west and back again as if it were swung on a pivot. I should think he would get dizzy. It almost makes me seasick sometimes to look at him."

It was grandmother's turn next, and her contribution to the symposium was put in about this form. "I don't believe in criticising such little things as those you've mentioned, but I do wish our minister would sometimes open the pulpit Bible. He has been here a year now and he has never opened it, but always uses a personal copy of the Scriptures which he carts to and fro every Sunday!" This shot fired the son of the house, who was home from college on a vacation and had a good deal to say when anybody would listen about "modern thought," and he said, "Well, that's a good deal better than forever reading from the old version in the big pulpit Bible. I don't think a preacher today has any right to give his people anything but the latest and best revision." By this time the oatmeal had been finished and the meat course was being brought in, and the diversion caused the introduction of other topics of conversation, though the elderly boarder, who had kept silent through it all, tossed off a concluding remark to the effect that she thanked her stars that none of her intimate relations were ministers.

Every one who undertakes to relieve distress in great cities by endeavoring to induce dwellers in its crowded sections to go into the country and live knows how difficult it is to lure the average person away from what he considers the superior attractions of urban life. It sometimes makes no difference whether the person in question has any means of availing himself of the advantages at hand. This was well illustrated by the colloquy between the agent of an emigration society and one of those individuals who would be classified with the "submerged tenth." After the former had pictured the advantages of country residence without making much impression on the latter, the question was put, "What is there that keeps you in the city, anyway?" The man hesitated a moment and then replied, "Well, you see I like to be near the theaters." "But," pursued his interrogator, "how many times this winter have you been to the theater?" The man was honest enough to admit that he hadn't had that pleasure even once, but added, his face lighting up, "You see, you can look at the bill boards."

Dr. Lorimer told a good story at a Boston club the other night. It was of an aged New York clergyman going to Brooklyn on Sunday morning to preach. When he reached the pier the ferry-boat was four or five feet away. In his anxiety to get aboard he flung first his umbrella, then his satchel, and finally made a tremendous leap himself. But the gentleman who caught him surprised him by shouting, "You sacred old idiot, this boat isn't going out, it's coming in!" This was to illustrate the necessity of regulating progress by conservatism.

We opened a letter the other day and turned as usual to look at the signature. It was the name of a college professor. It began with frank, discriminating words of appreciation of The Congregationalist. It continued in the same line to the end, closing with an assurance that no reply was expected. We carefully re-examined it. No manuscript was offered for publication. There was no request for a favorable review of one of the writer's books. No pulpit supply was desired. No friend was named as deserving a praiseful paragraph in our columns. He did not ask us to advocate an endowment for his college. He did not even want the editor to give a free lecture for the benefit of a church. The writer of that letter simply put down his sense of high appreciation of the work of this paper because his estimate of its worth to himself and family moved him to do so. We have carefully filed it away to be placed in the corner stone of the new Congregational House.

There is an interesting bit of local history in connection with the suggestive articles from the pen of President Eliot on The Happy Life that have been appearing of late in the New York Independent. The scholarly and accomplished president of Harvard is certainly exceptionally competent to treat such a theme and the fact that he has expatiated upon it in public addresses from time to time would indicate that it is a subject congenial to his own mind. On one occasion a Working Men's Club in Cambridge was fortunate enough to secure him for an address, in which he proceeded to set before his horny-handed auditors the sources of enjoyment that lie along their daily pathway. In an easy, attractive, off-hand way he pointed out the delight which a well man ought to experience in being able to take three meals a day, in the use of his eyes and ears as he walks abroad in God's beautiful world, in the number of inexpensive books and magazines which modern presses make available to him and in the help that a man may render his fellows day by day.

The custom of this club after an address is to permit free questioning of the speaker and discussion of his address, and, in this case, after several deserved compliments had been passed, a plain man, in working garb, rose and said that while he believed all that the president had said, he could not help wondering if there was not another source of happiness which the speaker had failed to mention. He himself had that very day fallen in with a Roman Catholic priest, who, for support in his daily work for others, seemed to be relying on an unseen Power that not only strengthened him but made him happy. "So I began to wonder," said this working man, "whether there is not in all of us a kind of spiritual longin' that wants something besides food and books and the good will of others." Then this plain man of the people sat down, and the learned president, feeling that the audience expected some sort of a response, undertook to meet the issue that had been raised, but there was a strange absence of positiveness and hope in the hereafter in his rejoinder. The incident brought to one listener, at least, a fresh sense of the insufficiency of a purely earth-born theory of human life to complete the entire circle of human needs and to satisfy what the working man called the "spiritual longin'," which throbs alike beneath broadcloth and fustian.

NO TIME TO SPARE.

BY NORA PERRY.

From day to day I took my way,
The skies above me gold or gray,
The paths before me stretching wide,
Or winding narrow and untried.

Sometimes in sunlight, then in shade,
Sore pressed at times and made afraid,
Then in another moment's space
The sunlight shining in my face.

But even in that warmth and cheer
I forward looked with anxious fear,
Lest in the heavens some tiny speck
Should presage storm, and rain and wreck.

So day by day I took my way,
My prudent, watchful, anxious way,
And day by day I sadly cried,
"If I had time for aught beside!"

"If I had time, what kindly deeds
I would perform, what suffering needs
Would I relieve with generous care,
If I had only time to spare."

So day by day, until a day
When all my skies were sodden gray,
I felt a sudden sense of wrong
As through the crowd I passed along;

For none, not one, who passed me by
Had given me grace of smile or sigh;
Ah, none, not one had turned to see
My need of human sympathy.

'Twas then I cried within my soul:
"O selfish world, is this thy dole
Of meat and bread to those in need?
Did Christ forget? Did he not heed?

"Did he not show us all the way?"
Then, then and there, a lightening ray
Lit up my dark, and then and there,
"If I had only time to spare,"

Rang pitilessly in my ears,
And, looking backward down the years,
I saw myself day after day
Proceeding on my prudent way.

I saw myself, and knew that I
Was one of those who had passed by,
In hurried haste and selfish care,
With never friendly time to spare!

Various references are made in our columns this week to the opportunity for social pleasures at home afforded by the long evenings. Instructive and mirthful games may certainly claim a due amount of time, but, after all, there is no more cozy and satisfactory way of spending an evening than in the enjoyment of a good book read aloud by one member of the family while the others cluster around the lamp or before the open fire. The ability to read aloud in a natural, sympathetic manner, without fatigue, is almost as much of a lost art in the average family circle as is the old-fashioned home music for which Mrs. Terhune pleads in her article. But the person who possesses this happy faculty, though lacking in more brilliant accomplishments, has it in his power to give real pleasure. It is noticeable, too, that a book shared with others is doubly amusing, far more impressive and much more likely to be remembered. Moreover, if children were brought up to read aloud in the home circle, we believe that fewer women would fear their own voices in the literary club or refuse to read a simple selection in a missionary meeting.

Diphtheria is so common and dreaded a scourge that many are interested to know whether the antitoxine treatment, which has been in use now in America a little more than a year, is really efficacious. While too early for a final judgment, it has been shown that if administered in early stages of the disease, say within the first three days, the percentage of mortality is greatly lessened. In the Boston City Hospital, for instance, the rate of mortality, under the old methods of treatment, was forty-two per cent. during the first forty-five weeks of 1894, while during the remaining seven weeks, when antitoxine was used in all the severe cases, the rate was reduced to twenty-one per cent. In private practice the showing is even more favorable because, as a rule, patients who are taken to hospitals are in a worse condition than others. As a preventive, also, results justify a belief that the remedy is a valuable one. It may not afford full protection, but it enables the system to resist attacks of diphtheria for a variable period, usually about thirty days.

It was her interest in the discovery of this new remedy for diphtheria that led Marie Amélie, queen of Portugal, to study medicine, and she is the first woman of royal birth who has acquired the distinction of adding the letters M. D. to the "Regina" which follows her name. Owing to the people's lack of cleanliness and their indifference to the laws of sanitation, Portugal probably suffers more from this scourge than any other European country. The queen, on hearing of the serum, took steps to have it introduced into Lisbon, though stoutly opposed by members of the medical profession there. She was herself publicly inoculated therewith and even surrendered her riding school, as well as a number of her horses, from which the serum is prepared, to those intrusted with producing the remedy. The king, Dom Carlos, suffers from excessive obesity and, receiving no benefit from the court physicians, the queen has undertaken his case. She is a devoted wife and mother and renowned both for her wise economy and her elegance of manners. It augurs well for the future of Portugal that the queen consort is a person of so much force of character and so intelligent concerning sanitary science.

IN THE EVENING.

BY KATE UPSON CLARK.

The evening is the period of impressions. The stress and clamor of the day are over. Relaxed and receptive, the soul listens in leisure for whatever the breezes may bring. The words and pictures which float by are absorbed into the tissues of the being and influence it forever. Some one has said, paraphrasing the famous remark of Fletcher of Saltoun: "I care not how a young man spends his days. Let wisdom but direct his evenings and his future is assured."

In the home, then, let us well consider the evening. Fathers and mothers should use their best efforts to make it the pleasantest and most profitable time of the day In one happy home all of the family take part in some game or games for a half-hour, more or less, after the evening meal. Then a half-hour is passed in reading aloud. Then those who must study or work retire to the proper room, the mother picks up her sewing or knitting, the father resorts to paper or book, the older sons and daughters cluster around the piano or go forth to meet social engagements, or they unite with their parents in conversation or special reading or in entertaining visitors. All derive both pleasure and profit from their evenings.

But there is one requisite to the evening's enjoyment which is too often neglected. In order to properly utilize its golden hours a good light is absolutely necessary. Reading or working by a light far above the head is highly injurious to the eyes, and often heats the head to a degree which causes headaches and more serious troubles. The rubber tubes for gas drop lights are apt to prove unsatisfactory. Electric lights are as yet unavailable for most of us. We fall back upon the kerosene lamp.

Now among the numerous kinds of lamps on the market are several perhaps equally excellent ones, but even the best of them require much care. Servants can seldom be trusted to fill, clean and trim them with judgment. In very few homes does the lamplight stream forth through immaculate chimneys, from even wicks and without odor. This is probably because the servant who attends to the lamps has not been properly trained, or is so stupid or perverse that she is incapable of training, or the house-mother herself has been too busy or too indolent to attend to the matter herself. It cannot be too strongly impressed upon home makers that the evening is the most formative time in the lives of their children; that successful evenings are impossible without good lights; and that good lights can be uniformly secured only by the expense of considerable labor and care.

It should not be forgotten that a screen must always be placed between a lamp and the head, if one is working close beside the lamp, as one ought to be to get the full benefit of the light; also, that the light should fall from behind upon book or work. If that is not practicable an eye-shade should be worn.

WHIFFS OF COMMON SENSE.

III. HOME MUSIC.

BY MARION HARLAND.

Among the relics of my maternal grandmother's belongings in my possession is a small volume of sacred music. It is bound in canvas, russet with age. Upon the outside of the left-hand cover is a lozenge drawn in black ink, bearing within it the owner's maiden name, "Judith S——," in neat script. Time's brown thumbings disfigure pages which were well worn by much turning before dainty Judith laid it aside forever.

An octogenarian gentlewoman once told me that she had never heard sweeter singing than when Rev. Drury Lacy, D D., of blessed memory in the Southern Presbyterian Church, used to raise from the pulpit some grand old tune, such as Mear or Dundee or Old Hundred, and his sister in-law, Miss Judith S——, sitting in a front pew, carried the air, he dropping to the bass as soon as she took up the strain. "Such voices I never hear nowadays!" sighed the narrator. "His was like an organ—powerful and deep. It is said he could be heard a mile away on a still Sunday. Hers would be called a soprano now, and was very strong, but clear and as sweet as a flute. I have seen them sit with a book of new music before them and sing piece after piece neither of them had ever seen before, with as much interest as you would read a new novel. We all sang by note then, and but few people could read music as well as Dr. Lacy and Miss Judith."

Brother and sister-in-law have been singing the new song together in the upper sanctuary for over half a century, but the picture outlined by their early admirer is plain and present to my mind's eye. I handle the ancient volume gently, pleased at recognizing here and there a familiar favorite, smiling over the fugues — "racing tunes" as we used to call them—beloved of that generation.

Of a later date was the neighborhood singing school, and, following in the track of the itinerant teacher, the appearance in every household of The Boston Academy, The Carmina Sacra, The Shawm and other collections of vocal music adapted for the use of societies and churches. As my old friend has said, we all sang by note, and she was dull of ear or wits who could not bear her part at sight in any simple church tune. The pianoforte took the place of our grandmother's spinet and harpischord, and every girl in every family was taught to play upon it after a fashion. She who had not taste or talent for music gave it up after her marriage. In this particular she was no more derelict than the "performer" of our times, whose florid flourish of classic music costs thousands where her grandmother's strumming cost hundreds.

The musical education of the girl of that period hardly deserved the name. The national ear for music, like the national eye for painting and sculpture, has made marvelous progress in fifty years. The singing school has gone to the wall along with the volunteer choir and the notion that every boy and girl can and ought to sing. Once in several whiles you find a "music-mad family," of which every member plays upon some instrument and studies music with expensive professors. Or one child displays what relatives rate as musical genius, and is educated to the full extent of the parents' ability. This done, the proficient becomes, in his or her own opinion, a privileged prodigy. Critical from the outset of his musical career, he grows intolerant of amateur work and disdainful of such compositions as the (musically) unlearned delight to honor.

"Don't you suppose," said the late Mrs. Barrow (the dearly beloved "Aunt Fanny" of a host of little ones) to me at an evening musicale, "that seven out of ten professed disciples of the Wagner cult here present would, if they dared be unfashionable and honest, ask for music that has a tune in it rather than that movement in something flat or sharp to which they have seemed to give breathless attention for the last fifteen minutes?"

"A tune in it!" repeated a bystander in intense amusement. "Dear Mrs. Barrow, tunes are musical tricks, not true art."

This dogma, and others like unto it, are putting all our music-making into the hands of professional artists and hushing the voice of song and gladness in our homes. The one musician of the household is accredited with perfect taste and unerring judgment, and usually becomes a nuisance to his circle of acquaintances. He shudders at a false note; the woman who sings sharp is an agony, the man who flats is an anguish, and the mistakes of both are resented as personal affronts.

I know one girl (I wish I could stop at the singular number) who cannot enjoy going to her own church because the choir does not come up to her standard of perfection. She never sings in church herself. To mingle her voice with the tide of thanksgiving and praise would be like the crystal flash of the arrowy Rhone into the muddy Arve. She sets her teeth while ignorant and unfeeling neighbors join in the service of song, and confides on her way out of church to anybody who will listen to her that she really thinks it a misfortune to have as fine and true an ear as her own so long as people who do not know the first principle of music will persist in trying to sing. She has many companions in the persuasion that this part of the worship of the sanctuary should be left altogether to a trained and well-salaried choir. In the family honored by her residence there is no home music except of her making. There are, moreover, so many contingencies that may deprive her expected audience of the rich privilege of hearkening to the high emprise of her fingers and voice that the chances are oftentimes perilously in favor of her dying with all her music in her.

Shall I ever forget—or rally from—the compassionate patronage with which she, a week agone, met my petition for

When sparrows build and the leaves break forth?

"I never sing ballad music," she said, loftily. "Indeed, I could not do myself justice in anything this evening. I make it a matter of conscience not to attempt a note unless I am in perfect tune throughout—mentally, spiritually and physically. I should consider it an offense against the noblest of arts were I to sing just because somebody wishes to hear me."

This is not entirely affectation. The tendency of her art education has been to make her disdainfully hypercritical. It has not awakened the spirit of the true artist, who is quick to detect whatever promises excellence and encourages the tyro to make the best of his little talent.

With all our newly-born enthusiasm for German composers, we have not taken lessons from the German people in this matter of home-music. We do not even ask ourselves what has made them a musical nation. At the risk of writing myself down a hopeless old fogy, I venture the opinion that we were more nearly upon this track when the much-ridiculed singing school was in full swing and every child was taught the intervals and variations of the gamut, and ballads were popular and part-songs by amateurs a favorite entertainment for evenings at home, than we are in this year of our Lord. The pews in that age united with a volunteer choir in singing with the spirit and with the understanding. The few may not have played their part as well as now, but the many did their part better. In the family Jane may have surpassed her sisters in musical talent and proficiency, but one and all knew something of that in which she excelled, enjoying her music the more for that degree of knowledge. This brings forward another argument for the musical education of the masses, large and small. It would make general and genuine appreciation of good music, and put an end to the specious pretenses of which we spoke just now. The German artisan's ear and voice are cultivated from childhood; his love of music is intelligent, his enjoyment of it hearty yet discriminating.

Our babies hear few cradle songs under the new régime, except such as are crooned, more or less tunelessly, by foreign nurses. Girls no longer sing old ballads in the twilight to weary fathers and allure restless brothers to pass the evening at home in innocent participation in an impromptu concert, the boys bearing their part with voice and banjo or flute. We did not make perfect music when these domestic entertainments were in vogue, but we helped make happy homes and clean lives.

We used to sing—all of us together—upon the country porch on summer nights, not disdaining Nelly Was a Lady and The Old Kentucky Home, and sea songs and love songs and battle songs that had thundering choruses in which bassos told mightily. Moore was in high repute, and Dempster and Bailey were in vogue. The words we sang were real poetry, and so distinctly enunciated as to leave no doubt in the listener's mind as to the language in which they were written. We had not learned that tunes were musical tricks. Better still were the Sunday evenings about the piano, everybody lending a helping (never hindering) voice, from grandpapa's cracked pipe down to the baby's tiny treble. Every morning the Lord of the home heard "our voices ascending high" from the family altar, and in the nursery feverish or wakefully-fretful children were lulled to health-giving slumber by the mother's hymns.

These are some of the bits of home and church life we would do well to bring forward and add to the more intricate sum of today's living. Granted, if you will, that we have outgrown what were to us the seemly garments of that past, before relegating them to the attic or ragpicker would it not be prudent and pleasant to preserve the laces with which they were trimmed?

BITS OF AUSTIN'S VERSE.

The appointment of Mr. Alfred Austin as poet laureate of England calls forth a desire in the minds of those not familiar with his writings to know the style of his verse, which has been aptly characterized as poetry of culture rather than of inspiration. The peculiar virtues of his poetic creed are set forth concisely in a stanza interjected with others in the little volume called In Veronica's Garden, which is a mixture of prose and verse. He therein declares:

I would not sing of sceptred kings,
The tyrant and his thrall,
But everyday pathetic things
That happen to us all;
The love that lasts through joy, through grief.
The faith that never wanes,
And every wilding bird and leaf
That gladdens English lanes.

He is true to this sentiment when he sings of the simple joys of the springtime in this quotation from a poem entitled Is Life Worth Living?

Is life worth living? Yes, so long
As spring revives the year,
And hails us with the cuckoo's song,
To show that she is here;
So long as May of April takes,
In smiles and tears, farewell,
And wildflowers dapple all the brakes,
And primroses the dell;
While children in the woodlands yet
Adorn their little laps
With ladysmock and violet,
And daisy-chain their caps;
While over orchard daffodils
Cloud-shadows float and fleet.
And ousel pipes and leverock trills,
And young lambs buck and bleat;
So long as that which bursts the bud
And swells and tunes the rill
Makes springtime in the maiden's blood,
Life is worth living still.

Better to be driven out from among men than to be disliked by children.—Dana.

SOME NEW GAMES.

BY L. M. B.

Every Friday evening, just after tea, our nily spends an hour or so in playing mes. We all play; father and mother d the four children and sometimes even andma will join us. I am the auntie, pposed to have a magical way of discov- ing new things to play, but sometimes I am most at my wits' end for something fresh. One of our latest and "best fun" games called "Telegrams." Let some member the family give at random a list of ten tters consisting of both vowels and con- nants. Each person writes these at the p of a sheet of paper, which he is to use his telegraph blank. Then let another ember of the group suggest a subject for e telegram and still another the name of e person or place to which it is to be sent. ie last two are not necessarily to be men- oned in the message, but must be implied. ien allow five minutes for the composing a telegram, using the given letters in der as the first letter of each word. Here a sample, which when written looks a ry easy thing, but which we puzzled over til the five minutes were almost up, then came like a flash to the mind of the com- ser:

Subject: A Burglary.

Sent to: Police Station.

Letters dictated: S, N, B, W, C, N, C, A, B.

Telegram: Seize Negro bound west, carry- g neckties, coal-scuttle and one breast-pin.

A great deal of amusement can be gotten t of this game when the telegrams are ad aloud and the company tries to guess e writer of each.

Another game which we enjoy is called Writing Novels." As before, each mem- r of the party is provided with a sheet of per and a pencil. Each person writes at e top of his sheet the name of an imagi- ry novel, turns down what he has written d passes his paper to the right hand ighbor. Each one then, having received e paper of his left-hand neighbor, writes the part turned down a "sub-title" for novel and turning down again passes it as before. The next step is the name of hero, then a heroine, and finally, after ying what happened, a criticism of several ies is written. Collect the papers and ve to some one to read aloud. The other ght one read like this—you will see by e result that there were young and old gaged in the game:

The Story of a Fat Tramp

Or,

A Doughnut's Revenge.

Hero: Father.

Heroine: My kitty.

What happened? The Indian shot the hite man with seven deadly arrows.

Criticism: The book will be enjoyed by ung and old alike, of both sexes and of l nationalities. It is replete with wit and rrowing detail. To be had at any news- and for ten cents.

A more instructive game is "Noted en." Allow six minutes for the writing names of noted men beginning with A. hen read and compare, allowing one count r each person who has not a name the ader may have. For instance, if six play, d three have Benedict Arnold and three ave not, each one who has it on his paper nts a figure 3 after the name. We also joy illustrating proverbs. None of us an draw well, but perhaps we have all the more fun for that reason. Leave room at the top of the paper for turning over sev- eral times. Make what is to your mind an illustration of some well-known proverb. Pass the drawing about and have each one write what he thinks it is, turning down his guess before passing it on. Read aloud the various guesses.

We usually end by playing some more hilarious game. Our favorite is the old game of "Up Jenkins." Divide the party and seat them close together on either side of the dining-table. One side is in posses- sion of a fifty-cent piece, which is passed quickly back and forth from hand to hand under the table until number one on the opposing side calls "Up Jenkins." Imme- diately all hands must come up and be placed palm down on the table. Number one now is to guess under which hand the coin lies. If he thinks he heard it go down under Nellie's left hand he calls up every other hand, one by one, saying, "Up John's left," "Up Nellie's right," and so on. If the coin is found under the last hand left on the table it goes to his side. If there is a false guess and it is discovered before the last hand, there is another turn for the same side. This game should be played quickly, as that increases the danger of the coin's sounding on the table as it goes down.

BURNT BANK BILLS.

One of the most interesting departments of the United States Treasury at Washington is that in which burnt and otherwise mutilated money is examined and fresh notes given in their place. Many persons, especially in rural districts, are inclined to deposit their savings in the stove in the summer when no fire is needed, and in early fall these savings often go up in smoke. About a hundred cases of this kind are brought to the notice of the Treasury every year. The work of redemption is described in the Boston Transcript:

The Government is always willing and even anxious to replace spoiled money if it can possibly be identified. The skill of the women employed in this work at the Treas- ury Department is little short of marvelous. One lady, Mrs. Brown, attends to all the burned notes. Patiently she picks out scrap after scrap from a mass of charred fragments such as any ordinary person would regard as hopeless. One by one she pastes them on paper, assembling the pieces of each note on a sheet by itself and trying to "restore" the greenback as a nat- uralist would build up an extinct animal from a few fossil remains. Even a portion that is hardly more than an ash may still show the engraved design. . . .

In this kind of labor powerful magnify- ing glasses are often called into requisition. A note that has been chewed up by a baby is apt to be a difficult subject to tackle. Babies destroy a good deal of money in this way in the course of every year, and the same may be said of puppy-dogs. They have an equal disregard of value repre- sented by currency. Goats eat money now and then, and so do cows. Mice are partic- ularly destructive. They like to make nests out of paper cash, and this practice is en- couraged by people who hide their savings in walls and under floors. Birds would seem to have a similar inclination, judging from a rather odd happening of only a few weeks ago. An employé of the sub-treas- ury in Cincinnati, named Turpin, was shav- ing himself one sunny afternoon, when a robin flew in at the window. It flew out a moment later, and it did not occur to Tur- pin to suspect the bird when he discovered that a $10 bill which he had taken from his waistcoat pocket and placed on the center table was gone. A few days later, however, a storm blew a robin's nest out of a tree near the front porch. It was picked up and the missing bill was found incorporated in its material. Though a good deal dam- aged, it was redeemed subsequently.

Closet and Altar

Prayer, which we deem so easy, is, when it is real prayer, the passion of an effort, the wrestling of a life.

O, do not let the sluggish, turbid current of your ordinary days seem to you that which truly represents to you what you are, what you are able to be! No, the time when you made the holiest resolutions, when you struggled most with the powers of evil, when love conquered you and freed you from other chains that you might wear her chains, that, that was the true index to the divine purpose concerning you; that tells you what the Spirit of God is every hour working in you that you may be.—F. D. Maurice.

We cannot say the morning sun fulfills
Ingloriously his course; nor that the clear,
Strong stars, without significance, insphere
Our habitation. We, meanwhile, our ills
Heap up against this good, and lift a cry
Against this workday world, this ill-spread feast,
As if ourselves were better certainly
Than what we come to. Maker and High Priest,
I ask thee not my joys to multiply,
Only to make me worthier of the least.

—E. B. Browning.

The sight of the face of Jesus is, I think, what is meant by his glorious appearing, but it will come as a consequence of his Spirit in us, not as a cause of that Spirit in us. The pure in heart will see God. The seeing of him will be the sign that we are like him, for only by being like him can we see him as he is.—George MacDonald.

Night after night, as you lie down to rest, the weary day ended, think that a day offered to God in weariness and quiet en- durance may bring you fuller joy than the brightest, happiest seasons of enjoyment can do. And when morning brings a fresh beginning, it may be in weariness of body and spirit, strive to hear the voice of God saying: "My child, it is thus I will that thou shouldest serve me; if I will that thy service be weary and lifeless, and deficient in all earthly reward and pleasure, what is that to thee, so long as it is my will? What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter. Follow thou me without questioning the love which inflicts this weariness and sadness and seeming priva- tion of all thou most delightest in."

In thee God's promise is Amen and Yea;
What art thou to us? Prize of every lot,
Shepherd and Door, our Life and Truth and Way—
Nay, Lord, what art thou not?

—Christina Rossetti.

We acknowledge with sorrow and humiliation that though we are sure that thou wilt not forget us, we are afraid that we may forget thee. Our hearts are inconstant. Our strongest purposes are soon broken. We resolve to keep thy commandments, and yet are easily tempted to sin. Have mercy upon us, O Lord, according to thy loving-kind- ness. Strengthen our weakness, that we may not grieve thee by our wrong- doing. Shelter us from temptation. Reveal to us thy majesty and thy glory that we may fear to break thy laws; reveal to us thy laws that we may long to obey them. Who knoweth the bless- edness of abiding in thy love? Lord, help us to abide in it. Amen.

7. CHARADE.

In the SECOND of the river,
Stretching seaward from the land,
Edged with coral, shells and sponges,
Lies a ONE of yellow sand.

But learn, O ye little fishes,
All that glitters is not gold;
Prospects that are most alluring
Most deceptive snares infold.

Where that ONE the surface ripples,
Men drop lines into the sea—
Lines with TOTAL hooks are bated,
Foolish little fish, for thee!

8. A COUNTY FAIR.

I have attended many county fairs in my time, but none where there were on exhibition so motley a collection as in this. The lawns were of (1) a bright color from Virginia; the buildings were painted (2) a neutral tone from Illinois, and decorated within with (3) bright red from the same State, together with (4) the union of all colors from Arkansas.

The exhibition of live stock showed (5) a species of deer and (6) a flock of cawing birds from Kansas; a (7) young bull and (8) a fish from Alabama; a (9) majestic bird from Colorado; a (10) male of the red deer from Georgia; a (11) noisy bird from Indiana; a (12) dark bird of prey from Iowa; a (13) beast of prey from Kentucky; a (14) wild ruminant from Nebraska; (15) a bird from North Carolina; (16) an amphibious rodent, and (17) the males of deer from Pennsylvania; a (18) rooster from Tennessee; (19) a useful insect and (20) an innocent young animal from Texas; a (21) wild horned animal from Wisconsin; the (22) foremost end of an amphibious rodent from Montana; (23) the hindmost end of another aquatic animal, and the (24) pinion of a black carnivorous bird from Minnesota.

The mineral specimens were (25) a great rock from Colorado; (26) a semi-precious stone from Georgia; and (27) a gem from Kansas; (28) azure alluvial deposit and (29) a large piece of earthy mineral from Minnesota; (30) a useful common metal from Montana; (31) the combustible base of charcoal from Pennsylvania; and (32) a useful building material from Texas.

The botanical exhibition contained (33) a species of apple and (34) a narcotic berry from Alabama; (35) a wreath from Arkansas; (36) a semi-tropical fruit from Florida; (37) a bouquet from Indiana; (38) an odorous wood from Iowa; (39) a mock orange and (40) a useful grain from Kansas; (41) a species of poplar from Minnesota; (42) a yellow flower from Mississippi; (43) tough wood from Montana; (44) a small fruit from Nebraska; (45) a variety of grape from North Carolina; and (46) a species of oak from Texas.

There was also a miscellaneous collection of articles, including (47) a pinafore from Alabama; (48) the Christian emblem from Arkansas; (49) an article of bedroom furniture and (50) a last testament from Illinois; (51) a narrative and (52) one side of a sheet of another from Iowa; (53) places where the dead are laid and (54) that which is laid in tribute upon them from Kentucky; (55) a body of water which speaks French and (56) some bright colored remedy from Minnesota; (57) an animal's wigwam and (58) an Indian weapon made of precious metal from Montana; (59) a long overcoat from New York; (60) a shepherd's staff and (61) some hot seasoning from Oregon; (62) a weapon of war from Tennessee; (63) the result of Adam's sin, (64) a woman's head gear and (65) a knife from Texas; and (66) an old-fashioned pipe from Wisconsin.

But perhaps the visitors to the fair were as remarkable as the exhibits. There were (67) male sovereigns and also (68) female sovereigns from New York; (69) great lords from Massachusetts; (70) the head of the church from Arkansas; (71) the goddess of morning was there from Dakota; (72) a tribe of Indians arrived from Idaho, with (73) a whoop from Arkansas; a (74) former queen of England from Maryland; (75) a New England poet from Mississippi; (76) aristocratic people from Missouri; (77) the conqueror of the world, (78) the discoverer of a new world and (79) a famous strong man from North Carolina; (80) a son of the king of France from Pennsylvania was seen to (81) look impudently from Illinois at (82) a reigning queen from Texas. There were also present from the same State (83) a famous general who marched to the sea, (84) a member of the best known family, who has lost his hearing, (85) a famous English novelist, (86) a grandee of Spain and (87) the conqueror of Jerusalem. (88) A notorious political organization, now canonized, was there also from Louisiana.

5. The widow's share being equal to that of four children, a simple solution is to consider the estate as divided into twelfths. One son's twelfth being offset by his indebtedness, the amount realized by the administrator—$8,800, counting the good note—really represents but eleven-twelfths of the available estate. Of these eleven parts the widow receives four as her share and one as all that her son could assign to her of the estate, making a total of $4,000. The first son receives $800 (or his note and $300) and each daughter is entitled to $800.

6. Pall, all.

No laurel—nay! Give me heartsease, I pray.
Laurel grows on the hights so lone and cold,
But heartsease clusters by the warm threshold,
And brightens with its blossoms all the day.

COURTEOUS HINTS.

Perhaps there is no greater strain upo "neighborly feeling" than living next doo to a poultry yard whose inmates are allowe to "run"—making exercise ground of th adjacent flower and vegetable gardens. A San Diego young lady who was subjecte to this annoyance politely asked her neigh bor to keep his pets at home. She asked i several times, and still no attention wa paid to her grievance. Finally she hit upo an ingenious method of protecting herself

She prepared grains of corn by tying t them, with strong carpet thread, smal cards bearing the words, "Please keep you chickens at home!" and distributed th grain about her flower beds.

The chickens came to feast as usual an greedily swallowed the corn, not perceivin the thread until the card was against thei jaws. Then they could neither swallow th card nor rid themselves of the swallowe corn. Twenty or thirty of the marauder ran home, bearing the polite request to thei culpable owner, who, struck with the metho of the hint, promptly cut the threads an cooped up the birds.

This was forcible, but a delicate hin upon a like offense was conveyed from on aggrieved relative to another where stronge measures would have been out of place.

The suffering victim of hens was take ill, and the perhaps unconscious offende slew his choicest birds and sent to the in valid. The invalid feasted thereon and sen back a message of thanks to the effect tha the fowl was delicious and tasted of he violets!—Youth's Companion.

The Conversation Corner.

EAR CORNERERS: I have missed the old Captain for several weeks, but presumed that he was off attending to his Christmas duties. He has now returned with a big budget of children's letters which nfirms my presumption. The fact that ly three of the letters refer to presents ows that they were written before his sit, and of course the children had not ne then to stop and report what they ceived—they had something else to think ! The exceptions were of boys living on e Connecticut and Merrimack Rivers—do u suppose they hailed him on his return p? A remark at the close of the second oks that way.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I had a pleasant Christas and hope you did. I got a knife, a pair mittens, a game, $2.50 in money, two oks, a pencil box, a neck-tie, two handkeriefs. [I beat you! I had two neck-ties, one them of the kind that doesn't untie just the ne you don't want it to, and three handkeriefs, one silk!—MR. M.] We had a Christas tree. We saw your picture of the Cor-r, but grandma said you ought to have own your face. Lovingly, WILLIE M.

HATFIELD, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I inclose a money order r $1.50 for the Corner Scrap-book and post-e. I hope you had a Merry Christmas. I as well remembered by my friends this year, ven books and such valuable and useful ings as shoes, gloves, neck-ties and handrchiefs being among my presents. It is cky for the Captain that the river is not ozen, but I wish it was so that I could skate. should think that the old fellow would be aking an ice-boat to go around in this winter. Your loving friend, REUBEN W.

HAVERHILL, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: . . . One of my gifts was many handkerchiefs as I am years old. [I n glad that method of reckoning was not opted in my case!—MR. M.] Another was enholder and pen with which I have writn this letter. . . . Mother has read to us at me, "Patsy," by the author of "Birds' ristmas Carol." And she has just finished ading "Robin Hood." We are reading Golden Touch" in school, and when I left ey were as far as where Quick-Silver gave ng Midas a golden touch.

Your little friend, JOE B.

Besides verbal reports from various chilen, I had the pleasure of a glimpse at ree happy gatherings. At one the fam- were seated around the dining table, as e different courses of gifts were brought Two babies were in high chairs at opsite sides—not old enough to talk, but d enough to look and crow and eagerly etch out their hands for every "Brownie" d stuffed dog and climbing monkey that apared, although taking less interest in such ne articles as books, neck-ties and handrchiefs. At another place the lady of the use had invited all the little neighbor ildren—they moved about so it was hard rk to count them, but I think there were lozen. While we were all watching the ristmas tree we were almost frightened by great noise downstairs and by the heavy mping of footsteps and the mingled unds of bells and horns—of course you ow who came in and what he handed to ery one of us as we sat on the floor!

At still another house where I looked in Christmas morning the sitting-room was filled with small tables, with a chair beside each one. I was told of a novel plan arranged late the previous night by the matron saints of the household. An immense bag—I should think a sheet sewed up!—stood before each table, with a pair of scissors and perhaps a knife on the table and a wastebasket under it. At the proper time the different members of the family were led in, blindfolded, and placed at their respective tables. Then their eyes were opened, they were allowed to use their hands, and—you can guess the rest! I thought that might be a hint for some other Corner family about December, 1896.

Continuing my way to the post office I overtook a little fellow trying with all his breath to blow up a rubber football. I did not know him, but he said his name was John Rogers—and he was small enough to be one of the youngest of the martyr's nine (ten?) children. He told me what else he had and was anxious to know what I had. I mentioned neck-ties, handkerchiefs, etc., but he said, "Didn't you have any football?" "No." "But Santa Claus would have brought you one if you had only told him!" Another hint?

I heard a fine plan for a children's surprise on Christmas Eve up in Vermont. The uncle, living in or near Boston, was to make a holiday visit to the home, to arrive just in time and to be secretly smuggled into some chamber, from which he was to descend to the room where the children were gathered, dressed up as Santa Claus and loaded with the children's gifts, but not letting them know who it was until the distribution was over. If that plan was carried out, how I would like to have been there! But let us go on with the old Captain's budget.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Dear Mr. Martin: I want to belong to the Corner. I read it nearly every week. I want to ask you a question. Are pure white cats deaf? Doctor —— said they were. I mean all white cats, not a spot of anything else on them. Yours lovingly, ALICE.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Dear Mr. Martin: I thank you for making me a Cornerer. I am going to write a question to be answered by the Cornerers. Are white cats blind? WILLIE S.

Why did not some other New Hampshire member ask whether white cats were dumb? If so, white cats would be welcomed in the wakeful watches of the night! A lady who heard these letters read said it reminded her of an old gentleman who was riding once with a lady past a large flock of sheep, and asked her why it was that white sheep always ate more than black sheep. She did not know, but he did—"because there were more of them." What do the Cornerers think about the white cats?

DORCHESTER, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am a little boy eight years old. I love to read the Cornerers' letters and I would like to be a Cornerer too. May I? I am trying to be a good boy. Good-by. ALAN G.

Yes, you may be a Cornerer, and you may be a good boy.

MARSHFIELD, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I have been catching rabbits lately. We have caught three pretty ones. DANIEL H.

FORT BERTHOLD, N. D.

DeAr Mr. MartiM: I WAnt to be a COrnerer Very much. I AM Five years old. Do you think I AM old enough? Good-BYe. DORA H.

Come right into the Corner, Dora! You are old enough, for your brother Evan, who joined last May, will take care of you. He was seven years old then, and I suppose he is eight by this time. Tell us some time about the little Indian children.

WEST NEWTON, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I want to be a Cornerer too. I am eight years old. I have two sisters. I go to school and Sunday school. I go to the post office every morning. And I hope I shall find a letter from you with my certificate in it soon. I wish you a merry Christmas and a Happy New Year too.

Your little friend, LOUISE F.

I think she found her certificate at the office not many mornings after that.

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

About that Boy-King. The Youth's Companion reprints from a London paper a short account of Alphonzo, the boy-king of Spain, about whom S. E. B. told us in last week's Congregationalist. These two pretty stories are told of him, but I expect to see the first soon displayed as an advertisement for "Ivory Soap":

An Englishwoman gave him lately a little dog which he thought was ivory, but which was only soap. He was much pleased with his new toy, but a week later, being in the convent garden, he ran to her and said: "I took my dog in to bathe with me, and he has grown thin and small. What shall I do?"

Not long ago when out driving with his nurse Alphonzo saw some boys of his own size, and struggled to get out of the carriage and go to them.

"But you must not," said the nurse.

"Why must I not play? They are playing," he cried.

"Because, your majesty—because you are the king."

"Then please, nurse, let me be just a little boy," he cried.

About the Brownie Man. The correspondent of a daily paper gives some interesting facts about Mr. Palmer Cox, which will interest the readers of the Brownie books:

Mr. Cox lives in New York. In the winter he is accustomed to spending hour after hour at his desk getting up Brownie pictures and stories. He writes the stories and poems, and also makes the pictures. He has the Brownies fully protected by copyright, and every production of the little elfs, whether it be in toys, calico, rugs, stationery, wall paper, jewelry, confectionery or calendars bring him a return in the way of royalty, for which he receives $10,000 annually.

On his necktie he wears a Brownie who is in the act of climbing a pole to bring down a Princeton flag. In his pocket he carries a gold watch, on the cover of which is one of the original Brownies—a plain little chap who is growing old. He is six feet tall, weighs 185 pounds, and has a big, broad hand which would never be taken for a Brownie maker.

"I get many letters," he said, "from children and their mothers. Some of them are addressed simply 'Mr. Brownie, N. Y.,' or to the 'Brownie Man.' Some people like the Indian Brownie best, others the king, but the dude is the general favorite. He pleases the girls the most and seems to be the best all around character of them all. I often get imitations of the drawings that have appeared in print. Some of them are very good. The great trouble seems to be to draw the legs. That is the stumbling point for most children. I think that what helps the Brownies along is that they bring pleasant thoughts. To the men they bring impressions of childhood and of home. When you speak of a Brownie they always bring themselves into a good humor."

What the Children Say. A well-known Massachusetts minister once gave a dinner party, at which a gentleman just elected judge was one of the guests. The pastor's little three-year-old daughter was told by her mother that she was to sit opposite the honored guest and that she must behave herself like a lady, as he was a judge. So when he said to her, "You have never seen a judge before, have you?" the little maid replied: "No, sir, but I have seen a picture of Pilate in my Sunday school book!" LESSON FOR JAN. 26. Luke 4: 14–22.

THE EARLY MINISTRY OF JESUS.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D.D.

The gospel of John tells us that Jesus went back at once to Galilee after his baptism and temptation; that he wrought the miracle at the wedding in Cana; went to Capernaum with his mother and her family for a short time and then spent several months in Judea. But Luke omits this period. He evidently puts this experience at Nazareth immediately after the temptation, in order to set forth at the beginning of the ministry of Jesus the principles which he declared as the foundation of his work.

1. Jesus presented himself as a prophet of Jehovah. He had been anointed, he said, to a peculiar work. The Spirit of Jehovah had come upon him. His work was described in their sacred writings. It had been long ago foretold. The people were now to look to him to accomplish it. He had already begun to accomplish it, and in his first address to his townspeople after his anointing at the Jordan he called on them to follow him.

2. Jesus described the mission he had undertaken. He had been commissioned and prepared by God to preach good news to the poor. He would set captives free. He would give sight to the blind. He would give liberty to the oppressed. Jewish law provided for a jubilee year, when property would be redistributed, wrongs righted and society started afresh in the effort to give happiness and prosperity to all. Jesus announced that that year, the acceptable year of the Lord, was at hand. His beginning of his ministry was the beginning of the fulfillment of this prophecy.

Whether these blessings be considered in their lower and literal meaning, or in the higher spiritual sense, they are what all men desire for themselves and their fellowmen; and they cannot be gained in their lowest meanings unless the highest meanings also are sought and secured. The socialist wants to abolish poverty, to set captives free, to give sight to the blind and to bring liberty to the oppressed. The Christian wants to bring each man and all men to realize their highest manhood. By doing this the evils of poverty and ignorance and injustice will be swept away. At this point the two classes of reformers meet. The only means by which the condition described by the prophet can be realized is given in Christ's interpretation of the text: "Today hath this Scripture been fulfilled in your ears." Jesus himself received as Messiah, Redeemer and King is the fulfillment of all holy desires for all men. There is no other way of deliverance from the evils under which men groan.

3. Jesus presented himself to his townspeople as a teacher. That was the title he claimed. He said to his disciples, "Ye call me Master and Lord; and ye say well, for so I am." Here the word master is used as we use it when we say schoolmaster. The teacher also included the preacher. The place of power is the place in which one most influences the emotions, thoughts and wills of men. That will always be done most effectively by the living voice representing emotions, thoughts and will which control men. Jesus was the world's greatest preacher because he was the Saviour of mankind. He knew and was the truth. He came into the world that he might bear witness to it. The truth he was and preached was of supreme value to all men.

4. The source of the great preacher's power was the Holy Spirit. He applied to himself the prophetic words: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he anointed me to preach." He came back from his baptism in the power of the Spirit [v. 14]. That anointing enabled him to make known the gracious message of salvation and himself, the Saviour. Even the sinless Christ could not gain a hearing among men without the power of the Spirit.

5. The disciples of Jesus may be qualified to preach in his name. He said that those who believed on him should do the works that he did and greater, because he would ask the Father to give them the Spirit, which reveals and applies the truth. The Father is ready to bestow the Holy Spirit on those who ask, to anoint every believer for service. To realize Christ's truth intensely, to love men because we love God supremely and believe that men are his children and can be changed into his likeness is to have a divine call to preach; and this call comes not only to those who are set apart to the ministry, but to men and women who are moved to teach Christ's truth in homes and Sunday schools and in their secular callings.

But this anointing, this power from above, must not be lightly sought. It means the putting off of pride, self-seeking, all sin and desiring the gift simply that we may glorify God. Do we shrink from the idea of having the Holy Spirit coursing through every channel of thought and feeling, taking up his abode in all the recesses of our hearts? We must ask God to search the heart into which we invite his Spirit to enter, and we must gladly surrender ourselves to his searching.

6. Jesus chose the ordinary means through which to preach his message. He preached in the synagogue. Many of the leaders in the Jewish church were not in sympathy with him. He denounced their methods and spirit. But the church was planted by God and its principles came from him. The synagogue was one of its institutions. The Sabbath was another. Therefore, though he came to reform the church, he reverenced its customs, used its opportunities and obeyed its rules. In this every true disciple will imitate him. The church and the Sabbath bring men under the peculiar influence of divine forces. Every one needs both institutions in order to live in communion with God and to teach his truth.

7. The townsmen of Jesus rejected his preaching. His words they recognized as full of new and gracious meanings, but they interrupted him. They lacked the sense of the divine presence. When men are not roused to any consciousness of inward need, they demand outward signs. These people judged the preacher first by his personal appearance and manners and were pleased. Then they remembered his humble position in society and their impressions began to change. Then they recalled the fame of his miracles and they began to desire to be entertained by his wonders. Then they saw that he was exposing their prevailing sins and they became enraged. Next, they realized that he was not offering to them exclusively the privileges of his gospel and their rage burst all bounds. The truth which he preached they could not discern. They saw the frame, not the picture; the vessel, not the contents. They sought entertainment, flattery, agreement with their own views, but not the truth. They thrust away forever salvation and their Saviour.

We make ourselves enemies of the truth by refusing to accept it, but it does not lose its power. Who can fight against God? We must either cast out selfishness, with all that it includes, or cast out Jesus and his glorious message. By the majesty of grace and truth he so awed his enemies that their rage was restrained and he passed through them unharmed. But O, had they welcomed the Prince of Peace, how different their destiny would have been!

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

AN INDIAN CHRISTMAS CELEBRATION.

BY MARY C. COLLINS.

On Grand River, N. D., we have no church large enough to hold all the people, so long ago we gave up the idea of having one central Christmas tree and inviting all to come. We now have three—one here at Fort Yates, one at One-Bull's and one at Thunderhawk's. This year I had the names of all the members of the church and congregations sent in and they numbered about 500. It took considerable planning to make the gifts go around among the three trees, but we succeeded. With tissue paper and a few tinsel ornaments we made our tree look very pretty, while the plain white walls of the chapel were decorated with flags, bunting and mottoes. At the left of the folding doors we hung Little Eagle's picture and draped it with flags. Then some of our Indian young men cut letters out of colored paper and made mottoes in their own language.

When the door opened and people and school children filed in, the floor and seats were crowded with 300 Indians. Miss Lord's station united with us. After the address from Wakutemani and some songs by the Y. M. C. A. members and the schoolgirls, with chorus by the congregation, came the distribution of presents. Dolls and harps, combs and soap, handkerchiefs and suspenders, mittens and stockings, baby dresses and hoods, paper and pencils, neckties and ribbons—all were received with pleased faces and a quiet "thank you." Then a bountiful supper was served in another building. Some remained in the church and listened to speeches. Grindstone had thought out something himself which he told the people. He said: "Why do we select the evergreen tree for a Christmastree? Because neither storms, nor the cold, nor the snow, nor the wind can kill it. It is like Christ. All the evil combined cannot kill him. He will live forever, and so the cedar is an emblem of Christ."

Little Eagle was our first deacon and was killed while assisting in the arrest of Sitting Bull. A friend in the East presented us with a large crayon picture of him. When it first came I did not dare to put it into the chapel, as a great many of our church members are related to Sitting Bull. One of our deacons is a nephew. I ventured to try it now after the lapse of time and I hoped there would be no feeling expressed against it.

This nephew of Sitting Bull went over to see the picture and when he returned said: "Winona, I am glad you hung up that picture. Once I would not have come into the church if it had been there, but I am different now. I remember the time when I was a policeman. I went one night to Little Eagle's house to spend the night and he asked a blessing at the table. After supper he read the Bible. The words were, 'Judge not that ye be not judged,' and I could not understand then what he meant. He prayed and we retired, but all the time I remembered those words from the Bible. Then you came up to our schoolhouse and brought him and he spoke. I remember what he said. He said that something in his heart had made a new man of him. And I began to go to church to find out what he meant. Now I understand, and I know as he was an officer of the Great Father that he did his duty to go out to arrest my uncle. He was a Christian and he died not for glory but because he thought it was right." He took my hand and I noticed the moisture in his eyes as he smiled and said, "I am glad." Truly "Jesus in the heart makes a new man," as Little Eagle himself said.

OUR OWN WORK.

Church Building to the Front. The pressing demands made upon our churches by the larger missionary societies struggling to free themselves from debt should not obscure the claims of an organization so indispensable to the growth of Congregationalism in the United States as the Church Building Society. Many say, "But the C. C. B. S. is not in debt, I will give to those which are." It is not in debt to the banks, it is true, but it is in debt to the work. Sixty or more churches have been anxiously waiting for help for months. Some of them declare that they will lose everything if not aided soon. Delay on the part of the C. C. B. S. damages the work of the applying church, and lays a strain on the C. H. M. S. by postponing the achievement of self-support which often follows in the wake of a new church edifice. The National Council and the Massachusetts committee of the State Association on systematic beneficence have substantially agreed in recommending that where $2 are given to the C. H. M. S. the C. C. B. S. should receive $1, but the Building Society in fact received less than half of that last year, $141,566. As a consequence it builds only about half as many churches as are organized in our denomination. The difficulty is mainly among New England churches, many of which give this organization so low a place on their benevolent list that it does not come in for its due share of legacies. In striking contrast is the fact that in four States the C. C. B. S. receives the largest amount of the six societies, in two States it comes second and in thirteen stands third on the list. As this is the season when churches are revising their benevolent list we suggest that they give the Building Society the prominence which it so richly deserves.

Received by the A. B. C. F. M. The statement of the American Board receipts during December is somewhat disheartening, as it shows a falling off in regular donations of nearly $10,000. Moreover the figures of the past four months as compared with the same period in 1894 reveal a decrease in legacies of $23,298, and a total decrease of receipts from all sources amounting to more than $20,000. The details are set forth in this tabular statement:

|---|---|---|
| Regular donations, | $52,326.99 | $42,469.28 |
| Donations for special objects, | 6,885.70 | 6,525.62 |
| Donations for the debt, | 566.67 | 3,129.69 |
| Legacies, | 3,277.33 | 6,473.80 |
| | $63,056.69 | $58,598.39 |
| | 4 mos., 1894. | 4 mos., 1895. |
| Regular donations, | $130,093.82 | $121,762.21 |
| Donations for special objects, | 12,328.75 | 15,991.61 |
| Donations for the debt, | 2,161.48 | 10,097.97 |
| Legacies, | 50,362.11 | 27,063.59 |

THE WORLD AROUND.

The Drink Traffic in West Africa. Speaking recently of his nine years' work and traveling in Zoruba Rev. J. D. Sutcliffe, English Wesleyan missionary at Abeokuta, a town of 150,000 inhabitants, deplores the enormous importations of intoxicants which are devastating that part of Western Africa. He says that the evil is scouted in some quarters and therefore it is necessary to remember that what is seen of the natives in the streets of the towns does not represent their family life. It is not until one visits the "compounds," where eight or ten families reside together, that it is possible to speak of the real life of the natives and the effect of the drink traffic upon them. According to the latest mails the Africans are beginning to realize the injurious effects of the intoxicants upon themselves, as shown by the meetings held at Lagos, Abeokuta, Ibadan and Oyo. Various chiefs were present and evinced a strong desire to acquiesce in and support any steps for the restriction or suppression of the traffic. Of the terrible havoc which drink is making among the Zorubas Captain Lugard offers an independent testimony of painful significance. He says in a recent article that the Zorubas on the east and west of the Niger are exceptional for their industry and skill both in agriculture and in mechanical work. They have a passion for trading, and are extremely intelligent and fairly plucky, and then adds, "I regret to say that it is this fine race—one of the finest in West Africa—which is being demoralized by the importation of millions of gallons of the cheapest and most noxious of spirits from Hamburg and Liverpool. This import strangles legitimate trade and leaves the native with only a heritage of empty gin bottles and an enfeebled physique to hand down to his posterity." It is to the credit of this distinguished explorer that he has become an earnest advocate of educational and philanthropic missions for the regeneration of the African race.

CITY MISSION WORK IN OREGON.

The Congregational City Missionary Society of Portland and vicinity closed its first year with work accomplished which proves that the organization was needed. The estimated expenses at the beginning of the year were $1,200. The actual outlay of the society was $1,030, and all bills are paid. The work, briefly summarized, shows one church organized; thirty-seven members; eighteen baptisms; thirty hopeful conversions; one new Sunday school and another reorganized, both having sixty scholars; a third with fifty scholars, practically under Congregational supervision, although not nominally so; fifteen new workers in the different mission schools, all doing excellent service, from the ranks of those hitherto not actively engaged in Christian work, and by these efforts finding their own spiritual life greatly quickened; $140 raised on the field among those who hitherto have never aided in any Christian service; a renewal of interest everywhere along missionary lines, and the necessity for persistent missionary effort emphasized as never before.

Rev. D. B. Gray was chosen city missionary one year ago. His work has included preaching and enlisting others, both ministers and laymen; visiting Sunday schools, enlisting teachers, helping and encouraging superintendents; visiting from house to house to preach the gospel privately, to some in young life just starting a home, to others on their dying beds, and to the poor to interest them in the true riches; distributing religious papers, magazines, tracts, etc., personally and by mail.

The seeds of missionary truth thus sown, it is confidently expected, will spring up and bear fruit in the future in many ways. One noble Christian heart has already been moved with a profound sympathy for the work of missions, which will, no doubt, result in substantial aid in the planning of business interests to that end.

The churches uniting in this effort to permanently maintain a city missionary society are: First, Hassalo Street, Mississippi Avenue, Sunnyside, and First of Oregon City. Another source of help has been the generous support of the Sunday School Society in the matter of furnishing supplies to the mission Sunday schools. G. H. H.

Speaking of a man who had accepted a call to a hard field, a somewhat cynical observer of the way in which the parish had used up several ministers remarked: "If he accepts we can only say,

> One more unfortunate
> Weary of breath,
> Rashly importunate,
> Gone to his death.
> Take him up tenderly! etc."

THE NEW ENGLISH POET LAUREATE.

It is not so much of a surprise that Mr. Alfred Austin should have been made Poet Laureate as that any appointment should have been made. Since the death of Tennyson and Browning England has possessed no poet of the first rank and many regard the second as equally empty. Then come about on a par as regards merit and fame the names of a number of verse-makers of more or less ability, Dobson, Lang, William Morris, Sir Lewis Morris, Arnold, Watson and several others, each of whom exhibits respectable power but no one of whom ever has given indications of genius. Swinburne should be added, as the most of a true poet among them all, but his published indecencies and other defects have injured his fame and at his best he is not the equal of the dead singers.

Mr. Austin doubtless will turn off poems to order whenever desired in a spirit and form which will not discredit his appointment, if he do not add much to the fame of his native land. But it is a natural as well as a common inquiry why any poet laureate at all was appointed since nobody conspicuously worthy of the honor could be found. One possibility, however, should not be overlooked. The new poet laureate may be inspired by his official responsibilities and may attain an excellence hereafter which shall be conspicuously creditable. It is true that Tennyson himself was not specially distinguished when made poet laureate, and that his reputation was won for the most part after his elevation. It is well that the anxiety of the various aspirants, some of whom have allowed their eagerness to become amusingly obvious, has been set at rest, and in due time the world may grow to know who is meant when "Austin" is mentioned.

BOOK REVIEWS.

TWO BOOKS ON HIGHER CRITICISM.

The venerable Dr. W. H. Green, professor at Princeton Seminary, published a few years ago in Hebraica a valuable series of investigations, which are now made more accessible by their issue, with some additions, in book form, entitled The Unity of Genesis [Scribners. $3.00]. A smaller volume, The Higher Criticism of the Pentateuch [Scribners. $1.50], addressed to a wider public, appears with this, but is really of little importance except for its historical sketch of the progress of criticism. Its attempt to identify the analysis of the Pentateuch and the denial of its Mosaic authorship with antisupernaturalism runs counter to the patent fact that a multitude of reverent Christian scholars hold both the former positions and oppose the latter as strongly as does our author.

All intelligent students of the Bible are eager to have this question settled aright. Dr. Green prejudices his case by his tone toward opponents, for example:

> A word may further be added concerning the marvelous perspicacity, verging on omniscience, claimed by the critics, who undertake to determine with the utmost assurance, the authorship not merely of books, or large sections or paragraphs, but of individual sentences and clauses, and fragments of clauses. They undertake to point out, to the last degree of nicety and minuteness, not only what J and E and D and P have separately written, however involved these may be with one another, but what precise changes each of a series of redactors has introduced [p. 126f.].

Half a page more in the same strain follows. Our own experience with those whom Dr. Green is fond of calling "divisive critics" has been just the contrary. We find them conscious of the provisional character of their conclusions, patiently sifting a mass of uncertain and apparently conflicting data, and abandoning hypothesis after hypothesis as more light breaks in. To this last point Dr. Green bears frequent witness in the larger of the two books before us, and he shows—to our view conclusively—that they ought to abandon many other untenable positions. He is at his best in developing these inconsistencies and oversights. Thus:

> In P (13: 6) Abram and Lot separate for want of room simply, while in J (ver. 7 a) it is because of the strife of their herdmen. But this is merely objecting that the part is not equal to the whole. The story is arbitrarily split in two. The lack of room, which leads to the strife, is given to P, the strife which results from the lack of room to J. Each part implies the other and is incomplete without it [p. 164].
> In chap. 22 Elohim demands the sacrifice, Jehovah stays the patriarch's hand; the critics attribute the latter to a different writer, though it is an essential part of the narrative. Isaac's blessing pronounced upon Jacob (27: 27, 28) is rent asunder because Jehovah and Elohim occur in successive clauses, as often elsewhere in the parallelisms of poetry. Jacob's dream (28: 12, 17) is partitioned because Elohim alternates with Jehovah, so that he falls asleep in one document and wakes up in the other [p. 540].

Whether it be true or not of Dr. Green's German opponents, it is certainly true of Biblical students in this country, that they will accept the conclusions of this book just as fast and as far as these appeal to their judgment. The author seems fearful of the influence of foreign critics, but he need feel no alarm. The present generation of Americans, a considerable portion being brought up on the weekly issues of the Sunday School Times, is bound to prove all things and hold fast that which is good.

It is a matter for regret, however, that Dr. Green's positive contributions are so inferior to his criticisms. At the outset he falls into a manifest error in his elaborate explanation of the generations of the heavens and the earth (Gen. 2: 4), which he interprets of man, the child of both worlds, his body from the earth, his spirit from the heavens; whereas these "heavens" are as purely physical as the earth. This failure throws back the verse in question to what precedes and emphasizes the contrast between P and J. Again, it is vain to attempt, as at pp. 425–29, to explain away the plain meaning of the phrase (Gen. 36: 31) "before there reigned any king over the children of Israel"; the thoughtful reader will say: "Moses never wrote that; if he wrote the rest, this is a gloss from the time of the kings, at the earliest."

And what positive evidence does Dr. Green adduce to prove the Mosaic authorship of Genesis? This, both at the beginning and end of the book:—Moses gave the law; Genesis leads up to the law; therefore Moses wrote both.

The law was given by Moses; but this no more proves that Moses wrote Exodus, Leviticus and Numbers than the rest of the verse proves that Christ wrote the four gospels. Deuteronomy claims to be from Moses, but Scripture nowhere makes this claim for Genesis, and it is so difficult to maintain such a claim that we are surprised at the weakness of the evidence here adduced.

The great value of this book lies in its keen and scholarly polemic against the naturalistic form of the documentary theory. We are happy to believe that a reaction from that extreme has already set in; but we see no reason to suppose that the pendulum will ever swing again to the extreme represented by Dr. Green.

RELIGIOUS.

A second edition is out of Mr. Marshall's volume Nature as a Book of Symbols [Cranston & Curts. 90 cents]. The author has made a study of the chief natural features of the universe, and he looks at each of them from the symbolic point of view. The relation of nature in its different aspects to God is a trite subject, but one upon which almost any thoughtful mind can strike out some individual conception, and Mr. Marshall certainly has written a book which many people will find edifying alike mentally and spiritually. He shows of the clouds, the rain, the sunshine, the earth, the seasons, how each of them reveals God, teaches duty and inspires righteousness, and to show this acceptably is to do a useful work.

In Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons' Series of Handbooks for Bible Classes and Private Students the latest number is Ephesians [60 cents], with introduction and notes by Prof. J. C. Candlish, D. D. It is in the same form and illustrates the same methods and ability as its predecessors in the series. ——Lessons in the School of Prayer [A. D. F. Randolph & Co. 50 cents] by Rev. A. T. Pierson, D. D., is intended as an aid to private devotion as well as a means of more general Christian edification and embodies the well-known author's experiences and observations in regard to the subject and will be highly regarded.

Those of our readers who are familiar with Mr. Robert Bird's little volume, Jesus, the Carpenter of Nazareth, will welcome his Joseph, the Dreamer [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50]. We know a home in which the former book is brought out regularly at twilight on Sunday and is read aloud, to the constant delight of the younger children. And although the story of Joseph is somewhat less susceptible of impressive treatment, and although it is expanded in this volume more than we wish it were, nevertheless the book possesses the singular charm resulting from the blending of reverent yet unostentatious piety with grace and skill in narration. It should go on the same shelf with its predecessor in the family library.——The Child Jesus and Other Talks to the Children [Cranston & Curts. 90 cents] is a volume of children's sermons by the late Dr. Alexander Macleod. Some of them came out originally in the Sunday Magazine. They are addressed to the younger rather than to the older children and are vivid, plain spoken and easily remembered. He does not talk down to the children but addresses them with a wisdom which they cannot fail to appreciate.

STORIES.

Ekkehard, A Tale of the Tenth Century [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $2.50] is by J. V. von Scheffel and has been translated by Mr. N. H. Dole, and his rendering is worthy of warm praise. The story itself, which has been before the public for a number of years, is of deep interest as a revelation of popular customs and of personal feelings and characteristics at the time described. The descriptive portions are forceful and the humorous passages waken quick response in the reader. The book is tastefully printed and bound and may be safely purchased as one of the best of the novels representative of German life in the past.

Ia [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25], by Q., is a mate in appearance to Mr. J. A. Mitchell's strong book, Amos Judd, which we noticed the other day. Ia is a Welsh story and the Second Adventists among the Welsh furnish the background and a religious atmosphere and training for the adventures of the two or three principal characters. The heroine illustrates the not uncommon type of the rude peasant girl, who, nevertheless, possesses considerable native refinement and a large degree of genuine ability, and whom love ennobles and improves in many particulars. In spite of her disregard of propriety she does not forfeit the reader's esteem, and the requirements of both moral and literary standards are reasonably well met by the author. This is a thrilling book in some points and no ordinary hand could have written it. Whether it can be defended as probable is another question.

'Cension [Harper & Bros. $1.00] is by Maude M. Austen, and it is a very unpretending sketch of Mexican life and of a characteristic Mexican love story. The simplicity of the little book is its great charm. It is a delicate and choice piece of work and, whether it be viewed from the intellectual point of view as a construction, or from the sentimental as a romance, it gratifies equally. It is a sad story and yet there is a certain sweetness in the sadness. The author who has done so good work as this can be depended upon to do equally excellent work hereafter, and it will be welcome.

W. M. Cannon is the author of The Invisible Playmate [J. Selwin Tait & Son. 75 cents], in which four stories, one of them in verse, are bound together under the title of the first. The conception of the principal story is quaint and touching. The author imagines his little child as conscious of the presence and personality of another child deceased and to find enjoyment therein. The story, which is short, is skillfully shaped and written with great power, and it will appeal to a certain element in most readers which is seldom touched so deeply. The other stories are lighter, yet in their way fresh and striking.

Another volume of short stories is The Little Room and Other Stories [Way & Williams. $1.25] by Madelene Y. Wynne. There are six of the little stories and they have a decided individuality. These, too, are simple but striking, and the reader finds himself thinking afterwards of their picturesqueness. Several are New England stories and one or two are Spanish. The book is prettily bound and makes very agreeable light reading.

POETRY.

Behind the Arras [Lamson, Wolffe & Co. $1.50], by Bliss Carman, is different from the work of most writers undoubtedly. Whether this difference is a recommendation is another question. Mr. Carman possesses unquestionable ability. If he could forget himself entirely and use his ability without thought of it he might do great things. As it is, his pages blaze with self-consciousness. Strange conceits seem to be sought for and to be pursued into remote and uninviting corners, and the manner throughout is that of one who is thinking about how he shall build his verse rather than of what shall be in it, or of one who writes because he must write and cannot help it.

It is a relief to turn to Robert Louis Stevenson's poetry in his A Child's Garden of Verse [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50]. This is as fresh and virile and effective poetry as that of any other modern writer and is devoid of affectation. It is perfectly simple and that is why the children and the older people alike admire it so much. The illustrative work is by Charles Robinson and is very appropriately done.

Another pretty little book issued by Lamson, Wolffe & Co. is Mr. C. K. Bolton's The Love Story of Ursula Wolcott [$1.00], with designs by Ethel Reed. The poem is written in blank verse and reveals a pleasant familiarity with New England rural life as well as real power in portraying scenery in words, and it is simply and effectively expressed. The time is that of the great revival in New England and the conception and the execution of the poem are alike gratifying. The illustrative work is in the modern impressionist style, but is sufficiently suitable to be worthy of approval and the whole effect of the publication is decidedly pleasing.

Another book of poems is Pebbles and Shells [Picturesque Pub. Co.], by Clarence Hawkes. Mr. Hawkes is sometimes known as the blind poet of New England. His poems range over a large territory in respect to subject and illustrate many varieties of meter. They include poems of nature, sentiment, religion and vary considerably in quality. The best are decidedly good and none are so poor as to be especially conspicuous. The author may be termed a good example of those American poets who write with a true idea of poetry and a worthy ambition and who achieve a considerable success without ever becoming world-renowned.

EDUCATIONAL.

Dr. R. E. Thompson, who has taught for many years, is the author of Political Economy [Ginn & Co. 55 cents], intended for high schools and academies. It sets forth the views of the school of Carey and his followers and is a useful compendium, which other people than high school scholars may be glad to consult. The value of its theory will be found to depend somewhat upon the reader's point of view. For instance, protectionists will approve it wholly and everybody else will regard it as somewhat unfair. Yet where the bias of the writer is frankly avowed less harm can be done, and the reader or student is impelled to consult some treatise written from the opposite point of view, and in so doing gains a little on both sides and becomes impartially informed.

Several new readers, or volumes intended for use in schools as well as for private reading, lie before us. Two of them belong to Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s Riverside Literature series. One of these is Uncle Tom's Cabin, by Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, and the other is Sir Walter Scott's Ivanhoe [Each 60 cents]. Each in its way is a classic and will remain so for generations, if not for centuries. This series is very tasteful in its appearance.

A pleasing little German book is Märchen und Erzählungen [D. C. Heath & Co. 60 cents], edited by H. A. Guerber, and is one of Heath's Modern Language series. It is offered with the purpose of leading the beginner on interestedly to the acquisition of idiomatic knowledge. This, too, is in finer type than we should wish any child of ours to read, but with this single drawback the book is worthy of praise.——Prof. H. C. Elmer, Ph. D., has based in part upon the second edition of Carl Dziatzk a new edition of the Phormio [Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. $1.00] of Terence, from the Student's Series of Latin Classics. It is one of the most scholarly productions which has passed through our hands for some time.

Prof. Emily L. Gregory, Ph. D., has gathered into a book, Elements of Plant Anatomy [Ginn & Co. $1.25], the substance of lectures delivered during the last half of the second year's course in botany at Barnard College. The purpose of the book is, of course, to outline the principles of anatomy, and also to present the subject from the developmental point of view. It is illustrated and is in every way adapted to do good service.

Prof. W. E. Byerly, Ph. D., has prepared a collection of Problems in Differential Calculus [Ginn & Co. 80 cents]. It is supplementary to his treatise on the differential calculus and to specialists in mathematics it will serve its purpose well.

Four more of the Maynard English Classic Series are out. One is Sir Thomas More's Utopia, another is Charles Lamb's Essays, a third is Edmund Burke's Reflections on the French Revolution, and the fourth is Macaulay's History of England, Chapter I. [Maynard, Merrill & Co. 24 cents each]. These are well adapted for school use. Two or three French books also are sent us, one is The Academic French Course for the Second Year [American Book Co. $1.00] by Prof. Antoine Muzzarelli. It is a compact and well-printed grammar containing everything essential to its object, but not differing greatly from other works of the same general character.

The American Book Co. also send us Stories of Great Americans for Little Americans [40 cents], by Edward Eggleston, intended for readers in the second grade, and, belonging to the same series, The Eclectic School Readers, Stories of American Life and Adventure [50 cents], also by Edward Eggleston, intended for use in the third grade. Then in the Eclectic English Classic series are Goldsmith's Vicar of Wakefield [35 cents] and Shakespeare's As You Like It [20 cents]. From the same publishers also come Margaretta Burnet's little work Zoölogy for High School and Academies [75 cents]. It is elementary but comprehensive; clear, easily intelligible and well illustrated.

Mr. J. G. Needham's Elementary Lessons in Zoölogy [90 cents] also comes from the same house, and is a somewhat more elaborate and advanced treatise upon the same general theme.——Three volumes of Messrs. Ginn & Co.'s series of text-books in the National Drawing Course are out. One is Freehand Drawing [90 cents], a second is Mechanical Drawing [$1.10], and the third is Color Study [65 cents]. The author of all three is Mr. A. K. Cross. They are based upon his experience as an instructor and his observation of the practical needs of young people and learners in art, and they are well suited to attain their purpose, especially in the hands of a competent instructor.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Sprightliness in literature often is agreeable and a considerable admixture of it enlivens the natural sobriety of the lectures of Mr. J. V. Cheney collected into the volume called That Dome in Air [A. C. Mc-

Clurg & Co. $1.25]. The lectures discuss the relation of poetry to life, with special reference to religion, and supply critiques upon a number of more or less eminent poets, etc. They are suggestive and interesting, without going very far below the surface of things, and occasionally the style becomes noticeably and amusingly stirring. Fortunately it is not necessary to approve of all of Mr. Cheney's judgments in order to enjoy his little book.

The Arden Shakespeare is a new edition. It comes from D. C. Heath & Co. and has been edited by C. H. Herford, Litt. D., of Trinity College, Cambridge, Eng. It presents the greater plays of the poet in their literary aspect and not for purposes of critical or philological study. Six volumes, Richard II., Hamlet, Julius Cæsar, Twelfth Night, As You Like It, and Macbeth [Each 40 cents] are out and the workmanship of the series, alike literary and mechanical, is commendable. It will be one of the popular small editions.

The Heart of Oak Books form a new series which will be immensely popular from the first. Messrs. D. C. Heath & Co. publish it and Prof. C. E. Norton is its editor. It is educational in a sense yet not merely in the technical sense. The first volume of the six contains rhymes and jingles, e. g., Sing a song of sixpence, Little Johnny Pringle, etc.; the second, fables and nursery tales; the third, fairy stories and classic tales of adventure; the fourth, fifth and sixth selections from the best English and American authors of the present and past. The six volumes form a little library containing much of the cream of Anglo-Saxon literature. The printing, binding, etc., are in good taste. The volumes cost respectively twenty-five, thirty-five, forty-five, fifty-five, sixty and sixty-five cents, and are sold together in a neat box.

NOTES.

—— The late M. Renan's Oriental and Biblical collection included more than 3,000 works.

—— The January Book Buyer contains an interesting and valuable paper on Early American Book Clubs.

—— Romance will cease to give itself wholly to fiction henceforth and will pay special heed to illustration, and will be sold for only five cents.

—— It is ten weeks since The Bachelor's Christmas, Judge Robert Grant's recent story, came out and already more than ten thousand copies of it have been sold.

—— Alfred Austin, the new English poet laureate, is more than sixty years old and some think it worth notice that he has the same Christian name as his immediate predecessor.

—— Sir Walter Besant says that in England the number of readers is increasing enormously and will continue to increase so that larger editions of books will result and larger profits to authors and publishers.

—— The Paris studio and the marble statues of the late W. W. Story are left to his son Julian and the studio in Rome, together with his plaster statues, sketches, etc., to his son Waldo, with sealed instructions as to their final disposal.

—— Alphonse Daudet is much annoyed by the steady circulation of reports of his failing health. They operate adversely to the sale of his writings. In fact, although not vigorous and occasionally in pain, he is able to do his work about as usual.

—— The descriptive sketch of Hamilton W. Mabie, the editor, author, critic and lecturer, in the December Bookman is one of the most enjoyable papers of the kind which has been printed in a long time. It is accompanied by a fine likeness of Mr. Mabie.

—— Dr. James Stalker, Prof. Henry Drummond, Dr. George Adam Smith and Rev. John Watson, "Ian Maclaren," were fellow-students and intimate friends at New College, Edinburgh, and formed a society there called The Gaiety Club, which still exists.

—— Grant Allen calls his last erotic novel "a novel of the hill-top." Prof. G. Adam Smith says: "Yes. Dung-hill top." It is gratifying to know that Mrs. Oliphant, in the January Blackwood's, flays Thomas Hardy for his last book, correctly renamed by some reviewer Jude the Obscene.

—— The Critic declares that "the courts of Rouen, France, have issued a judgment for $500 against Prof. Cesare Lombroso and his publisher for plagiarism. The plaintiff, M. Crépieux, author of a book on The Writing of the Sick, charged that Lombroso had taken an entire chapter from this work and used it in his work on graphology."

—— The Dial of Chicago, in an admirable bibliography of World's Congress Publications compiled by Mr. C. C. Bonney, shows what a stimulus the great exposition was to intellectual activity, and it is not to be forgotten that, out of 102 publications already issued or soon to be issued, forty-one refer to the Congress of Religion and its deliberations.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Jan. 26–Feb. 1. How and Why We Should Testify for Christ. 1 John 4: 2–15.

Upon the "why" we need not linger long. If we who bear his name fail to witness for him no one else will. "The heavens declare the glory of God." Conscience gives continual reminders of the moral law, but only those lives that have been touched by Christ can perpetuate his name and influence in the world. Certainly it cannot be expected that men who make no profession of devotion to Jesus, whose lives are ordered on principles the exact opposite of those for which he contended, and to establish which he poured out his life even to the uttermost, will do anything to remind our age of him. This high and sacred obligation, then, is intrusted to us who dare to take his name upon us.

As to the "how," that is a matter which each must determine for himself after seeking divine illumination and direction. There were men in the early days of Christianity who felt called upon to bear their witness by standing for a long time on pillars, but manifestly this method would not accomplish much today. To some of our fellow-believers has come the call to bear witness to Christ in the midst of the fury and fanaticism of his enemies, and our hearts should thrill with gladness and admiration that our missionaries in Armenia are today displaying a heroism in no whit second to that of apostolic days. But here again precise imitation of that form of testimony is not possible to the great majority of us.

Other things being equal, our testimony must be given where we are and today—not next week or next year. If we cannot find some way of witnessing in the midst of our daily surroundings, it is not likely that we shall ever be called to a more conspicuous position where our witness will be more apparent, though perhaps not a bit easier. In the next place, our witness must be to the things for which Christ stood. Let the learned doctors construct elaborate arguments to prove that Jesus has been here and lived as represented in the gospels, but we everyday people may do perhaps as much to convince the world of the reality of his life if, in consideration of others, in helping the weak and the oppressed in purity of inward life, we exhibit in action the righteousness which he so completely displayed, and which he longs to see prevail throughout the earth.

The probabilities are, also, that some of our most effective witnessing will be in hard places, where we may have to take the unpopular side, where it may cost us something to stand for the things for which Christ stood. To rise up in the midst of Jesus' friends in a thronged prayer meeting and bear witness for him is one thing and a good thing; to say the right and brave word for him in the midst of those opposed or indifferent to his cause is another and a better thing.

Parallel verses: Deut. 19: 15; Josh. 24: 22; Acts 1: 8; 2: 32; 13: 31; Heb. 11: 38; 1 John 5: 9.

A New England church, not Congregational, has been holding a series of successful prayer meetings—the first ever held there during its twenty years' existence—but has now voted to close its doors against them, to save wear and tear of the building and, in particular, of a carpet which was put down a few years ago. Happily the selectmen have come to the rescue, offering the use of a schoolhouse to shelter this homeless revival. It is to be hoped that the church will succeed in preserving its building—with the carpet—intact until the Day of Judgment, that it may point to them with pride when confronted by the souls who looked to it for spiritual sustenance.

THE ORGANIZATIONS OF CHURCHES IN ALABAMA.

It seems from articles in The Congregationalist of Oct. 17, The Independent of Oct. 17, and The Congregational Helper (Alabama) of Oct. 23, referring to the Congregational ecclesiatical bodies in Alabama, that some have been misinformed as to their real status.

In The Congregationalist it is stated that "the Congregational Association of Alabama includes the Negro churches, about twenty in number." This is only a part of the truth, for the association has in it twenty-six churches, and some of them have not a single colored member, while others have mixed congregations.

The Independent speaks of the "Alabama Colored Association." The Alabama Association objects to being called the "colored" association for the reason that its membership includes persons of both races. We have heard of African Methodist Conferences and Colored Baptist Conventions, but we do not know of any colored Congregational Associations. That would be as much out of place as to say a white National Council of Congregational Churches.

It is an error to say that the association "rejected the invitation to join the convention by a tie vote," for a committee which had been appointed by the association and to which the question of union had been referred reported at the last annual meeting of the association that seven churches had voted for union, twelve against it, and the others had taken no action.

The delegate of the General Congregational Convention of Alabama has, through The Congregational Helper, informed his people that the council recognized the convention as the State body. The Congregationalist would confer a great favor upon its readers in Alabama if it would state plainly the position which it understands the council to have taken as regards this matter.

Talladega, Ala. S. SNELL.

In answer to our correspondent, who is an esteemed colored minister in Alabama, we desire to assure him that the word "colored" was not used by our contemporary in any invidious sense, but simply to indicate the distinction between the two bodies, the one being mainly composed of Negroes, the other of whites.

As to the statement that it is an error to say that the association "rejected the invitation to join the convention by a tie vote," we simply repeated the finding of the committee of the council, which is printed below.

The position which the council took concerning the standing of these two bodies is plainly shown in the report adopted by it, which is as follows:

The General Convention of Alabama is present by its accredited delegate asking recognition.

At the National Council of 1892 that body was denied admission on the ground that it was "not yet organized as representing all the Congregational churches in the State."

Since that time the said General Convention of Alabama has modified its constitution, adopting the principle of the council of 1892 of "equal rights for all disciples of Christ of every race," and has extended an invitation to the Congregational Association of Alabama to unite with it on that basis, thus conforming to the suggestions of the council in its efforts to secure a representation of "all the churches of the State" in its own body. That invitation was accepted by vote of the association in 1894, and its delegates sat together in harmonious session.

But on referring the question of union to the churches of the association for ratification, it failed to carry by a tie vote—nine churches voting for union and nine against, the membership of the churches favoring union being slightly in excess of those voting against it.

In view of these facts your committee recommend the adoption by this council of the following resolutions:

Whereas, The General Convention of Alabama has incorporated into its constitution the principle of the equality of all disciples of Christ of every race, so far as concerns Christian recognition and co-operation; and

Whereas, The said General Convention of Alabama has accepted the suggestion of the Council of 1892 and cordially invited all the Congregational churches of the State into its equal fellowship, which invitation has not yet been finally accepted; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this council recommends that negotiations for union with the churches of the Alabama Association be resumed, and that both parties, in the spirit of mutual concession, earnestly endeavor to bring all the Congregational churches of the State into one fraternal organization.

Resolved, That this council gives present recognition to the General Convention of Alabama pending further action upon the above recommendation, and cordially welcomes its representative, Rev. Stephen E. Bassett, to a seat in the Council of 1895.

It will be seen by this action of the council that the General Convention of Alabama presented itself, asking for recognition as a State body. It had made the same request to the council of 1892, which was denied for the reason that it did not then represent all the Congregational churches of the State, and the council thought that further efforts ought to be made to accomplish such a union. But the council of 1895 declared that the convention had, in accordance with Congregational principles, sought to unite all the churches in one body, and that its invitation to the association had been accepted at one session, delegates of both bodies having sat together in harmony.

On these grounds, though the invitation of the general convention to the association has not been finally accepted, the council recognized the convention as the State body and gave to its representative a seat in the council, advising at the same time that further and earnest efforts be made by both parties to bring all the Congregational churches of the State into one fraternal organization. A standing vote of the council provides that only one State body can be recognized at the same time for any one State. The general convention was therefore the one State body for Alabama recognized by the National Council of 1895.

It cannot be expected that a small minority of the churches in a State can assume to represent the State to the exclusion of others unwilling to unite with them on terms insisted on by the minority. Mutual concessions must be made when different plans are desired by different churches. Concessions appear to have been mutually made in this case, and a plan presented for adoption which in substance was approved by the council of 1892, but up to this time the concessions made by the representatives of the minority of the churches have failed to receive the indorsement of the majority of the churches they represented. The question involved is only one of method of organization, and no distinction of caste or color enters into it. We cannot but think that any persons who are attempting to influence the association against union with their brethren of the general convention are doing them harm rather than good.

THE PEACE HYSTERIA.

Mr. Capen's article on Lost Opportunities, in last week's Congregationalist, suggests another for which the above might be a fitting caption. Whether the President's Venezuela message really had a menace in it, as Mr. Capen states, though the Administration disavows any such, or whether the Monroe Doctrine applies to the question under discussion or not, or whether the sultan really has such good cause for rejoicing, as Mr. Capen seems to think he has, or not, one thing is certain and that is that, not since the present writer attained reading age, has there been such a hysterical and ridiculous exhibition of the advocacy of peace than by those who, in the earlier days succeeding the publication of the message, denounced the President and all his supporters in the stand he has taken in the Venezuela matter.

On the evening when the message appeared a number of prominent persons and others were interviewed as to the wisdom of the position which the President had taken. According to the interviewer, they failed to see anything strikingly violent in the message and seemed to regard it as a just claim for fuller knowledge. Two days later, after a certain clique of stock jobbers had worked up a scare, the people and the press became very much excited and, the Sunday following being the Sunday before Christmas, the pulpits of Boston felt it needful to advocate peace. This is the way they did it.

"If we meant bluff it is disgrace and if we meant war it is a crime." That was the utterance of a man who for twenty years has had the ear and attention of Boston, at least every Monday morning, in the newspapers. Of course he assumed that the President of the United States did mean either "bluff" or "crime." That he might be a patriotic ruler who was seeking to maintain his country's honor and to save the western world from militarism of the old world did not occur to him.

"Shame on us" was the verdict of another prominent pastor of twenty years' standing in this city and holding a leading place in the denomination to which he belongs. He had not read and could not have known, since it had not been made public, the correspondence in the case, but he was ready on a moment's notice to cry "shame" on his own country, his own ruler and his own nation. Of course the President and his Secretary of State were bloodthirsty villains who were out for blood. That they might be governed by wisdom and national feeling—perish the thought.

"Impeach the President" was the demand from another lightning commentator on presidential propriety and international peace. If the President had been found guilty of treason, or had sold out his country or had connived at its destruction, no severer official penalty could have been visited upon him. But here a preacher and a doctor of philosophy was anxious at five minutes' notice to impeach his own President, and all the while in utter darkness as to the real merits of the question or the correspondence interchanged between the nations involved.

But the time would fail to tell of the piling up of epithets by preachers and others. Words like the following, every one of which was actually used, indicate the fierceness of the hysterical demand for peace that morning. "Insane," "scandalous," "outrageous," "barbaric," "savages," "enemies of the race," "brutes," "slaughterers," "iniquitous," etc., were all used, generally with direct reference to the President of the United States and the Secretary of State. And all this in the interest of peace! No wonder somebody is proposing a religion which shall consist in love of country. And may we ask what kind of peace it would be that was proposed and that had to be maintained by such nervous folk as those quoted above?

REV. A. A. BERLE.

CURRENT THOUGHT.

AT HOME.

Mr. E. D. Mead, editor of the New England Magazine, in the January number says that Rev. Dr. George A. Gordon's book, The Christ of Today, is "destined to prove a more distinct and definite milestone in the course of New England orthodoxy than any other book which has appeared during the last half of the century. . . . Books of as great catholicity and breadth we have had, but none in which the issue is so definitely stated, the argument so close and the spirit so philosophic as here. . . . The difference between the New England orthodoxy of fifty years ago and the teaching of these pages is as signal as the difference between the Ptolemaic and Copernican astronomies. . . . Dr. Gordon is a Scotchman, and he does not rest until he can refer everything back to some ultimate intellectual principle. . . . It will have a great and wholesome influence precisely because it is so definite and intellectual."

ABROAD.

The British religious press comments on the dispute between Great Britain and the United States. The Independent says: "There is a power in these two free countries greater than that of presidents or premiers which will certainly forbid the iniquity" of war. It thinks it is impossible to give Lord Salisbury or the American President credit for any special wisdom, and as for the former, it believes that "the instinct of the old Saturday Reviewer overbore the caution which a foreign secretary ought to have exercised, and the result is the present imbroglio. . . . So let us, at this Christmastide, pray to God to save the nations we love well from the peril of so ghastly a crime against humanity and against God. We, descendants of the Pilgrims, have special duties in this matter. Very closely are we knit in love and fellowship to our American brethren. And that old Puritan element is still a potent force in both countries. Despite the introduction of various foreign elements, it still has an influence in the politics of the United States far beyond its numerical strength, and there, as here, it will work for righteousness and peace."

The Methodist Times thinks the whole responsibility rests with the American people and churches. "We shall do nothing to provoke conflict, but it must be obvious to every one that we cannot possibly permit the Government of the United States to determine by brute force what are the frontiers of the British Empire. Again, we say, what are the American Methodists doing to save their country from the most colossal and the most wanton crime of the century?"—The Christian World is unable to see why the British Government "should give a handle to the fomenters of strife by refusing to submit its whole case to arbitration."

The New Age (Socialist) of London, Dec. 21, admitted that the United States in enforcing the Monroe Doctrine would be "safe guarding the well-being of mankind generally"; said that "the whole matter comes around to arbitration, which the United States suggested from the first," and advised some of the London newspapers to hold their peace on the subject, "for their utterances have been as grossly immoral as anything we have read for a long time." The same journal, in its issue of Dec. 26, says: "So long as President Cleveland sticks fast by the Monroe Doctrine and by arbitration, he is, we believe, on bed rock, and Lord Salisbury's criticism is idle. But when the President says he will have his own commission and will pay attention to its finding and to nothing else he damages an otherwise impregnable case."

The Montreal Witness comments thus on the dramatic collapse of the Conservative ministry in Canada: "It is a just Nemesis that has overtaken the government. Seventeen years of bribery and corruption could not but end in degeneration, degradation and demoralization of the party that resorted to it. Their knowledge of one another makes any action, however immoral or base, seem possible, and we see cabinet ministers suspecting each other of betraying and undermining one another. Will any new combination of such elements hold together under any leader? It will be bad for the country, already disgraced by their incapacity and corruption, should this prove possible."

SENSIBLE THOUGHTS REGARDING SUNDAY.

One of the best speeches at the recent New England dinner in New York—an occasion always abounding in good speaking—was that of Rev. Henry Van Dyke, D. D., who took for his theme the Puritan Sabbath. Its special pertinence lies in its application to problems immediately confronting New Yorkers, but in its enunciation of general principles and proper distinctions it will interest all who want to see the sanctity of the day of rest and worship maintained. We make liberal extracts.

The Puritan Sabbath was a grand, good thing for the Puritan! Where he got it heaven only knows, but heaven assuredly does know! It was not from the Jews, as he fondly thought, for the Jews kept the seventh day with feasting and social cheer. It was not from the primitive Christians, for they knew nothing of the total abstinence from labor on the first day until the third century.

The Puritan Sabbath was in fact a new embodiment of the spirit of the Fourth Commandment and the Lord's Day, to meet the needs of humanity and religion in the England of Queen Elizabeth. Sunday in that land and age had become a day of unbroken toil for the poor and of unrestrained riot for the rich. Against this double evil the righteous soul of the Puritan protested, in the fear of God and in the love of man. His Sabbath was a solemn, visible declaration of the sacred right of the poorest creatures to their day of rest. His Sabbath was a clear, ringing proclamation of the sacred duty of all men to consecrate a day of sobriety and reverence to the uses of religion. After the destruction of the Armada, his Sabbath became his watchword, his standard, his palladium, for which he was willing to suffer, to fight and to die.

Do you wonder that when he came in exile to this new world he brought his standard with him? Do you regret that he made it the center of his new civilization? Let us admit that in maintaining it he did some things which seem to us absurd, extreme, fanatical. But let us never forget that within it were sheltered through stormy centuries three inestimable treasures: the sanctity of human rest as well as of human labor, the peace and order of the Puritan home, and the dignity and simplicity of common worship. Let us never forget that out of that sacred inclosure issued the men and women trained and solidified by self-restraint and sober discipline to be the very backbone of the permanent morality of this nation.

But is it possible, is it desirable to restore and perpetuate the iron wall at the present day? Can the Puritan Sabbath in all its details be made a national institution? I honestly think not. It was consistent, though we may think it unnecessary, for the Puritan magistrate to punish men for taking a walk or smoking a pipe, or kissing their wives, or staying away from meeting on the Sabbath. There was a reason for it. The Puritan state was a religious establishment with civil powers. The American nation is a civil institution with a religious spirit. The American Sunday, as established by law, can, and must, do two things, and no more. It must secure the absolute right of all who labor to enjoy their day of rest. It must defend the privilege of all who worship to do so in peace and quiet, according to the dictates of their conscience.

Now let us not shrink from applying these principles to the present situation. Here we stand face to face with the question whether the liquor saloons in this city shall be open on Sunday. Three things are clear—first, so long as the present law forbids them to be open every man with a drop of Puritan blood will say they shall be shut, if we have to bolt every door with the right arm of a Roosevelt and seal it with the anathema of a Parkhurst. Second, the question what the future law shall be must inevitably be decided by the people of the city. We cannot rely for the preservation of our civic virtue upon the rural innocence of Tioga and Herkimer, at least not for any great length of time. Already nearly one-half of the voters of this State live in the three first-class cities of New York, Brooklyn and Buffalo. Soon they will have the majority. Local option is coming. For my part, I should like to localize it still more. Why not vote upon the question by wards and districts? Why not get an object lesson by comparison of the actual effects of Sunday opening and Sunday closing upon the value of property and the peace of neighborhoods in different parts of the same city? Third, the only thing to be done by those who are against the Sunday saloon is to educate the people to see that there is no reason under heaven why the liquor dealers should receive a valuable privilege which is denied to other merchants, and that the opening of a dram shop for every fifty families in this city is probably the worst way in the world to make a peaceful and happy day of the American Sunday. Men of all creeds—Catholics and Quakers, Puritans and Baptists, Episcopalians and Presbyterians—are agreed on this point. If their convictions are worth anything they will make them felt when local option comes. . . .

We must recognize the difference between the American Sunday and the Puritan Sabbath. The one is a day of restraint, the other is a day of liberty; the one is a religious observance, the other is a humane institution. We ought not to confuse them, nor to attempt to reconcile them by compromise.

For those who believe in the substance of the Puritan Sabbath as a day of religious devotion, needful for the Christian life, to give up their private convictions and change their personal practice to conform to a passing fashion is to make a false compromise. For those who believe in the American Sunday as a day of secular rest, needful for the national life, to narrow its liberty and imperil its security by overloading it with restrictions and attempting to change it into a day of forced religion is to make a false compromise. Clear and distinct the two days stand, side by side, or, to speak more truly, circle within circle, sphere within sphere. The day of universal repose spreads like a fair, well-ordered garden, in whose pleasant ways the burdens of toil and the strifes of competition shall be laid aside, and all men shall be free to rest and refresh themselves in common joy and mutual fellowship. Within that garden, protected by its beautiful peace, stands the day of divine worship, like a shining temple, into which none shall be compelled, but all shall be invited to enter, and learn that the deepest rest comes through adoration, the strongest refreshment is drawn from faith and the sweetest music is that which praises God.

PASSING COMMENT.

A prominent feature of the Week of Prayer —which, in this section, at least, had to contend against the embarrassment of several stormy evenings—this year was the holding of cottage meetings at which, doubtless, a closer touch with the individual's inner life was often secured than under ordinary circumstances.

Churches which take pains to report their annual gatherings usually have something encouraging to narrate. Such marked gains as have occurred in many places, such spiritual uplifts and such courageous sacrifice as are found among our items this week are worthy of a careful reading and perhaps will serve as good material for reflection or suggestion to churches which want a better year before the next annual statements.

That article on debt raising—a noteworthy instance—shows how useless it is to yield to despondency even under such onerous conditions. An effort like this is a representative illustration of what could often be accomplished if churches which feel unable to pay their debts by a single herculean attempt would, instead of postponing indefinitely the task, adopt the plan described that permits the payments to be made through a period of years.

A glance at the list of additions shows what advantages many reapers are taking of the white fields. At this harvest season, more than ever, entire unanimity between pastors and churches is the first essential, then let the churches see to it that the first revival be among their own members as a preparation for the incoming of new recruits. Just now the true worth of the Sunday school and C. E. Societies is more than ever apparent.

FROM THE HAWKEYE STATE.

Many of the Iowa churches are making the annual meeting something more than a time for electing officers and transacting routine business. Some make it an annual reunion in which the social element has a prominent place. Others add the social features to the business element and also have a sermon from some neighboring pastor, thus making the occasion a time for spiritual quickening. There is a growing tendency among our pastors to make Forefathers' Day a fitting time for presenting the early history of Congregationalism and for teaching needed lessons from the example of the Pilgrims. The First Church in Cedar Rapids recently held an interesting and inspiring service in honor of our foremothers. In this section, without doubt, the churches are becoming more and more evangelistic. Of course there are evangelists and evangelists, but several consecrated men have done substantial work within our borders.

Nearly all the pastors do more or less evangelistic work, and some are granted four weeks each year to assist in such work. Many of the most effective of them have from two to four regular preaching points. Rev. Palmer Litts of Orchard preaches three times on Sunday, having to drive from twenty to thirty miles. One would think from the amount of his work that he must be in the vigor of early manhood, but his white hair shows that he is a veteran. Rev. J. K. Nutting and his wife serve three churches and have a wide parish. Mr. Nutting is our poet preacher and is a strong sermonizer, and his estimable wife preaches with equal acceptance. The Riceville meeting house has been enlarged and thoroughly renovated, and the church was never so prosperous as now. The pastor, Rev. L. M. Pierce, is doing much to care for neglected fields adjoining his parish. The church in Mason City, under the direction of Rev. F. G. Wilcox, has made substantial growth during a pastorate of a little over two years. The net gain has been fifty-four per cent. in membership and the outlook is exceedingly promising. It has been determined to erect a new house of worship in the near future.

In taking charge of the church at Charles City, Rev. C. C. Otis met a responsive and united people. Special meetings have been held with good results and the church is entering upon a new era of prosperity. The Summit Church, Dubuque, has had a remarkable growth under the wise leadership of Rev. G. M. Orvis. It is one of the few churches of the denomination that have received a hundred persons on confession this year. Special meetings have just been held with valuable assistance from Rev. F. E. Hopkins. After a successful pastorate of eight years at Creston, Rev. A. J. Van Wagner resigned, and that important field is still vacant.

It is creditable alike to pastor and people when a church becomes so well organized and so effective that it does not suffer seriously during an interregnum in the pastorate. That condition is illustrated in Webster City. Rev. J. T. Blanchard did a fine work there in a pastorate of nearly six years. He was called to Chicago in the summer but the work still went forward. The church has made a wise choice in selecting as its pastor Rev. C. P. Boardman.

There is a deep personal interest here in the struggle going on in Armenia, because some of our choicest sons and daughters are doing missionary work in that benighted land. Miss Mary Brewer, who rescued a native Christian so heroically during the riot at Harpoot, is a resident of Grinnell. She is a daughter of Prof. Fisk Brewer, formerly of Iowa College, and a niece of Justice Brewer of the Supreme Court. Rev. G. E. White and wife are at Marsovan. On the very day that the slaughter took place there special prayer was being offered at Grinnell for the safety of the missionaries. The mob moved up close to the college buildings as if to destroy them, but withdrew without injuring the Americans. Was not this a special answer of prayer? Miss Ida Mellinger, who has been carrying on her work in the midst of those heartrending scenes, is a member of the Endeavor Society of the Osage church. Just at the middle of every consecration meeting she is made the object of prayer, and this part of the meeting is particularly touching.

Iowa never saw such a crop as at the last harvest. The granaries are full and overflowing. Yet with potatoes selling at ten cents a bushel and less, oats at fifteen and corn at eighteen, farmers feel their compensation is small. In a few sections farmers are using corn as fuel. Corn may be had at $4.50 a ton, while hard coal costs about twice that amount. Careful experiments prove that corn is the cheaper fuel and it is certainly more pleasant to handle. A man in one of the southern counties has experimented two years in succession in raising coffee. He is satisfied that it can be raised in that latitude. Is it not possible that this will be added to our varied industries?

Even though popular enthusiasm should demand the nomination of Reed or McKinley almost by acclamation at the next national Republican convention, Senator W. B. Allison of this State will go into the convention with a large following. He entered Congress the same day with Garfield and Blaine and has been in public life ever since. He has been a hard-working, conservative member, has wielded a wide influence in public affairs and has antagonized few men. Many feel that the time has come when the great West beyond the Mississippi should be recognized by a presidential candidate. W. W. G.

HOW THE CHURCH DEBT WAS RAISED.

South Norwalk is a thriving little city of about 10,000 inhabitants and is a fair specimen of a progressive New England community. It is a main station on the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, which is intersected there by the Housatonic. There are several factories of moderate size, a public library, trolley cars, electric lights and other modern improvements and four churches, representing the Congregational, Methodist, Episcopal and Baptist denominations. There are smaller mission chapels and schools, but the larger buildings named afford more room than is well filled by worshipers in the regular Sunday services.

Sixty years ago, when South Norwalk was a mere hamlet, a little band of devout men and women took letters from the Old Church in Norwalk town and with real self-sacrifice founded the Congregational Church of South Norwalk, and in due time erected a meeting house suitable for the environment of that day. The other denominations gradually gathered and soon built creditable edifices, and up to war times religious influences were dominant. In the larger growth of population since the "sixties," the operative classes have not contributed extensively to the churches, and hence these have seemed for the later years less influential in the growing city.

In 1889 the original building, which twenty years before had been enlarged, was supplanted by a large modern edifice, well situated as to place and adapted to effective Christian work. The cost was about $82,000, and the society had in cash resources enough to leave an indebtedness of $60,000 on the whole property. Spasmodic efforts to reduce this were made in 1891, 1892 and 1894, but after all a balance of $30,000 remained. There were something more than 400 members when, in 1892, Rev. G. H. Beard was here called to his first pastorate.

At the outset the pastor felt hampered by the financial condition, and a year ago thought out a plan for the removal of the debt which he submitted last spring to the deacons and society's committee, asking their hearty approval and cordial support with a free chance to practically work out the scheme. They earnestly favored the project, but it was thought best to leave the launching of the enterprise until after the summer vacation. Accordingly, when he resumed his pulpit, he began presenting to the people in the most practical and forceful way the matter of Christian stewardship in the possession and use of property.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, SOUTH NORWALK.

On the first Sunday in October, the third anniversary of his pastorate, without previous public announcement, he submitted the whole matter to his people, reciting the baneful influences he could trace to the continuance of the indebtedness, suggesting the practical plan which had been approved by the officials and which was now ready to be presented to the people. It provided for the payment of the debt within five years by regular quarterly payments. It was stated that $35,000 would be required to do this. A pledge was to be offered to each member of the church and congregation having an income as follows:

In order to help in the payment of the debt of the South Norwalk Congregational Church Society, with interest on the same due and to become due within five years from January 1st, 1896, (in all about $35,000),

I promise to pay to the treasurer of said society, during those five years, in twenty quarterly payments of.....

dollars ($.....) each; the first payment being due on or before January 1st, 1896, and one in each successive April, July, October and January until the whole twenty are paid, provided:—

1st, That the whole amount of the said debt be subscribed before January 1st, 1896, and 2nd, That my annual income does not, during the time named, materially and unexpectedly decrease.

Date.....1895.

Impressing upon the members of his flock their personal responsibility in this matter, he announced that he himself would contribute $1,000 to the result, and that he proposed to take upon his own shoulders the burden of visiting every member of the parish to receive such subscription as, after conscientious deliberation, might seem to be individual duty. Throughout there was not the slightest appeal to mere emotion, nor any trace of a sensational device. The whole matter was laid upon the Christian conscience of the men and women providentially called to meet this exigency.

Although relief was offered the pastor in the way of pulpit supplies while this flood of detail work was going on, he did not call for any such help, but occupied the pulpit himself. In the meantime a "department of debt" was thoroughly organized in the parsonage. A list of names had been carefully prepared and the whole territory districted for visitation. A vast amount of correspondence was necessitated, and in all this work the pastor's wife pulled the second oar with unflagging diligence. On the Saturday before the seventh Sunday following the initial announcement the members of the parish received postals inviting them to attend service the next morning to hear a report of progress in financial matters. It was quite generally considered that the time was inopportune. There was much question as to financial ability and willingness, and perhaps little general faith in the success of the effort. One prominent member of the congregation did not hesitate to declare that the pastor was pursuing a phantom. It was noticed, however, that the morning hymns, the Scripture reading and the prayer had no dismal tone, but the moment came for the introduction of the sermon without any other hint as to whether the message was to bring news of failure or success. After quietly reciting the need and method of the efforts of the intervening weeks, the pastor began to announce the result in written pledges received by him and held in confidence. Hence no names were mentioned, but only amounts. The first item, one contribution of $5, did not seem very promising. Twenty payments of twenty-five cents each at intervals of three months was almost a laughable attempt at canceling the $35,000 in view, but the speaker went steadily on with his story, climbing through pledges of $10, $15, $20, $25, $30, $50, $60, $75, $100, $125, $150, $200, $250, $300, $500, $1,000, $1,250, $1,500 until a single item of $3,000 completed the list and he announced the footing as reaching $35,075.

The reader can easily imagine how the congregation came steadily up to this unexpected climax, and what a thrill of sentiment passed through the house when the pastor paused and invited the congregation to rise and swell the hymn, All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name. When the audience were again seated, and the speaker prepared to go on again with his discourse, he was interrupted by the senior deacon of the church, who from his pew called the members of the parish to witness that on the human side they were directly indebted to the wisdom, determination and unceasing application of the pastor for the result which had just been announced, and invited them to an expression of their appreciation of this surprising achievement by rising. This was fittingly and modestly responded to by the pastor in behalf of himself, but he seized the chance to pay a most manly and charming tribute to the influence and efficiency of his wife in forwarding the whole movement. So gracefully was this done that, when he had finished, the audience broke into an outburst of applause that seemed in that hour and place entirely reverrent and appropriate. There is no doubt in the minds of the church that the entire amount pledged will be duly paid and the debt thus be steadily dissipated.

This whole movement seems worthy of public record as a presentation of the right way of meeting such difficulties by the Christian church. It simply called for conscientious and businesslike application of the means of the congregation in this crisis of need. It is understood that not a single person who was not a regular attendant upon the services of this church was approached for a contribution. A few of the well-to-do people refused a helping hand, but more than 170 pledges were received, which shows how general the response has been. The individual subscriptions are not to be made public. A special treasurer has been designated to receive the quarterly payments as they mature, and all these matters will be confidential.

Christian men and women can review the achievement and feel that in it "wisdom is justified of her children," and that the church of Christ has thus offered an example of Christian business methods which will stand the criticism of the world. FRANK A. FERRIS.

CLUBS.

PA.—The club of Pittsburg and vicinity cele- rated Forefathers' night with a well-attended anquet and an address by Rev. Smith Baker, D. D., f East Boston on The Pilgrim Ideal.

NEW ENGLAND.

Massachusetts.

CAMBRIDGE.—Wood Memorial. Last Monday ight, while a large Bible class was engaged in tudy, fire was discovered in the auditorium. It was vidently the work of an incendiary. The loss is bout $1,000.

MALDEN.—Maplewood. The church has just losed a prosperous year. A gratifying increase in he income of the church has made payment of all ills easy, including the purchase of an excellent ipe organ, and the year closes with a balance in he treasury. This month a payment will be made n the church debt, which is now in a position to e entirely wiped out in the near future. Addi- ions, numbering fifty-two in all, have been re- eived at every communion and mostly on confes- ion. The spirit of earnestness pervades all de- artments of the work, and conversions are veekly looked for, through the winter months specially.

LOWELL.—The Week of Prayer was observed by he various churches, mostly with services in their espective houses of worship, and by John Street in onnection with the neighboring Baptist and Meth- dist churches, all of which will continue the meet- ngs throughout the month under the leadership of Evangelist G. C. Needham.——Pawtucket reports ineteen additions last year. The building fund mounts to $13,667, to be increased to $20,000.—— John Street reports fifteen additions, a gain of five nembers for the year, and a notable increase in be- nevolent gifts. The annual collection for the A. B. C. F. M. was $74, the largest collection for this pur- ose since 1886 and in noteworthy contrast with the ollection of $9.62 only three years ago. The home nissionary collection, $109, is the largest single col- ection on record at this church.

METHUEN.—First. The 167th annual meeting rought out about 150 persons. The various reports howed a flourishing condition. The benevolences vere largely in excess of those for several years ast.

DRACUT.—First observed the Week of Prayer by a series of cottage meetings held in different parts of the village. A good degree of interest was manifested.

TAUNTON.—West. This church, which is one of the seven in the State dating back to 1637, has just held its first annual church meeting. The features were a roll-call, reports from all departments and an address by Dr. S. H. Emery. Rev. Charles Clark, the pastor, is accomplishing a strong work for the church.

WORCESTER.—About half of the churches observed the Week of Prayer with special services. ——Pilgrim introduced a new feature by having the heads of departments conduct the services on successive evenings.——Old South. Additions for the year number seventy, thirty on confession, the present membership being 852. The benevolences were $2,150. The Sunday school membership is 734, with an average attendance of 432. Two thirds of the church additions on confession were from the Sunday school. The finances are in excellent condition.——Piedmont. The additions on confession last year were sixteen, a total of thirty-nine, and the present membership is 753.——Salem Street. This church, which has suffered some reverses in past years, makes a happy showing with finances in a better condition than a year ago. The pastor, Rev. S. A. Harlow, is doing excellent and acceptable work. The present membership is 409.——Hope. Last year additions were sixteen, on confession twelve, making the present membership 167. The benevolences were $233 The church was organized in 1889 with eleven members. Its work has been more than ordinarily successful, making most of its gains on confession. The Sunday school enrolls 316 members, with an average attendance of 172. After the reports were read the church raised $556 on its debt and voted to assume self-support.—— William T. Merrifield, the oldest and one of the most successful of Worcester's manufacturers and for many years a member of the Union Church, died Dec. 27. In his will he bequeathes to the American Board $2,000, to the C. H. M. S. $2,000 and to the Y. W. C. A. $1,000, besides other bequests. Mr. Merrifield recently gave $2,000 for the new Union Church edifice.

SPENCER.—First. The past year, under the lead of Rev. S. W. Brown, has been prosperous. Fifty-nine persons have come into fellowship, fifty on confession. The benevolences were $4,007. One of the members has begun her labors as a missionary in China and two others are preparing for the ministry. The Week of Prayer was observed by union services with the other evangelical churches in preparation for the work of Evangelist A. J. White, who began his labors here Jan. 14. A spirit of deep earnestness pervades the people.

PALMER.—Second. The additions last year were twenty-four. The membership is 216. The absentee list has been reduced by a special effort. The benevolences amounted to $1,135. The Men's Sunday Evening Club continues its work with increasing success.

LEICESTER.—First. By the Week of Prayer and cottage meetings quite an interest has been aroused. The Men's Sunday Evening League of this church is in a flourishing condition, there having of late been a large increase in the membership.

WARE.—East. The annual reports are concisely arranged in a neat pamphlet form and show a full list of the many organizations. The additions number seventeen, making the total of members 457. The total benevolences amount to $4,050.

EAST NORTHFIELD.—Dr. C. I. Scofield, late of Dallas, Tex., began his pastorate the first Sunday of January. After a few remarks to the congregation in thanks for the hearty good will shown him during his stay here last May, which influenced him largely to accept the pastorate, he gave suggestion for the work for the year. The church has been without a pastor for over eighteen months, and Dr. Scofield's coming has awakened great interest and enthusiasm. The people are unanimous in support of him.——The Training School began its second term on Thursday, Jan. 2. Northfield Seminary and Mt. Hermon School reassembled on Jan. 7.

SPRINGFIELD.—Hope. Since Rev. R. W. Brokaw came to this church over seven years ago there has not been a communion without additions to the church. The pastor's cabinet is composed of the six deacons, two lay members and the heads of the departments in church work. They meet to discuss and plan for the interest of the church in place of the standing committtee as formerly. The Sunday school is now well organized with a membership of over 700.

AMHERST.—North. The annual dinner was attended by 215 persons. Rev. E. W. Gaylord, the pastor, and others gave addresses. The present membership is 253. The total benevolences amounted to $1,278.

NORTHAMPTON.—First. Of last year's appropriation about $5,132 have been spent. A good amount, $225, remains over for this year.

EASTHAMPTON.—First. The year has closed with all debts provided for and a balance remaining. Appropriations amounted to $2,700.

SOUTH HADLEY.—The total receipts last year for missions were $650. Thirteen new members were added, making the membership 290.

PITTSFIELD.—First. The affairs of the church were reported at the annual meeting as in a prosperous condition. C. E. work and the young men's Sunday evening committee were specially commented upon as growing departments. The total membership is 534, including thirty-seven additions, nineteen on confession. The amount paid on pledges was $1,995.

DALTON.—First. At the annual roll-call 194 persons responded. The additions number sixteen. The benevolences, $2,253, are an increase of $300 over last year. Rev. G. W. Andrews, the pastor, gave the review of the year. The C. E. Society has raised $307 and the Sunday school, $650. The women's society has distributed $500 worth of clothing.

GREENFIELD.—Second. The total membership is now 300, twenty-one persons having been added last year, eight on confession.

LUDLOW.—First. About two-thirds of the membership was present at the annual gathering. Missionary causes have received $253 from the church. The Sunday school progresses well.

WHATELEY.—The oldest male member of the church provided the turkeys for the annual dinner, at which 100 members were present. The additions last year numbered fifteen. The benevolences were $289.

WILLIAMSTOWN —The church has recently given $100 to the debt of the American Board.

Maine.

BANGOR.—Central. The annual review shows the present membership to be 301 and contributions of the year $1,948. A new creed of a broader character was adopted. Remarks helpful to the plans of the coming year were made by several members and the pastor, Rev. J. S. Penman.——Mr. H. H. Fogg of the First Church celebrated the new year by gifts amounting to $5,000, $1,000 each to local charities and $2,000 to Bangor Seminary. Mr. Fogg has given about $100,000 within a few years in benevolent and educational work.

PHILLIPS.—This little church has had much prosperity the last two years since it assumed self-support. It uses the envelope system and contributes to all the branches of denominational benevolence. The women raised $100 of the pastor's salary and more has been given in benevolence than ever before.

SCARBORO.—The vestry, soon to be finished, provides a convenient room for the Sunday school and prayer meetings, also an infant classroom and kitchen. The envelope system has been adopted, the money to be sent mostly to the six societies.

LEWISTON.—The Pastors' Union of Lewiston and Auburn has sent a letter to all the churches in the two cities in regard to the saloon, social evil and gambling.

WARREN.—Rev. J. L. De Mott, who has just closed his work here, has been pastor two years. During that time there have been twenty-three additions to the membership, which now numbers 164.

Since the dedication of the new meeting house in Houlton, over $1,000 have been raised and applied to the debt.

New Hampshire.

BENNINGTON.—With a balance in the treasury and a promising degree of spiritual interest the new year begins hopefully. For the second time the church has sent a generous contribution as a token of sympathy to Rev. F. C. Libby, the pastor-elect, who is still confined to his bed in Gorham, N. H., with little if any signs of improvement. His sickness covers a period of nine months or more, during which he has been a great sufferer. The C. E. Society has lately raised $10 for the suffering Armenians.

CONCORD.—First. The various organizations have accomplished much the past year. The benevolences were $1,872 and the collections of the Sunday school $248. The school has a membership of 378 and the C. E. Societies have a total membership of 180. R. E. Burleigh of New York has been appointed secretary of the branch of the Y. M. C. A.

for railroad men and is expected to enter on his duties by the middle of January.

GILSUM.—At the roll-call seventy-two persons were present. During 1895 twenty-four persons united with the church, eighteen on confession. At the January communion four were received, three on confession. The pastor, Rev. J. S. Gove, and his wife were pleasantly remembered at Christmas.

EAST ALSTEAD.—Out of a church membership of only twenty-five, twenty two were present at the communion, Jan. 5. The congregation has averaged the past year forty-three in the morning and twenty-four in the evening. The total benevolences have been $56.

FRANCONIA.—The pastor, Rev. A. H. Armes, preached his farewell sermon Jan. 5 and goes to Warner. The church and community sustain a great loss in his departure. While here he has always been at the front in the promotion of good work.

LITTLETON.—The recent accession of nineteen new members, sixteen on confession, was the result of no extra meetings, but of careful, personal effort on the part of pastor and members.

BARNSTEAD.—First. The new meeting house is nearly completed, and though not large it is comfortable and convenient. Rev. L. E. Bell is pastor.

EPSOM.—Short Falls. Seven persons were received to the church Jan. 5, four on confession. A quiet but deepening religious interest prevails, and all meetings are well sustained. The C. E. Society takes a leading part and the field is generally encouraging.

LISBON.—The "Dorcas" Society has adopted the every-day-dollar plan and has already netted $186, which will be used for repairs on the parsonage.

NASHUA.—First. By the will of the late Mrs. M. H. Vose the charitable society of the church receives $500 and the New Hampshire H. M. S. $200.

ALTON.—The reunion and roll-call was largely attended and proved a profitable occasion. The five organizations in the church reported $1,320 raised during the year, the largest amount in the history of the church.

CHESTER.—The benevolent contributions of the past year amounted to about $377, besides two barrels of supplies sent to needy missionaries.

HILLSBORO BRIDGE.—For the improvement of the church edifice Mrs. Shedd has offered $50 on condition that the young people raise an equal sum. The increasing attendance at Sunday school is encouraging.

Vermont.

ST. JOHNSBURY.—North. The church has received two bequests the last year the income of which provides for the poor of the church and for repairing the exterior of the edifice. There were twenty-five additions last year, making the present enrollment of members 430.

MIDDLETOWN SPRINGS.—This church is flourishing, and the membership was never larger. The morning congregations and the benevolences are the largest in the history of the church.

PITTSFORD.—The additions last year numbered fifteen and the benevolences were $762. About $1,500 were spent last year in repairs on the meeting house.

BARRE.—There was a large attendance at the annual roll-call. Twenty-five new members last year have made the membership 410.

MANCHESTER.—The church contributed $775 for missionary purposes last year besides private benefactions. Rev. G. T. Smart is the pastor.

Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE.—Central. The old meeting house, which has been for sale for a long time, is now purchased for the proposed purpose of transforming it into a theater.

Connecticut.

HARTFORD.—South. The thirty-sixth anniversary of Dr. E. P. Parker's installation was celebrated last Saturday evening. The arrangements were in the hands of the Young Women's and Men's Unions. In prettily decorated parlors a large number of persons gathered. Dr. Parker's service in the city is the longest of any pastor here.——The State Law and Order League has sent out a formal statement of its standing and work. It is particularly interesting on account of the stand taken by the Hartford clergymen at the General Conference. Since its organization it has secured the conviction of 416 violators of the law and caused the payment of more than $40,000 in fines and costs.

EAST HARTFORD.—First. The annual gathering was one of the most interesting for years. A proposition was made to observe the 200th anniversary, and though the exact date of organization is not known an effort will be made to ascertain it. The additions last year numbered fourteen. The total membership is 307. The entire receipts from all sources were $2,941.

NORWALK.—First. In spite of the hard times the year has been a prosperous one. In every department good work has been done and the benevolent offerings of the church have amounted to more than $3,000. At every communion at which the pastor has officiated in the six years he has welcomed new members. The present membership is 530. The women recently gave a delightful reception to the pastor, Rev. T. K. Noble, and wife, in commemoration of the sixth anniversary of his pastorate.

EAST WINDSOR.—First. Rev. W. F. English, pastor, devoted a day to its annual meeting and dinner. The increase in the Sunday morning congregations and in the missionary offerings of the last three years has been maintained and increased during the past year, and the amount of the latter is the largest for many years, if not in the history of the church.

NEW HAVEN.—Redeemer. At the recent annual meeting the benevolences for the year were reported as $11,147, besides $2,382 for the support of the Welcome Hall Mission, which is under the charge of Mr. F. B. Harrison, the assistant pastor. The present church membership is 534. Dr. W. L. Phillips is pastor.

NEW CANAAN.—Out of a Sunday school numbering less than 300, thirty scholars have been present every session during the past year, one living five miles from church and having to walk ten miles every Sunday. Sixteen others were absent but one Sunday. There have been additions to the church at every communion during the year. Rev. J. H. Hoyt is pastor.

WATERBURY.—Second. Last year a new edifice was dedicated and occupied for the first time, the annual meeting of the General Conference was held here, and other events of import took place. The year as a whole was full of success. To the membership were added twenty-six on confession and thirty-five by letter. The present membership is 956.

GLASTONBURY.—Second. Ten persons have united with the church within a few months, nearly all on confession. The C. E. Society has been reorganized and is in a prosperous condition. The Sunday school has nearly doubled in numbers and a children's and a home department have been added. Rev. F. A. Holden is pastor.

NEW PRESTON.—The society's finances are in better shape than for years before, there being now no debt. Besides his salary $50 were voted Rev. Evan Evans. Steps have been taken toward incorporation. The recent bequest of $300 by the late Mrs. Sarah C. Selden was conditioned on this move.

SOUTH BRITAIN.—The church and community suffer severe loss in the death of Deacon G. A. Hoyt. He was a friend to all and his life will continue to be an inspiration to those who knew him.

NEWTOWN.—The annual reports of the society show receipts for the year of $1,454, a little more than the expenses. At the church meeting a series of papers and addresses was given. The benevolences amounted to $191.

KENT.—The membership is reported as 164, of which number 107 responded to the roll-call. A special collection of $25 was taken up for printing a new manual, to contain a complete history of the church.

WOODBURY.—At the annual meeting there was a large attendance. One response to the roll was an historical hymn. This church is one of the oldest in the State, having been organized 226 years ago. Rev. J. A. Freeman is pastor.

NORTH WOODSTOCK.—It has been voted to do away with the church tax and take up a collection each communion Sunday to defray the incidental running expenses of the church.

BETHLEHEM.—The annual meeting was better attended than for many years. The benevolences amount to over $300 for last year. It was voted that the collection the first Sunday in the month be for parish expenses.

HUNTINGTON.—Mrs. Emeline Allen, whose death occurred at Wells Hollow recently, was a member of this church for fifty-three years and always took an active part in the services.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

PATCHOGUE.—The annual meeting finds the church in excellent condition. After all expenses were paid there were sufficient funds to reduce the debt by $1,500, making a total of $32,000 paid on the new edifice, together with $12,000 paid for running expenses, during the five years' pastorate of Rev. A. E. Colton. During this time 160 persons have joined the church, the gain this year being twenty-five. The total membership is now 377. There is marked spiritual interest and a revival is expected this winter. The last week of the year an art loan exhibition of 1,500 articles was held. Long Island is full of relics and many of the labels bore dates previous to 1700, and two articles, a plate and a basket, bore the words, "These came over in the Mayflower." Their record is true. Indeed, Long Island was settled by Mayflower people, and as few have moved in and still less moved away, the stock is pure.

WEST WINFIELD.—The past year has been one of blessing to this church. Forty-two persons were added to the membership, thirty-six on confession. This makes the membership 178, a net gain of thirty-six. There was also an advance in the benevolences, every society being remembered. The Sunday school has grown from an enrollment of 133 and an average of seventy at the beginning of the present pastorate, six years ago, to an enrollment of 255, with an average of 146. Rev. E. H. Burt is pastor.

UNION CENTER.—The Junior Endeavor Society of this church is especially active. The children have just finished two beautiful quilts, which have been given to the needy. In other ways the missionary spirit is being cultivated. The various branches of church work have been greatly blessed. Rev. A. S. Wood, under whose charge this branch of the Lord's vineyard has been for the past four years, has been of great help to this place and his services have been blessed in many ways.

EAST ROCKAWAY.—Bethany. The work opens encouragingly for the new year. Seventeen persons have united with the church since last March. Both senior and junior Endeavor Societies are working actively. The Sunday school is in a healthy condition. The pastor, Rev. T. S. Braithwaite, recently received a purse of money from his friends and parishioners.

FRANKLIN.—Rev. John Marsland has entered upon the second year of his pastorate. During his service the edifice has been remodeled at an expense of $1,800, twenty-three new members have been received and the benevolences are larger than ever before.

ITHACA.—Inherited financial deficiencies, accumulated for several years, have all been paid up recently, and an equally satisfactory spiritual showing is indicated by the addition during the year of forty members, fourteen on confession. The evening congregation taxes the capacity of the auditorium, and Dr. W. E. Griffis's desire for a well-attended second service is consequently gratified.

New Jersey.

PARK RIDGE.—Ten additions have been received the past year. Though a small church in a small community this body is progressive on the side of practical activities. The pastor, Rev. Charles Helliwell, tries to make it the social center around which the life of the village should move. The Boys' Flute and Drum Corps, organized in the early part of last year and made up chiefly of boys from the Sunday school, continues to do well. Recently the boys, with the assistance of the women, gave a skating party, which was concluded with a supper in the church. This was so successful that the young ladies have taken up the idea and the King's Daughters have issued invitations for a similar party.

ORANGE.—The Orange Valley church continues to prosper, eighteen persons having been added to its membership the past year. It numbers now nearly 300 members, while the Sunday school enrolls about 250. The Y. P. S. C. E. has appointed a good literature committee, which is to serve as a bureau of exchange for papers and magazines, especially those which are suitable for Sunday reading. The congregation is invited to bring to church, for the use of this committee, religious periodicals that have been read.

ELIZABETH.—While the members dismissed from this church during the year past are as many as those received and the enrollment of the Sunday school and the C. E. Societies has been cut down by revision of the roll, the church has shown a spirit of vigor by an increase in its beneficence by $300 paid on its debt and $200 put into improvements.

VINELAND.—This church has just been cheered by receiving into its communion eleven members on confession. Of these eight were young people from the Sunday school and associate members of the Endeavor Society and all of them were baptized. It is expected that still others will come at the next communion.

COLUMBUS.—First. The reports show additions ring the year of thirty-three and a total member- ip of 955. The current expenses were $6,838 and nevolences $7,663, more by nearly $2,000 than last ar. There are two flourishing Sunday schools ich meet in the morning and afternoon.——The Clair Avenue school has outgrown its building d an enlargement is almost imperative. Rev. F. Harris is the pastor.

KENT.—The annual meeting was unusually well tended. The financial outlook is more encourag- g than for many years. Expenses for the year e all pledged, though there is still a debt of $1,200. v. M. P. Jones is in the third year of his pastor- e and members have been received at every com- nion but one. There are now 178 members. ly two of the fifteen dismissed by letter last year nt to Congregational churches.

GARRETTSVILLE.—At the annual meeting eighty- o of the 207 members answered to roll-call. There re fifteen additions last year. Over $1,300 were ised for all purposes. The meeting was in every spect satisfactory and harmonious. Rev. G. R. rry, who has been pastor six months, has the arty co-operation of the members and is proving e right man for the place.

BRECKSVILLE.—The church is holding a week of ighborhood prayer meetings in preparation for e coming of Rev. C. W. Carroll of Cleveland, who ll assist the pastor, Rev. W. C. Rogers, in a series special services.

PAINESVILLE.—Union. The pastor, Rev. Byron nner, held two weeks' special meetings in De- mber, and as a result, Jan. 5, twenty-five were ceived to membership, all but two on confession.

OBERLIN.—First. Last year there were 119 additions, sixty one on confession. The Ladies' Aid Society raised $600, besides a special collection of $450 to the American Board.

HUDSON.—The church has just closed a prosperous year. Thirty-four persons were added to the membership, which is now 354. The benevolent contributions were over $800. The roll-call and covenant meeting was well attended, and among those who sent responses were two missionaries in India.

ROOTSTOWN.—The annual church meeting was more of a success than at any previous time. The roll-call was responded to by about 160 members.

Illinois.

CHICAGO.—First. The completion of Dr. E. P. Goodwin's twenty-eighth year as pastor was celebrated by a reception, which also commemorated thirty years' service of the church visitor, Mrs. Sophia Orton. Valuable testimonials of esteem were given these faithful workers. ——Austin. Good success has attended the labors of the past year. All debts are paid without exhausting the treasury, and several new societies have been formed. Nearly half the additions were on confession, and they have increased the membership by over two-thirds. A debt of $3,800 is provided for. Rev. Thomas Westerdale is pastor.——Mayflower. Interior improvements in the meeting house have been completed during the year. The additions number sixty.——Oak Park. Unusual prosperity was felt last year, as shown by 110 additions, making the membership 808. The estimated financial need of the coming year is already provided for by subscriptions. Pews are assigned by lot and are all taken. Large congregations and Sunday school attendance is encouraging.——University. Nineteen organizations reported at the annual meeting. Although the building of a new house of worship has been undertaken, the current expenses up to Dec. 1 were all met ——Duncan Avenue. During Rev. G H. Grannis's four years' pastorate this formerly small mission church has grown to a self-supporting church with a membership three times as great.——Leavitt Street. Last year there were forty four additions, seventeen on confession. At the branch there were sixty, of whom thirty-two were on confession. The receipts, $7,343, more than covered the disbursements.

West Pullman. The new edifice was dedicated Dec. 15. The church was organized by the City Missionary Society, assisted by its present pastor, Rev. R. A. Hadden, in 1894. Since its organization there have been over 140 additions, nearly one-half being adults. The present building and property is worth about $7,500, with only a small debt. The work is institutional in character and has as departments a gymnasium, baths and a reading-room for the young men employed in the factories. A special effort is made to reach young men and an evangelistic service is held every Sunday evening of the year. These efforts have resulted in the conversion of scores and the uplifting of hundreds who are not members. At the last communion twelve persons were added to the church, seven being men.

JOY PRAIRIE.—Every family was represented at the annual meeting, and but ten individuals of the entire congregation were absent. All the bills of the church are paid and there is no deficit to be made up. Reports were all full and encouraging. The total benevolences amounted to over $1,200. A special offering of over $700 was made during the year to the American Board. Home expenses were over $1,100. The Sunday school has adopted the plan of quarterly written examinations. Of the twenty questions proposed at the last test, five scholars answered all correctly. A reading circle meets weekly to study the different countries of the world. The resident members number less than sixty. Rev. H. M. Tupper is pastor.

ROCKFORD.—First. In the death of Deacon S. F. Penfield the church loses the fourth deacon in nine months, all by death. But in spite of losses the church closes the year in excellent condition, its additions having been thirty-one and its benevolences to the denominational societies larger than ever. After meeting all past financial obligations there is a surplus in the treasury.

SPRINGFIELD.— Plymouth. The annual review shows a more encouraging condition than ever existed here before. In every department there is good spirit and effort.

PRINCETON.—Reports show an increase in benevolences of forty-five per cent. A convenient parsonage was completed last year costing $3,500. In various lines prosperity is noted.

Indiana.

INDIANAPOLIS.—Mayflower, Rev. J. W. Wilson, pastor, at its annual meeting finds itself a united and harmonious organization. The church has planted itself during the year in a new and better location. There are 193 members, of which sixteen were received. About $5,700 were raised for home expenses, including a floating indebtedness on the new building and $462 for benevolences. The Ladies' Aid Society has paid to the church treasury the last three years $1,650. This church is broadening its work and influence.

ANDREWS.—The work is in a promising condition. Unusually large congregations have attended Mr. Mackay's preaching since he came. The church lost twenty-two families from its membership and congregation in the Debs strike, which affected the place as a division point of the Wabash Railway. The new population which has come in is being gradually drawn toward the church. Mr. Mackay's musical abilities serve him in good stead, and a large outside subscription is being raised for his support.

ANGOLA.—Rev. J. T. Robert is meeting with a good degree of prosperity, and the church in all of its departments is in excellent condition. The congregation is greatly increased by the presence of many young people who gather in the town to attend the Tri-States Normal College. Several of the teachers are actively connected with the church work. The pastor and his family are well adapted to the spiritual and social leadership of the work.

THE WEST.

Iowa.

DUBUQUE.—Summit. The annual meeting was held Jan. 7. The reports showed that all branches of the work have been pushed with vigor. There are now three Sunday schools under its care with an enrollment of nearly 600, which is among the largest, if not the largest, in the State. The Y. P. S. C. E. has never worked better than during the past year. The recent revival began in the Endeavor Society before the special meetings opened. There are two women's organizations and two among the boys. During 1895 the increase in membership has been 105, and the church enters upon the new year full of hope.

KNOXVILLE.—This little enterprise, organized about two years ago with eleven members, had little to start with except faith and a purpose to do good. Last spring it was determined to build a house of worship, and Nov. 19 a neat edifice was dedicated, a sufficient amount being pledged at the time to free the church of debt. The Sunday school is alive with interest, the church now numbers between seventy and eighty persons, and the new year opens with bright prospects. Mr. G. W. Baxter is pastor.

IOWA CITY.—During the past year there were forty five additions to the membership; thirty-one were on confession. There were raised for the missionary societies over $500, besides money for other benevolences. The total expenditures were $3,297. At a recent fair the women cleared over $130. Rev. M. A. Bullock has been pastor for nearly eight years.

GRINNELL.—During the year there were sixty-nine additions to the membership, of which nineteen were on confession, making the total at the beginning of the year 915. The home expenditures for the year were $4,737 and the amount raised for benevolences $3,734, of which $1,557 was for foreign missions.

CHESTER CENTER.—Special meetings have been held, conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. K. Shultz. They were largely attended and considerable interest was manifested. Nine persons were admitted to the church Jan. 5, six on confession.

OGDEN.—The women netted about $50 at a recent birthday party. The C. E. Society is taking on new life and the result is a larger attendance of young men than ever before at the evening services.

CORRECTIONVILLE.—Special meetings are now being held in which the pastor, Rev. J. B. Chase, is being assisted by Evangelist C. W. Merrill. There were forty-one additions to the membership during the last year.

OTTUMWA.—South. Rev. J. R. Beard closes his first year of labor on this field. It has been one of marked activity and great prosperity. A series of special meetings is now in progress.

SHELL ROCK.—The parsonage has recently been newly papered and improved in other ways at a cost of $50. A barn has also been added to the property.

ORCHARD AND NILES.—The work goes on encouragingly in these fields. At the former point a series of special meetings commenced with the Week of Prayer.

Rev. G. M. D. Slocum of the Pilgrim Church, Muscatine, is being assisted by Evangelist Packard in a series of special meetings.——During the past quarter seventeen persons joined the church in Runnells, eleven on confession.——Rev. B. L. Webber is being assisted by Evangelist Tillett in a series of special meetings at Aurelia.——There were eighty-one additions to the membership of the First Church, Ottumwa, during the year, seventy-two of them on confession.——Funds are being raised for a new house of worship in Hampton.——As a result of a rousing sermon by the pastor of the Manchester church in favor of a new building canvassers are now at work.

Minnesota.

ST. PAUL.—German People's. A fine church building worth, with lots, about $4,000 was dedicated Jan. 5 with a sermon by Dr. M. E. Eversz and addresses by Dr. S. G. Smith and others. The movement was started five years ago by Dr. Smith with the hearty co-operation of the Home Missionary Society, was organized first as a branch of People's Church and recently as an independent organization recognized by council. The new building has a pastor's study, parlors and kitchen, and includes the little chapel in which the movement started. Nearly $400 were raised and at the Ministers' Meeting the next day arrangements were made to raise $300 more, which, with the help of the Church Building Society, will pay all bills.

MINNEAPOLIS.—Lyndale unites with seven churches in the eighth ward in evangelistic meetings, commencing with the Week of Prayer.——First unites with Como Avenue and two churches of other denominations in revival services which open with much promise.——Open Door joins with the various churches of the vicinity in union meetings, which have been held for three weeks with some conversions and much increase of spiritual life.——Other churches, especially Vine, are observing the week, some conversions resulting.——The Ministers' Meeting was devoted to prayer for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Dr. Wells was present for the last time and is now at Dover, Ill.

HIBBING.—A young man from the Moody Institute, Mr. A. A. Wickham, has been sent here by the Home Missionary Society. In a town of 2,500 people there is no church and no resident minister. The student secured the schoolhouse. The Week of Prayer is being observed and plans laid for getting a house of worship.

FARIBAULT.—The annual meeting was held Jan. 9. Forty-five members have been received during the year. The benevolences were $1,275 and home expenditures $2,900. The membership is now 354. The Sunday school, with an enrollment of 381, is one of the largest in the State and is full of enthusiasm and power.

NEW RICHLAND.—For the first time a resident pastor is upon the field. Work has been commenced at Otisco, where a church organization is expected, and at one other point. The pastor by faithful visiting of every family in town has drawn some newcomers to church.

STEWARTVILLE.—Four new members, the reorganization of the C. E. Society, a vote to contribute to every one of the Congregational societies, the disappearance of some divisions and the disciplining of disorderly members are hopeful signs.

MORRIS.—A monthly paper, Our Outlook, is published. The C. E. Society supplies the barber's shops and other places with good literature. A new organ has been ordered.

PARK RAPIDS.—The house has been renovated and new life put into the church by the coming of a new pastor.

Kansas.

TOPEKA.—The first anniversary of the Santa Fé shop religious enterprise, which is sustained by the Topeka Congregational Union, was observed Dec. 17, with talks by the employés. The testimony to the spiritual and practical benefits of the enterprise was enthusiastic and unanimous. The room, which is furnished free by the company, is open daily from twelve to one. Tables and benches are provided for the convenience of the men while eating their dinners, the best coffee is served at a small price, newspapers and magazines are on the tables at one of which fifteen men study the Bible daily while eating dinner. On Tuesdays and Fridays a short religious service is held, including a gospel address and singing, the Santa Fé Choir often assisting. From fifty to two hundred men daily avail themselves of these privileges.

SEABROOK.—The first anniversary was observed Dec. 26, when a supper was served and reports were read. This church is doing excellent work in reaching neighboring localities. Its membership has increased from seventeen to forty-five, and branch work is maintained in two districts, for which the church elects special officers. Three Sunday schools are carried on, with an average attendance of 130 and an enrollment of 300. These schools are at convenient places in a parish three by seven miles in area. The church has flourishing senior and junior C. E. Societies, has an associate pastor to work in the out-stations and gave $73 last year to benevolent objects.

SABETHA.—The new meeting house was dedicated Dec. 29. Rev. J. B. Richardson preached and Superintendent Broad assisted in raising the balance needed to pay the remaining indebtedness, which was wholly pledged. The building and new pipe organ cost nearly $5,000. This is one of the most active and benevolent churches in the State, and has a fine outlook for larger growth. Its present successful pastorate has continued nearly fifteen years.

ATWOOD.—There is rejoicing over the spiritual impulse and conversions resulting from the recent meetings of State Evangelist Veazie. Ten persons have been received to membership since the meetings closed, making a total of seventeen last year. The Sunday school has an average attendance of seventy-five, the Y. P. S. C. E. flourishes and the mid-week meeting for prayer and Bible study is well attended.

BLUE RAPIDS.—The church gathered in its building on New Year's Day for the first time for over a year. Supt. A. S. Bush preached in the morning. Refreshments were served, and in the afternoon an active conference and business meeting was held, progressive in spirit and looking to an early renewal of the regular services.

VALENCIA.—During the last eighteen months this rural church has increased its membership to forty-seven, erected a meeting house at one of its two preaching points and a parsonage at the other. The pastor has supplied two other places which have been neglected, and thus a wide area has had gospel privileges to an extent unknown before.

FREDONIA.—The church observed its twenty-fifth anniversary Dec. 10–12. Reminiscences, addresses by Rev. H. D. Herr, the present pastor, and Rev. A. M. Pipes, the former pastor, and exercises pertaining to the local church, the Pilgrims and Congregationalism were features of this interesting occasion.

LENORA.—This pastorless church was greatly blessed by recent meetings for deepening the spiritual life held by Rev. David Baines-Griffiths. It has occasional supplies and is working heartily in co-operation with any religious work in progress in the town.

STRONG CITY.—Although without a pastor since last summer, this church has maintained Sunday morning services regularly, a good Sunday school, Y. P. S. C. E. and weekly prayer meeting. The Week of Prayer will be observed by holding cottage meetings.

LONGTON.—As a result of revival services, in which Rev. G. H. Hull assisted the pastor, the church has recently received seventeen to membership. This makes a total of thirty additions within the past ten months.

STAFFORD.—State Evangelist Veazie has just closed a nine days' meeting, having had large congregations at three sessions each day. He will spend the Week of Prayer with the churches in Lawrence.

VALEDA.—A revival has resulted in thirty conversions, the reclaiming of backsliders and the awakening of new interest in religious work in the entire region. The church is much encouraged.

WICHITA.—Fairmount received seven to membership at its December communion. The faculty of Fairmount College render the church valuable service, and it is growing in power and usefulness.

GOODLAND.—The work here was much strengthened by the services in December of Evangelist Veazie, and is more of a spiritual force in the town than at any previous period in its history.

OSBORNE.—Nine persons were received to membership Dec. 29, all on confession. Unusual spiritual interest pervades the regular services.

Revivals of much promise are in progress at Almena, Neosho Falls, Smith Center and elsewhere.

Nebraska.

WEEPING WATER.—The Junior C. E. Society spent six weeks in earning money for the church debt. They worked with great enthusiasm. One little fellow eight years old sold pop corn and other things and raised $2.52 A little girl of seven brought in $2.00. Five boys cut a cord and a half of wood. It was hard work for them, but such enthusiasm all along the line was refreshing. Ten juniors graduated into the senior C. E. Society Jan. 5, and the children handed in their $40 and told how they raised it. The accessions to the church during the past year number 115.

North Dakota.

COOPERSTOWN.—The church celebrated New Year's Day with a dinner, followed by the annual meeting. Twenty new members have been added during the year. The amount raised for all purposes was $769, of which $47 were contributed to benevolent objects and $25 have been paid to the C. C. B. S. on the parsonage loan. Both meeting house and parsonage have been repaired and improved. New hymn-books have been secured, also an addition to the Sunday school library. The Ladies' Auxiliary, organized in August, raised $132 in the five months. Rev. E. S. Shaw, the pastor, began work last April. The church has renewed its call and voted to increase his salary to $1,000, including parsonage. The reports show the past year to have been the brightest in the history of the church.

MICHIGAN CITY.—Rev. U. G. Rich has received a sleigh from his people. During the summer he drove about sixty miles each Sunday and preached four times. Few missionaries have worked harder or more faithfully than he.

AMENIA.—Rev. J. J. Davy is much encouraged. Special meetings have been in progress, with good results. Superintendent Stickney recently held a Sunday school institute here.

South Dakota.

CARTHAGE.—The work under Rev. G. W. Crater and wife on this large field, which includes Esmond, Redstone and South Valley, is encouraging. The Sunday school at Carthage has had an average attendance of fifty-five during the year, while the senior and junior C. E. Societies have been a power in the church and community. At Redstone cottage meetings are now held, and much interest is manifested by the young people, several of whom have become Christians.

ABERDEEN.—The annual meeting was held Jan. 6 with a good attendance. The reports showed the church to be in a much more prosperous condition than ever before. Since the leadership of Rev. T. J. Dent began three years ago the membership has trebled. The utmost harmony exists in the church.

Superintendent Thrall has conducted a week of special meetings at Turton with good results. He was followed by General Missionary Tomlin.——Mr J. L. Blanks is supplying the South Shore, Troy and Mazeppa churches.——Mr. J. R. Beebe is supplying for a few weeks at Willow Lakes.——Rev. G. A. Conrad has resigned his work at Lake Preston and the pulpit is being supplied by Rev. R. M. Keyes of Huron ——Nearly all the churches in the State are observing the Week of Prayer.

Colorado.

COLORADO SPRINGS.—Second. The annual reports showed all bills paid, the first time in two years. The church voted to ask $100 less of the Home Missionary Society. During the year thirty persons were received to membership, seven on confession. The last installment due the Church Building Society was also paid since Jan. 1, 1895. The total disbursements amounted to $2,154, of which $144 were for benevolences. This church was organized six years ago by the present pastor, Rev. M. D. Ormes, and its field is one of the most populous sections of the city. The meeting house is paid for and a neat parsonage has been built. About 200 members have been received altogether.

Yet when working at his trade this man was id $65 per month and board. Surely the heroes e not all dead yet.

OTHER CHRISTIAN WORK.

A State Christian Citizenship League was organ- ed in South Dakota last month, Rev. C. M. Daley, uron, S. D., corresponding secretary. A. M. Has- ell, secretary of the National Christian Citizens' eague, spoke at the mass meeting. Interest is ing awakened along all lines of moral reform, d Christians of the State will unite in its effort retain constitutional prohibition.

The Evangelistic Association of New England held a successful conference recently in Newburyport, and will hold two more this month as follows: Dorchester Lower Mills, in which three churches will unite, Jan. 15–19, and Cambridgeport, Jan. 20–26, in which the five churches of ward four will unite. Prominent clergymen, business men and evangelists will be present, among them Rev. Smith Baker, D. D., Rev. C. L Jackson and W. P. Hall, Esq., of New York.

Another of the famous Florence Crittenton Homes has been opened recently in Boston, making twenty-three in all in different cities at an aggregate cost of half a million dollars. They are designed for the reclamation of girls and women who have gone astray, and take their name from a wealthy New York druggist, who contributes to their support as a memorial to a lovely little daughter who died at the age of four. The home in Boston is at 37 Court Street and is under the auspices of the Citizens' Rescue Board, of which Mr. O. E. Lewis is president. There are accommodations for sixty girls and provision for training in several forms of domestic industries.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The International Evangel begins with the January number to issue a New England edition in place of the former Massachusetts edition.

The railroads have granted a rate of a fare and a third, on the certificate plan, from all parts of the country, to those attending the International Convention in Boston in June.

A primary superintendent has earned considerable money for her department by writing hymns. She has recently composed one each for Christmas, Easter and Harvest Time and will devote the funds to the same purpose.

Boston contains 166 Evangelical Protestant Sunday schools. The Congregational denomination is credited with forty one, Baptists and Episcopalians with thirty-three each and the Methodists with thirty-two, Presbyterians and Lutherans nine each, Advent and Disciples two each and the remainder are divided among as many denominations.

A school connected with a prominent church in Boston maintains a successful teachers' meeting by assembling at six o'clock for tea, after which the time is occupied with the lesson study or business until the hour for the regular week night service. ——The Sunday schools of Boston will unite in tendering a reception to the State Executive Committee in Berkeley Temple, on Wednesday evening, Jan. 22.

A NOVEL IDEA.

Here is a clever idea of our designer—a Hall Stand made like a great chair. It is an original idea and very effectively carried out.

The mirror makes the back of the chair and the robe chest becomes the seat. The corner posts are carried up in the same style so often seen on Antique Hall Chairs.

The "shaping out" of the front legs and the sides of the chair is one of the most effective features of the design. The mirror is richly framed and the metal mountings are of a pattern which harmonizes well with the design.

Special prominence has been given to the decorative possibilities, and the frame throughout is relieved by hand carving in demi relief.

We offer this pattern at the same cost as a plain Stand.

DR. BARTON AT BROOKLINE.

The informal, but delightful and instructive, address of Secretary J. L. Barton, D. D., at the Casino in Brookline last Sunday afternoon, brought home to his hearers the actual situation of the missionary work in Japan today, as only one who had just spent three months in closest touch with the Christian teachers and leaders could present it. He alluded first to the kind reception accorded the deputation and to the numerous social courtesies extended. He was impressed particularly with the intellectual ferment in the empire, by virtue of which no single heathen religion prevails in its purity, but a peculiar combination of Shintoism, Confucianism and Buddhism is found in the faith of millions.

But the encouraging thing today is the influence which the Christians, though as yet constituting only a small fraction of the whole population—thirty-seven million of the forty-two million still being idolaters—upon the national life. No less than forty of the judges of the realm, as well as the chief justice and the vice-president of the national parliament, are Christians. The chief of the department that oversees the lighthouses of the empire is a Christian and insists on having at least one Christian man in the force at every lighthouse. During the late war the favorable disposition of some of the generals toward Christianity permitted the preaching of the gospel to thousands of soldiers and allowed Christian women like the heroic Miss Talcott to do her magnificent philanthropic and Christian work in the hospitals. Altogether it was a bright and cheering picture which Dr. Barton drew.

FROM OLIVET COLLEGE.

The new catalogue of Olivet College shows 398 students. This is one more than the enrollment of the previous year. The vacancy in the faculty, caused by the death of Prof. Joseph Estabrook a year ago, has been filled by the appointment of Rev. W. E. C. Wright. For next year the courses of study have been enriched by some additional electives.

Though Olivet is not a theological school there are always several students who are preparing for the ministry and some who have been licensed to preach and have charge of churches. Members of the faculty also are this winter supplying at least two Michigan pulpits. About seventy-five per cent. of the students are church members. They maintain the traditional Saturday night prayer meeting in the college chapel, besides special prayer meetings of some of the classes on the same evening. On Sunday evening before the preaching service there are three well attended meetings for young people—the Christian Endeavor, the Y. W. C. A. and the Y. M. C. A. A class is studying on Sunday morning foreign missions in the text-books prepared for the student volunteers.

While twenty per cent. of the graduates of Olivet have entered the ministry, thirty per cent. have become teachers. The other half are exemplifying the value of Christian education in a great variety of callings. Olivet is honored by its alumni in at least thirty States of the Union and in numerous foreign lands. W.

Dr. Archibald Duff, for years the associate of Dr. Fairbairn at Airedale College, England, and an influential Congregationalist, well known also in America, where he was educated, in a private letter begs Christian people here to do their "utmost by prayer meeting, sermon, speech, anything, to quell the quarrel spirit. For here is our Tory government holding back from deeds that might still save the lives of thousands of Armenians from being mercilessly destroyed by the sultan. The central cause of the sultan's hate for the Armenians is the education and Christian pregress they have been gaining from the missionaries of the A. B. C. F. M., the Presbyterian Board and Robert College. Why should it be just now that the two English-speaking and blood-kin people, either of them powerful enough to save Armenia, are turning from that awful scene in carelessness to draw swords or to say hard words of each other? Let the American nation rather come and help us to save Armenia. It is their land, the land they chose to enlighten."

EDUCATION.

—— Dr. D. K. Pearsons of Chicago will at once give $25,000 to Mt. Holyoke, so confident is he that the alumnæ will raise the $150,000 which he made the condition of his gift of $50,000.

—— The late Franklin Baldwin of North Grafton made Wellesley and Smith Colleges residuary legatees, the former to receive $50,000 and the latter $12,000. He also left $6,000 each to Dartmouth College and the University of Vermont.

—— A recent visit to the Carleton School for boys at Bradford moves us to say that we do not know of a family school in every way more inviting than that. A boy could hardly wish for a pleasanter or better equipped home school in which to prepare himself for college.

—— The annual catalogues of Yale and Harvard Universities, just issued, afford interesting facts revealing the growth of these ancient and influential seats of learning. Harvard, that had 337 teachers in 1894–95, has 366 this year. Her students in 1894–95 numbered 3,290. This year they have increased to 3,600 in number. Yale now enrolls 2,415 students. The Yale Divinity School has 105 students, the Harvard Divinity School forty-one. Harvard College has 1,771 students, Yale College 1,199.

A NEBRASKA LETTER.

I dare not ask you to continue sending it to me free any longer. But this is how I am situated Since Sept. 1, owing to the entire crop failure of last summer, coming as it did after repeated previous failures, my salary has been $300, with the use of the parsonage. It does not allow me anything to spend either for books or papers. I do not receive a single periodical for which I pay anything. But your generosity has been continued so long that I can only thank you most heartily for it, express my deepest appreciation of the helpfulness of your paper, but dare not ask for it longer much as I would enjoy it.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

lthough Secretary Carlisle has issued his l for a popular loan few financiers believe t it will prove a popular loan in the true se of the term, because it is gold that is re- red and that the people have not got and not get except by paying a premium to the nks who hold it. Moreover, the manner in ich the call was issued by the Secretary of Treasury makes it appear that the Admin- ration expects the big bankers to supply the d and that it has simply yielded to the mor of the press for a popular loan.

n the stock market there is certainly a bet- feeling due to the belief that the bond issue l prove a success and to the knowledge that ak accounts have been weeded out by the ent smash in prices and that stocks are centrated in strong hands. The fact that Anglo-German unpleasantness was not d in our market to depress prices shows arly enough the strength of the speculative ation and where the bulk of stocks are d.

he situation is still complicated, however, l until the close of the month nothing defi- e will be known regarding the bond issue, retary Carlisle's call remaining open until o. 5. Then the silver senators are pester- the country with their silver bills and re- e to allow any sound financial legislation pass.

eneral trade is quiet, more quiet than it uld be. The fact is that until recently weather has been against it, and until the v bond issue is settled merchants will re- n from expansion of operations. When italists know where they stand, the vol- e of trade will resume normal proportions. it is, the demand for money is very light, ich is one of the best indications that busi- s men are restricting their operations.

ailures have of late been rather frequent l large, which is accounted for by the fact t last summer's boom caused some indis- tions, leaving insufficient protection inst the subsequent rapid fall of prices and decline in the volume of trade. However, h the Treasury gold reserve restored for a g time to come, business interests will e courage and go about their affairs, still ing that Congress will see fit to eradicate currency evils which now exist.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING.

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, JAN. 11.

The calendar, beginning on Sunday with the general topic, prayer for the conversion of the whole world, upon successive days of the week suggested the various mission fields, Friday designating Japan and quoting from Modern Missions in the East: "The fascination which Japan exercises over the general tourist rises to inspiration, if that tourist is a Christian seeking signs of his Lord's kingdom. The sight corresponds to one's dreams of apostolic and apocalyptic times, in which we see great kingdoms uprooted by the grain of mustard seed, nations born in a day and the Son of Man coming on the clouds of heaven in all his glory."

The leader for the hour, Mrs. J. Stedman, spoke of the all-day prayer meeting held on Thursday by Suffolk Branch in the chapel of Shawmut Church, when, in successive hours, with different leaders, the work in different missions was made prominent. She referred to the 145th Psalm, read Paul's description of the Christian armor, and spoke particularly of the great work committed to the church and of the need of being filled with the Holy Ghost, urging prayer that God would pour out his spirit and make his people mighty. It was truly an hour of prayer, many voices being heard.

Miss Washburn read from a letter from Miss Mary Noyes of Madura about a little girl nine years old who had lost her mother. She says, "Recently my matron brought me a letter written by this child to her mother in heaven. She begins by asking her mother to save her a place at Jesus' side. She tells her not to be troubled for she and her brothers and sisters are well, but she says she is anxious to see her mother and asks if she could not come in the night and stay with her. She says, 'I will never forget you, and I hope to see you very soon.'"

Miss Lamson read an encouraging statement from Miss Merrill with regard to the girls' school at Paoting-fu, North China. "We hope to make a radical change in our school as regards the feet of our pupils. Hitherto we have received those having bound feet and preached and urged reform, successfully, too, in many cases, for during the last three years more than one-half our pupils have unbound their feet. Now we propose on reopening to receive only those who have discarded pointed shoes. It may lessen the number of our pupils for a time, but so much is being said and done all over the Empire in favor of anti-foot binding, that I think it will be a good thing for our church members if we set a decidedly high standard before them. Will you not pray for them and for us, that the change may be made without any spirit of bitterness, and that these young girls and their parents may realize what sacred, holy things our bodies are.

Miss Kyle read Miss Price's account of a little Zulu girl who ran away from home to Inanda Seminary. Her mother took her back, but she soon ran away again. Then her father went after her, very angry, but in his interview with Mrs. Edwards and one of her good native helpers was so influenced that he knelt while they prayed, went quietly home and when he was visited by the preacher afterwards seemed to have become a different man. Mrs. J. L. Barton and Mrs J. K. Browne read letters from Harpoot from Mrs. Wheeler, Dr. and Mrs. Barnum and Miss Seymour, a tale of facts which grows more heart-rending as further details are given.

At the close of this meeting the ladies were invited to the meeting held in the Prudential Committee room by the officers of the American Board and others in the Congregational House.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

The New Jersey press department last year sent out 2,937 bulletins, which were published in about one-half the newspapers of the State.

The first State to secure headquarters at Washington for the convention was Texas. The headquarters of the United Society will be at the Ebbitt House. The total membership of the committees having in charge the preparations is nearly three thousand, and one evening of the annual convention in the district, which is to be held this month, will be devoted to them.

The Brooklyn's Christian Endeavor Union held its annual meeting Dec. 21, and reported 102 senior and about fifty junior societies in that city, representing seventeen denominations. The Congregational churches have twenty-seven (senior) societies; Presbyterian, twenty-three; Reformed, sixteen; Baptist, seven. The total Brooklyn membership is not far from 10,000. Much personal work has been done in the navy yard and on board ships of war, the meetings being well attended by officers and sailors. Special effort is put forth in behalf of temperance.

The annual convention of the Foochow district, China, was to have been held in a church, but it was seen that the building would not accommodate early all that would attend, so the Endeavorers secured cotton cloth and put up a tent on the lawn of the Ponasang compound belonging to the American Board. The first native Endeavorer, Mr. Ling Ak Gek, presided. Seven hundred were present, and three hundred of these had little or no knowledge of Christ. The tent was fastened on one side to an idol temple, and a short distance away men were making objects connected with idol worship. The total membership of the societies represented is 370. The largest has thirty-nine active members, nineteen associate and twelve honorary, the Chinese names for these classes being "real members," "learners" and "guests." One of the societies holds two members every Sunday afternoon to speak in adjoining villages.

GORDON MISSIONARY TRAINING SCHOOL, Clarendon Street Baptist Church, Boston, opens Oct. 2. Evening classes Oct. 10.

THE GENERAL THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY, at its new building, 53 Mt. Vernon Street, Boston. Founded for the benefit of clergymen, theological students, Sunday school teachers, authors, and readers of a Christian literature of all denominations. It contains 17,000 volumes and 100 periodicals in the reading-room. Its books have circulated in more than 500 towns and villages in 12 different States of our country. It is supported by donations, bequests and fees from life and annual members, who have the full use of the library, and by the perpetual membership of churches, whose pastors have the use of the library, including the drawing of books, forever gratis. Donations and fees should be sent to Rev. Luther Farnham, secretary, at the library.

THE AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION has been at work seventy-one years for the retired rural districts. Its union methods specially commend it to communities of sparse populations divided in religious sentiments. Its missionaries visit families, distribute religious literature, hold evangelistic meetings and organize Sunday Schools. Probably no evangelizing agency has larger results for the amount expended. 11,000,000 children are yet out of Sunday School. Will you help to save them? Send to Rev. Addison P. Foster, D. D., New England Secretary, 1 Beacon St., Room 40, Boston.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. ### Miscellaneous.

BEEBE, Julius R., of Aberdeen, N. D., is to supply at Sanborn for a month, with a view to taking the work permanently. He has decided to leave the law to enter the ministry.

BELKNAP, A. J., who, after serving the church in Farmington, Io., for about two years, was stricken with paralysis a few weeks ago, is now somewhat improved in health and hopes to be able to preach again soon.

BRICKETT, Harry L., Marion, Mass., has had his salary raised $200 per year.

HALL, Geo. E. and wife, were given a New Year's reception by about 350 of their parishioners in Dover, N. H., who assembled in the parlors of the First Church to extend them cordial greetings and best wishes. The occasion furnished a happy expression of the place the worthy couple hold in the affections of their people.

LEWIS, Alexander, has begun work in his new field at Pilgrim Church, Worcester, Mass. On the evening of Jan. 1 a reception was tendered him and his wife, following which a dinner was served for over 500 persons.

OLIPHANT, Chas. H., and wife have been tendered a hearty reception by more than 200 of their parishioners in Phillips Chapel, Methuen, Mass.

VAN OMMEREN, Hendrik, pastor in Grass Lake, Mich., has discontinued preaching at the Meth. Ch. in N. Sharon, which he has supplied for three years.

A FURNITURE MASQUERADE.—That is certainly a novel and original idea which the Paine Furniture Co. show in another column of this paper. A hall stand has been cleverly designed in the shape of a great hall chair. The whole idea is admirably carried out, and the piece is very decorative. We commend it to our readers.

TOURS TO SOUTH FRANCE (THE RIVIERA) AND ITALY.—Messrs. Gaze & Sons, the well-known tourist agents, announce a series of tours to South France and Italy, leaving New York via Gibraltar Jan. 22, Feb. 19 and monthly. The principal art centers are visited, and the cost, to include all expenses sixty-one days, is $460. They also announce tours to Egypt the Nile and Palestine, Feb. 12, 19, March 7. Also forty tours for summer vacation in Europe ranging in price from $175 to $800. Mr. W. H. Eaves, the Boston agent of Messrs. Gaze, whose office is 201 Washington Street, will be pleased to send printed programs and any desired information.

Keep your eye on Pearline "ads."

Even if you use it already, you'll find hints here and there that will greatly help you. And there isn't a man, woman, or child but can be helped by Pearline.

All these advertisements are meant for the good of Pearline, of course—to show you the best and easiest and cheapest way of washing and cleaning, and to lead you to use it. But if they do, they will have helped you far more than they will have helped Pearline. You have more at stake. All the money you could bring to Pearline, by using it, wouldn't be a drop in the bucket to the money you'd save by it.

Send it Back

Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 470 JAMES PYLE, New York.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. MYRON ADAMS,

Who died in Rochester, N. Y., Dec. 29, was born in East Bloomfield, N. Y., in 1841. He was a graduate of Hamilton College and was among those in the class of 1863 to enlist for service in the Civil War. After graduation from Auburn Theological Seminary Mr. Adams became pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Union Springs, N. Y., held a pastorate at Dunkirk and in 1876 assumed charge of the Plymouth Congregational Church, Rochester, of which he was pastor at the time of his death.

REV. FRANCIS WILLIAMS.

The oldest trustee of the Hartford Theological Seminary died suddenly in East Hartford, Ct , Jan. 3. He was born in Ashfield, Mass , 1814, and was graduated from Williams College in 1838 and from the Theological Institute of Connecticut in 1841. Mr. Williams held pastorates in the Congregational churches in Eastford, Bloomfield and Chaplin, Ct., where he remained for over thirty years, resigning in 1892. For twenty years he was a director of the Connecticut Home Missionary Society and for forty years a trustee of the Hartford Theological Seminary. It is recorded of this pastor in the catalogue of the theological seminary of which he was a graduate that up to 1892 he had not been out of the pastorate a Sunday since his ordination nor absent from Sunday service once during a period of twenty-three years.

REV. EDMUND S. POTTER, D. D.

The death last week, at Malden, of Rev. Edmund S. Potter, D. D., at the age of eighty-two, removes one who had for many years been prominent in religious and temperance work and in various forms of philanthropic activity. He was a native of Leyden, Mass., a graduate of Wesleyan University and his first charge was over the Methodist church in Springfield. Afterward connecting himself with the Congregational denomination, he was pastor of churches in East Weymouth, Dorchester, Concord, Greenfield and Malden. His work in Malden with the Linden church closed only a few years ago and was very successful. He was warmly interested in the anti-slavery cause and for many years was one of the most earnest and forcible speakers on the temperance platform. His cordial manner and unaffected simplicity of character won for him a wide circle of friends.

A COUGH should not be neglected. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are a simple remedy and give immediate and sure relief.

THE modern farmer is particular in regard to the kind of seed he plants and the manner of planting it. The seeds must be of highest fertility and grown from the highest cultivated and most profitable varieties of stock. The great seed firm of D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich., fully appreciate this fact, as is attested by their progressive business methods and the quality of the seed which they supply farmers and gardeners through the dealers all over the country. In evidence of this firm's knowledge of the wants and requirements of planters, large and small, is Ferry's Seed Annual for 1896. This book is of the greatest value to farmers and gardeners—a veritable encyclopedia of planting and farming knowledge, and will be mailed free to any one sending his name and address on a postal card to the firm.

YOUNG—In Boston, Dec. 12, 1895, Wilbur Russell, son of the late Charles D. Young of Chelsea, aged 33 yrs., 11 mos.

REV. DANIEL WIGHT.

In the death of Rev. Daniel Wight at Natick, Dec. 21, 1895, Congregationalism loses one of its most honored and venerable ministers of Jesus Christ. He was born at Natick in 1808, graduated at Harvard in 1837, at Andover in 1840, was settled at Scituate sixteen years, supplying afterwards at Boylston and Ashburnham. Since 1871 he has resided in his early home in well earned retirement, serving in town and church affairs, a Christian citizen universally respected and beloved. His side interests have been horticulture, the natural sciences, especially astronomy, meteorology, in which he was an expert, contributing learned articles to the journals, Scripture study and composition. He designed the steel engraving of Bunyan's Pilgrim, which has been extensively circulated in this country and in England.

He was a clergyman of the old New England school, holding the faith of the fathers with unwavering confidence. In character he was simplicity itself, every motive pure, and his heart was exceedingly lovable. His theology wrought its holy effects in his life—perfect submission, patience in trial, invariable cheerfulness and devotion to duty. His love for his Saviour was very tender, and his happiest hours were in communion with him. He never ceased his prayers for the church, his country, the kingdom and its missionaries. An ex-minister, his relations with his pastors were of the utmost delicacy and helpfulness. A most beautiful life in influence and example, his memory will long abide in the hearts of all who knew him.

MOSES O. AYERS.

By the death of Mr. Ayers the Congregational church in Oakham has lost one of its most prominent and useful members. He died Dec. 16, at the age of sixty-nine years. He was a man widely known and highly esteemed by the business men of Worcester County. He was a man of exceptional modesty and humility, simple in his tastes and habits, genial and companionable. He commenced his business career in connection with the Reform School at Westboro, but for more than thirty years past he has built up a prosperous business in the wire factory at Oakham, established and carried on by himself alone. He has always taken an active interest in all public matters. He was an earnest, devout Christian man, who was always ready to use his property as a steward for his Master. His death is an irreparable loss to the whole town, but especially to the Congregational church. His gentleness and wisdom in council and well-balanced mind, with his uniform presence at all the meetings of the church for over thirty years, made him perhaps the most valued and useful member of the church. His widow survives him and his two sons, one a lawyer and the other a physician in New York city, and a greatly beloved daughter in Minnesota.

THE PROGRESS OF MEDICAL SCIENCE.

CONSUMPTION.

A scientific discussion of this dread disease, its cause, treatment, and cure, by Dr. Robert Hunter, the father of inhalation and most eminent lung specialist of the day. After a period of research extending over half a century, Dr. Hunter explains his perfected discovery of a specific remedy for consumption, and proves its success not only scientifically but through the grateful testimonials of his patients. Dr. Hunter was for forty years the sole advocate of the germ theory of consumption, which is now accepted by the medical profession throughout the world as the only correct theory — thus establishing beyond doubt his superior knowledge of this disease. Readers of The Congregationalist can obtain Dr. Hunter's book explaining his treatment without charge, by addressing him at his residence, 117 West Forty-fifth Street, New York.

Ivory Soap contains less of impurities, less of free alkali and more real soap than any of them; that is why it can be freely used without injury to the rose leaf skin of the baby, to the sheerest of linens or to the daintiest of laces.

THE true academic spirit does not dwell in the air. It does not abide in a region aloof from the concerns of mankind in the day that now is. It brings its own contribution of light and help to the cause of human culture. Its aim is not the luxurious enjoyment of art or letters, but to do something in its own way for the well-being of the race. It is not too much to say that of the academic spirit, in the best conception of it, Dr. Woolsey has been a living illustration.—Prof. George P. Fisher, in The Century, September, 1882.

CHURCH REMODELING.
THOMAS W. SILLOWAY, Church Architect.
10 Park Square, Room 8, Opposite Providence R. R. Station, Boston.

Mr. Silloway's long practice in remodeling churches enables him to save and utilize all the valuable parts of an edifice, and for a comparatively small outlay produce a building preferable in most respects to a new one of much greater cost. He proposes to continue this work as a Specialty, and tenders his services to committees who would practice economy, and where the means are limited. A visit to the premises will be made, and an opinion and advice given on receipt of a request so to do.

FIFTY years as a teacher and leader in Yale College, half of that time its president, made the influence of Dr. Theodore Dwight Woolsey wide and deep in American life. Few men in this century have left on so many persons so distinct an impression of personal character as he has done. The scholarly figure on our cover page is no mere memory but a present force. If the readers of this paper find it of value they owe gratitude for it to him, for his training, more than the work of any other teacher, has influenced the habits of thought and molded the characters of two of its editors. He lives today in the lives of hundreds whose words, from pulpit and platform and in literature, are listened to with respect by multitudes in every part of our land. Absolute sincerity, profound scholarship, a Saxon simplicity of thought and expression, a mind and temper under the sternest discipline, combined with a kindly interest in all the students under his care, made him a model college president. Thousands who never knew him owe him homage, for because of him their daily lives are truer, wiser and happier. The great university, whose outward appearance he would now hardly recognize, still rests on Dr. Woolsey's work as one of its foundation stones.

The National Armenian Relief Committee is not discouraged by the announcement of the Turkish legation at Washington that the Porte will not allow the Red Cross Society to enter Turkey. The committee has already sent considerable sums of money to the Constantinople committee, on which Sir Philip Currie of the British embassy and the American missionaries are represented, and purposes to continue the distribution of relief through the same channel if the Red Cross is prevented from doing its work. Messrs. Brown Brothers, bankers, of Boston, with branch offices in New York and Philadelphia, are acting as treasurers, and collections were taken last Sunday in many churches to be forwarded to them. Immediate gifts may save many lives and will relieve much suffering.

Free churches may still be regarded as in the experimental stage, though we believe the principle they represent is established permanently. But every notable success achieved by any of them is an argument stronger than words. The Madison Avenue Church, New York, has been conducted as a free church for four years, and has proved the wisdom of its pastor, Dr. Charles L. Thompson, in advocating the change. It has owed much to his energy, persistence and faith. It has expended in the four years $74,787 for its own work, and all of this sum except about $3,000 has come from the congregation. Its contribution to outside benevolent purposes has been $20,851. These figures, when we remember the hard times of this last four years, speak for themselves and speak eloquently. They represent great courage and great labors of pastor and people, whose work will continue to be an inspiration to churches of all denominations. Our church news columns from time to time report similar successes in other cities under totally different conditions.

A custom which we should like to see more prevalent is that observed now somewhat widely at this season of the year. We refer to the sending by pastors of letters to all the members of their parish. Several admirable examples are before us and they breathe such a spirit of interest and affection that we are sure those to whom they are addressed must be touched and helped. In these rushing days pastors are not likely to err on the side of too many calls upon members of their flock, hence a letter, calling attention to the ending of one year and the beginning of another and taking advantage of all the suggestions of the holiday season, comes to the average parishioner as both a reminder of a relation that ought to be increasingly sacred year by year and as a spur to more faithful performance of Christian duty. Those pastors are wise who utilize the printing press in this way.

The experiment of a dual and co-equal pastorate has recently been tried in two Presbyterian churches which are much in the public eye. In one case—that of Dr. Talmage—we suppose that hardly any one expected that so marked and unconformable a personality could long work in double harness. The other is that of the Brick Church, one of the oldest and strongest of the New York churches, and has a history which is worth recalling. In the constant changes of the city two churches close together in what had recently been the ultra fashionable quarter of the town began to feel the first pressure of the uptown movement in dwindling congregations and less liberal support. One had been an Old School church, with a long line of honored pastors. The other had been New School, with a brilliant but brief history, which had given two professors to Union Seminary. The pastors, Henry van Dyke and J. H. McIlvaine, were close friends. Without waiting for further pressure of necessity, the two churches decided to unite, using the title and building of the older and taking both ministers as co-equal pastors. Now, after two years of harmonious life which has welded them into a real union, the session and congregation are unanimously of the opinion that the dual pastorate is not a success. Dr. McIlvaine retires with the loving respect of the whole congregation, and Dr. van Dyke remains as pastor by the unanimous request of a united church. The manner of this coming together and separation is thoroughly Christian and makes us feel that, if the experiment of a dual pastorate could ever have succeeded, it must have been under such exceptionally favorable circumstances.

After conference of officers of the six Congregational benevolent societies over the long debated matter of adding to their present separate publications a cheap monthly paper, setting forth the work of all these organizations in brief, popular articles calculated to interest the whole body of our church members and move them to larger giving and prayer for these objects, it has been decided to refer the question for final settlement directly to the churches themselves. Accordingly, in behalf of their brethren, the Congregational Home Missionary Society is sending to all our churches throughout the land a circular describing the proposed monthly, asking each church to say whether it desires such a paper, how many copies it will take and pay for at ten cents a copy per year, and requesting the pastor or other officer to reply to these questions on a postal card sent with the circular and mail it to Dr. Kincaid at the Bible House. Thus will be easily settled the question whether the churches desire such a paper, and the six societies will govern themselves accordingly.

Every college student who thinks for himself at all desires to think freely. If in his little world of thought and life—little, indeed, only by comparison with the great current of the age whose influence he feels without being yet a part of it—there is one goddess who has undisputed sway—it is liberty. This is part of the divine order which brings up the new generation to remodel the conclusions of the old. Too great unwillingness to change in the rising generation would mean a halt in the progress of the world. We may trust to its aftergrowth in conservatism from the teaching which experience brings and the caution which responsibility enforces. It is well, however, that young men should remember that liberty looks on the world with open eyes. It is a counterfeit and misleading spirit which urges us forward before we have faced the facts of the world and weighed the relative importance of the phenomena which present themselves to our view. Free thinking is the hope of the world intellectually, and of free thinking Christianity is not at all afraid; but ill considered and premature thinking, while it can do no permanent harm to the kingdom of Christ, is capable of doing unmeasured harm to the careless thinker. The responsibility of thinking—its obligation to weigh and measure, as well as sift, the facts of the world—is what we would like to urge upon the undergraduate thinkers of our colleges. True liberty walks with careful and reverent steps, because she feels the importance and the difficulty of her high mission.

CHRISTIANITY TESTED.

It is the boast of the nineteenth century that it is closing with Christian nations leading the world, that human brotherhood has become established and that the cruelties which gave to past centuries the name of dark ages are impossible in this enlightened time. Yet under the eyes of Christian nations a tragedy is going on which is without a parallel in the history of the Christian era. With deliberate purpose and careful plans the sultan of Turkey is crushing out of existence a whole race of peaceable, inoffensive Christians. They are robbed, tortured by fiendish cruelties, their bodies piled by scores in unnamed graves, while hundreds of thousands of starving survivors stretch wasted hands toward Christian nations and beg for succor.

What answer comes to them? Russia protects her own sect. No Christians of the Greek Church are killed. Germany is indifferent. This brigand, holding his victims by the throat, watches England warily, the nation which has repeatedly saved his empire from destruction when its barbarities have provoked the just execration of the civilized world. He shrewdly plays on her fears lest other kingdoms get advantages which she possesses under pledges to protect those who are now unprotected, and England is silent. The nations wait while, with knife and sword and torch, this brigand carries on his work.

America has large interests in Turkey, interests maintained not for gain but for the sake of humanity. They have been in the way of the sultan's besom of destruction and he has been cautious in attacking them. But he has been testing the patience and courage of America. He refused to allow its official representatives to enter the country he was plundering. Our government meekly accepted the insult. Then he destroyed the property of Americans and slaughtered Armenians by the wholesale through the towns and cities they had sought to bless. Congress uttered no protest. Our minister to Turkey demanded indemnity for property destroyed, but has received none. But the piteous appeals of the starving survivors moved the American people to raise money for them and to ask the Red Cross Society to bear to Armenia their gifts. Hope revived, for Turkey by treaty had agreed with the nations which profess to be humane to permit this beneficent society, which knows no distinctions of nationality, to relieve suffering humanity.

But Turkey, before she is asked, has issued an official proclamation that America cannot send help through the Red Cross to the victims of the sultan's cruelty. Americans have been too outspoken in criticising the carrying out of his skillfully conducted plot to murder a race. They are told to mind their own business. What is the answer to this challenge? Some say, perhaps it is not really official. The Turkish legation at our national capital may not fully understand its master's mind. Secretary Olney has asked the sultan if he really authorized the statement that the Red Cross will be shut out of Turkey. He waits for the evasive answer which may be expected. Others say, we will go on raising money and hope for the best. A few say, perhaps England will now come to the rescue, do what she solemnly pledged herself to do and at the same time resent this affront to America. Still others say, it is a great pity, but of course we cannot help it; the United States has no standing in European affairs. The President and Congress say nothing.

What will our children say when the history of these years is faithfully written? They will say that the Christian nations of Europe and America, in the closing years of the nineteenth century, stood by and watched a Moslem robber outdo his predecessors in torturing and murdering Christians by the thousands; that these nations were so controlled by selfishness, jealousy and cowardice that they submitted to be played off against one another, accepted without remonstrance the insults which expressed the Turk's defiance of outraged humanity, and congratulated themselves that they were preserving the peace of the world. By these things our children will judge how much their fathers valued the principles of human brotherhood, of which they boasted as the ripe fruit of the life of the nineteenth century.

RELIGIOUS LIFE IN OUR COLLEGES.

The effect of college training on religious character is often and anxiously discussed. No one doubts that such training increases power and influence. But the question is pressed, Are not these gained at too great risk?

No subject suffers more from popular misconceptions than that of the religious influence in the college. Many parents who have not been deeply concerned about their boys' companionships at home commit them to the college with the feeling that they are being initiated into a set of evil mysteries. Newspapers foster these fears. The daily press makes much of those aspects of college life which are only incidental. Ninety-nine students do their work faithfully and no mention is made of it. One fails and the world is told of it. Young men engage in athletic sports one thousand hours and nothing is said about it; but in the thousand and first hour some careless youth meets with an accident and dispatches are sent out to the press that his death is expected. One student is arrested for a misdemeanor and the news goes through the land. The same evening one hundred of his classmates are at prayer meeting, but no notice is taken of it.

In all our colleges there is a distinctively religious life. In most of them that life is organized and active. It is underestimated because unobtrusive; but it is in the majority of the colleges of this country a dominant factor. A far larger proportion of college men are Christians and live like Christians than of young men out of college. The number of conversions among students will compare favorably with the number reported by the churches.

Such facts as these and as are given in our special articles this week ought to dispel the prevailing idea that college life is deficient in safeguards of character. College students, like many other persons, may choose an evil life if they will. But for the young man whose face has turned in the right direction no atmosphere is more helpful to Christian life than that of the college, and no place, at the period when young people are gaining education, is safer than within its walls.

TOO MANY NEW CHURCHES.

During the last eight years Congregationalists have organized on the average thirty-two new churches annually more than the Presbyterians. The minutes for last year show that the Presbyterians organized 176 churches and aided in building edifices for 155 of them. Congregationalists in the same time organized 216 churches, but our Church Building Society could aid only 103 to erect buildings. This comparison with the work of a sister denomination starts important reflections. An unsheltered church stands about the same chance of survival as an unprotected orange tree above the snow line. It may have a stunted growth, but it rarely brings forth any fruit and is seldom worth raising. We ought to organize fewer churches or help more of them to build houses.

Probably a wise growth would be promoted by reform in both directions. The most healthy domestic economy suggests that a young man should first possess a house or the means to build one, then a wife, then a family. That order is largely reversed in church extension. There is first a family needing charity, then it secures a minister and gets charity; often it does not secure a house at all and disappears after a precarious existence.

We believe firmly in a policy of church extension that looks toward the future and combines prudence with zeal. The statistics point especially, and almost exclusively, to the newer Western States as the region where reform is needed. With forty per cent. more new ministers than new churches, and fifty per cent. more new churches than meeting houses for them, as last year's records show, some wise student of religious economy ought to be able to show us the wisdom of increasing the resources of the Church Building Society, raising the required qualifications for entering the ministry, and cooling the ardor of those who would bring into being little churches with slight prospect of being able to secure a head and to support him, or a building in which they can find warmth of fellowship to protect themselves from wind and cold.

CHRIST'S APPEAL TO THE YOUNG.

The young are more apt than their elders to suppose that becoming a Christian involves giving up most of what renders life enjoyable. They do not realize the emptiness of much which looks tempting in the future. The appeal which Jesus makes seems severe and extreme. Yet, when it is considered carefully, it proves to be most inviting. We ought not to regard the matter as a bargain, in which so much of self-denial is to be compensated by so much reward. Only a free and hearty yielding of the heart to God can find acceptance. Yet it is proper, and well worth while, to consider what Jesus does give to those who heed his appeal.

Surely the divine favor is no light thing. The favor of an earthly ruler is sought eagerly and at any pains. Is not that of the Almighty just as real and far more worth the having? The respect and good will of one's fellowmen also is a certain reward of the Christian. They sometimes deny these to him for a time and they often bestow these upon people who are not Christians, but it cannot be denied that in any community consistent, faithful piety is sure of this recognition at last and in a degree.

As for knowledge of the divine character, the noblest subject which the human mind can study, and for insight into all truth, surely it is only natural that he who is the source of wisdom should bestow it freely, according to their ability to receive it, upon those who confess, honor and imitate him. Nor does he hold it as beneath him to watch over and direct them day by day through life. Rather, he delights to do so. He has pledged himself to do so.

Moreover, his appeal has to do not only with this life but with that to come. In the hour of death he will be with us to sustain and cheer, and throughout the endless hereafter those who have been Christ's followers here will enjoy a happiness beyond present description or imagination. These rewards are not visionary because they seem remote. They are as actual as the possessions of this life, and the door through which we are to pass to them may open at any instant.

Blessed are the aged who accept Christ in season to testify to men that they are his. But far more blessed are they who dedicate to him the enthusiasm of youth and the strength of manhood. Unto every young man or woman God's appeal comes now, as Joshua uttered it long ago, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."

THE WEEK IN REVIEW.

America for Americans.

There have been no startling developments in the dispute between Great Britain and the United States relative to Venezuela during the past week. A meeting in London to further the scheme of founding a permanent arbitration tribunal of representative judges in Great Britain and the United States has been held. Mr. Balfour, First Lord of the Treasury, in a speech at Glasgow, has deprecated the idea of war between the two countries and uttered other sentiments that on the whole were conciliatory, nevertheless there was nothing in his speech to indicate that there has been any change of attitude toward the United States by the British Foreign Office. The destination of the special British Flying Squadron has been the subject of much speculation and rumors that the fleet is to visit the West Indies and rendezvous near Venezuela are rife. If it proves true that the fleet is to menace our coasts and those of our sister republic for which we have interceded and by so doing incurred British displeasure, it is not improbable that there will be a decided revulsion against Great Britain even among those who now deprecate anything like the thought of war between her and the United States. Unless Great Britain is actually seeking for war with us those responsible for her foreign policy will do well to avoid anything like massing naval and military forces along our coasts and boundaries.

The Venezuela commission has formally requested the Secretary of State to secure for it such documents as Venezuela and Great Britain may be willing to present informally if not formally. The scope and force of the doctrine of America for Americans, which has been defined by individuals hitherto and had varying interpretations from presidents and secretaries of state, seems likely now to be formulated definitely and indorsed by Congress. Obviously such a declaration from such a source will have a degree of authority and importance not characteristic of any prior utterance. And it is to be hoped that before Congress passes upon this matter there will be a long, full and calm debate of the problem in all its serious aspects and far-reaching import. That students of the Monroe Doctrine differ much in their interpretations of its scope has been demonstrated during the past month by the variant utterances of the most eminent teachers of history in our American universities. That many of our foremost jurists and citizens disagree with President Cleveland and Mr. Olney in their intrepretation of the Monroe Doctrine has been proved by their utterances since Dec. 17. That the senators and congressmen will differ must be apparent to those who contrast the resolution offered by Senator Sewell of New Jersey with that reported by the Foreign Relations Committee last Monday. The importance of the latter is such, because of the authority it has coming almost unanimously from such a committee, that the substance of their report is appended herewith:

> Resolved, That the United States of America reaffirms and confirms the doctrines and principles promulgated by President Monroe in his message of Dec. 2, 1823, and declares that it will assert and maintain that doctrine and those principles, and will regard any infringement thereof, and particularly any attempt by any European power to take or acquire any new territory on the American continents, or any islands adjacent thereto, for any right of sovereignty or dominion in the same, in any case or instance as to which the United States shall deem such attempt to be dangerous to its peace or safety, by or through force, purchase, cession, occupation, pledge, colonization, protectorate, or by control of the easement in canal or any other means of transit across the American isthmus, whether on unfounded pretension of right, in cases of alleged boundary disputes, or under other unfounded pretensions, as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition towards the United States, and as an interposition which it would be impossible in any form for the United States to regard with indifference.

The World of Politics.

The action of the Democratic National Committee in selecting Chicago as the place and July 7 as the time for holding the party's convention to nominate a presidential candidate is interpreted as a victory for the sound money element in the party. Should that convention, in its platform and by its candidate, stand for views on monetary standards objectionable to the South, West and Southwest it is not improbable that a third party candidate would receive the votes of many Democratic revolters. Indeed the silver men of both parties in Congress are co-operating so openly with the Populists now that it would not be surprising to hear of their alliance and the creation of a new party even before the older parties declare their position.

The re-election of Mr. Allison as senator from Iowa was a foregone conclusion. He deserves the honor, for his record for conservatism, ability and character is irreproachable. Whether Ohio in sending Mr. Foraker to the Senate has sent a statesman or a mere politician remains to be seen. Mr. Foraker has this advantage over his predecessor, Mr. Brice, that his legal right to represent the State will be above suspicion. Mr. Brice was a resident of New York who bought one of Ohio's seats in the Senate.

Governor Morton of New York, now that the presidential bee is buzzing in his bonnet, has begun to play politics, and has not scrupled to cripple the cause of Civil Service in the Empire State if thereby he may further his own interests. He has appointed a pronounced "spoilsman" as member of the commission charged with the responsibility of executing the Civil Service Law, and persisted in the nomination, notwithstanding the protests of the best element of his own party. This act, and Lieutenant-Governor Saxton's subserviency in naming Platt henchman as chairman of many of the most important Senate committees, are indicative of the malign influence which Mr. Platt exerts, an influence that demands the most strenuous opposition if the party is to retain the confidence of the voters of the State. It is a happy omen that the New York Tribune and men like Mr. Choate and Mr. C. N. Bliss are leading in a revolt against such leadership.

Judicial Decrees.

The Federal Supreme Court rendered a decision last week which will establish the principle of comity between States more firmly, and incidentally lessen somewhat the intricacies of the divorce problem. A man divorced in New Jersey and ordered to pay alimony by the courts of that State, neglecting or refusing to pay alimony, was sued by his former wife in the State of New York to recover the amount. The highest court of the State of New York denied the right of the wife to bring suit in New York to recover alimony on a decree issued in New Jersey. The Federal Court says that comity between States and a regard for the provisions of the Federal Constitution compel courts to recognize the validity of decrees issued in other States. Husbands seeking to evade the obligations imposed by divorce cannot hereafter find legal authority for such evasion by fleeing outside the bounds of the State imposing such obligations.

The decision of the Court of Appeals, to which our New York city correspondent refers in his letter, is such a stinging blow to the brewers and saloon keepers of New York State that they already have introduced in the State legislature a bill repealing the law which the court interpreted as limiting their right to prey upon the community. The decision is a triumph for the present board of excise commissioners of New York city, who, as soon as they came into power, refused to interpret the law of 1892 as the Tammany excise commissioners had done, and insisted that when the law said that licenses were not to be issued to any saloon within 200 feet of a school or church the limitation applied to saloons seeking relicense as well as to those applying for the first time. The New York Sun, which laments the decision, says that the statute "might be made in a generation absolutely prohibitory of liquor selling in crowded communities, provided only churches and schools were built thick enough." Exactly. Let the statute stand, and let this new argument for church extension be recognized. As for those who talk about the court's decision "scattering to the winds the vested rights of individuals," they should know that American courts, reflecting popular will, have never given the slightest tenure to the "vested right" claim. Saloons are nuisances and as such are to be condemned.

The Dominion of Canada and the Province of Manitoba.

The overwhelming victory won by Premier Greenway of the Province of Manitoba in the recent election of members of the provincial legislature shows that the people of that province support enthusiastically his determination to refuse to alter the provincial system of non-sectarian schools even at the command of the Dominion of which the Province is a part. The issue is so clearly drawn now that it will be impossible for either party to recede without a concession involving the loss of considerable authority and self-respect. The Dominion can proceed to enforce its determination and run the risk of causing a rebellion that might spread and bring about a disintegration of the federation. The ministry now in power, by its endeavors to remedy the situation without alienating either its Protestant or Roman Catholic adherents, has brought the Conservative party into deserved contempt. The Roman Catholic hierarchy and a large body of pliable voters stand ready to smite the party that makes any concessions to Manitoba's defiance, and on the whole the situation is as complicated and pregnant with exciting developments as any that now attracts public attention.

The Armenian Relief.

Miss Clara Barton and her helpers expect to sail for Europe this week. En route to Constantinople they expect to secure additional authority as representatives of the Red Cross work, so that when a few weeks hence they enter Constantinople and proceed to the center of authority and ask for a definite answer to their formal request for permission to render aid they can speak with additional weight. In Constantinople and there only do they expect to ascertain definitely whether or not they can proceed on their errand of mercy. The statement put forth in this country by the Turkish minister they do not accept as authoritative or final. Our Department of State has endeavored to ascertain what the sultan's answer will be, but no reply has come. Nor need Miss Barton expect a prompt and definite one when she presents her claim at Constantinople.

Meanwhile, the funds for the relief of the sufferers in Armenia must not cease to flow in, either to the American Board or to Brown Brothers, the agents of the National Relief Fund. The missionaries of the American Board as yet are unmolested in their efforts to act as almoners of the charity of England and the United States and, even though the Red Cross be debarred from serving in Turkey, the work will be done. It is pleasant to know, on the authority of Secretary Judson Smith of the American Board, that our Government is now prepared to use the utmost authority to protect the missionaries of the Board.

Spain's Grip on Cuba. Will It Last?

General Martinez Campos, Spain's ablest general and a veteran soldier, has been ordered to give over his command of the troops in Cuba to another and return to Spain. A more relentless, less honorable soldier is about to enter upon the task of subduing the revolution. From henceforth we may expect to hear of cruelties and excesses of violence that will not redound to the glory of Spain, nor fail to aid the cause of the revolutionists, especially in quarters where they are seeking now for aid. The merits of their cause and their resources have recently been described in detail before the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate and before the Executive, and much careful consideration is being given now by the authorities in Washington to the wisdom or unwisdom of recognizing the revolutionists not only as belligerents but as successful revolutionists.

The Gains and Losses of Diplomacy.

The supposed concert of the Powers at Constantinople is conceded to be non-existent. Queen Victoria is said to have written a very persuasive letter to the sultan of Turkey, and he a very polite and noncommittal one to her. The British fleet in the Mediterranean, instead of hovering near Turkey's coast, was last heard of at Malta. When this is said all has been chronicled that is new concerning the pressure of the Powers on Turkey to compel her to cease massacring the Armenians. There are indications of a reconciliation between Great Britain and France; how far it goes is problematical. Certainly France has been given the free hand in Siam, and all British opposition to the extension of French authority there has been withdrawn. Of course, at the same time Great Britain has decided to steal a portion of Siam's territory quite as large and even more important than that which France is to have. It is always easy to be generous at other people's expense. If subsequent developments show that Great Britain and France have come to an agreement in regard to Egypt, and if Russia does not exert its power and put an end to this apparent alliance, then it may be in order to hope for more vigorous action by the Powers at Constantinople.

The Situation in South Africa.

The legislature of the Transvaal Republic has met and adjourned, wisely postponing all legislation, remedial or otherwise, until later in the year when passion has subsided and affairs in the Transvaal have resumed their normal state partially, if not wholly. The Orange Free State legislature has expressed its sympathy for the Transvaal. Dr. Jameson is still in the custody of the Boers and will be sent to England to be tried. Sir Cecil Rhodes has been summoned to England by the directors of the South African Company and has departed thence. President Krueger, in a dispatch to the people of this country, through the New York World, has assured the American people that all Americans under arrest will receive just treatment and a fair trial. Whether confiscation of property, as well as imprisonment, will be meted out to those adjudged guilty of conspiracy is a question that is causing some speculation just now. If property is confiscated by the Transvaal Republic it will bring large sums into the treasury. President Krueger has not formulated, or at least not presented, any demands for indemnity on Great Britain yet, shrewdly awaiting the advance which the British must sooner or later make and realizing that his policy of delay will not impair the strength of his position.

NOTES.

By the death of Bishop Atticus G. Haygood of the Methodist Episcopal, South, the Negro loses one of his best friends among the Southern whites. Bernhard Gillam never again will expose foibles and puncture shams by his clever cartoons in Judge. Rev. Dr. Thomas Armitage, deceased, was one of the great Baptist preachers and a lovable and beneficent character.

At a time when the reasonableness and propriety of our uniting with Great Britain in defense of the Armenians is being discussed, it is interesting to note that James Madison, writing to President Monroe just before the latter issued his famous message, not only indorsed the policy which Mr. Monroe was contemplating announcing, but suggested also that Great Britain and the United States join "in some declaratory act in behalf of the Greeks."

The first test of the alliance between the ministry and the Liberal party in the Japanese Diet came Jan. 9, in a motion to memorialize the emperor against the foreign policy of Count Ito, especially the recession of the Lian-Tong Peninsula. The motion was defeated by a vote of 170 to 103, and is a signal victory for the Ministry. The Diet is asked to appropriate large sums for the army and navy, much larger sums than ever before, indicating clearly the new ambition that inspires the national heart.

IN BRIEF.

A clerical error: a prolonged, prosy sermon.

A secret political order has been organized in Kansas to fight prohibition. Every such organization is a menace to free government, whatever it proposes to fight.

A Scandinavian woman in Whitehall, Wis., has given the savings of twelve years, $200, to the Armenian relief fund. What a superb example she has set to those infinitely wealthier!

Much that is sold as sterling silver in the great department stores is spurious. Legitimate dealers in silverware have been fighting this fraud in New York, and it is gratifying to see that a similar crusade has begun in Boston.

A "Christian federation" church has been started in the West to unite all Christian churches in one federation. But none can come in who do not adopt its platform. It is a case of "one more unfortunate, rashly importunate."

Announcements have been made extensively to the effect that ministers are granted annual half-fare permits by the Western Passenger Association. We learn that the limitations imposed, however, practically exclude from the offer ministers in the Eastern, Atlantic and Gulf States.

Out of 19,756 public elementary schools in England, 11,897 are controlled by the Church of England and draw support from the whole community. In 8,000 parishes there are no other public schools. Is it any wonder that Nonconformists are girding themselves for a great struggle?

The steady growth of the General Howard Roll of Honor, which now enrolls 572 names, is all the more encouraging because it has not decreased in any measure the regular contributions to the first work of the society. The proper thing to do now is to press forward to the 1,400 mark and to reach the goal, if possible, long before the society's annual meeting next June.

Our sympathies, heartfelt and deep, are extended to "the Old First" Church, Detroit. Its splendid loyalty to its pastor, Dr. W. H. Davis, during the last twelve years and its continued prosperity are the best evidences of its worthiness to receive sympathy in its loss by the pastor's removal. Since for reasons beyond his control a change is necessary, we heartily congratulate the Eliot Church, Newton, that Dr. Davis has accepted its call. Our neighboring churches will appreciate the wisdom and the enterprise which it has shown in filling its pastorate with one whom all are glad to welcome to Massachusetts.

The Alabama General Convention of Congregationalists, through its committee intrusted with the task of preparing a course of study for its ministers, has experienced difficulty in finding a work on theology suited to their purpose. The friends and admirers of the late Prof. L. F. Stearns of Bangor Seminary will be pleased to know that his work on Present Day Theology has been selected.

The Union League Club of Chicago is generous and patriotic enough to offer to send the words and music of America, Hail Columbia, The Red, White and Blue and The Star Spangled Banner free to any organizations proposing to celebrate Washington's Birthday. This offer applies to the entire country. The express companies will co-operate and furnish free transportation.

To Pope Leo XIII. Your third invitation "to all Christians" to unite in one church by accepting you as their head is just received. We cordially reciprocate by inviting you to join us with the motto, "One is your Master and all ye are brethren." On those terms we will call you brother, but not master. For particulars see Minutes of the National Council of Congregational Churches, 1895: action on church unity.

"If I hear him longer," said one who heard Dr. N. G. Clark in the Broadway Tabernacle some years ago, "there will be no peace to my soul unless I resign my pastorate and go abroad." "Is this the work of foreign missions?" said another on the same occasion, "then I knew nothing of it before!" It is most gratifying to see in so many of our contemporaries representing other denominations tributes of respect and just appreciation of the true stature of the great statesman we have lost.

The Salvation Army has a head as autocratic as the Pope of the Roman Church. He has recalled from America its popular leaders, Commander and Mrs. Booth, who have done great service not only in the work of the army itself, but in exalting its spirit and methods and in commending it to the Christian people of the whole land. Naturally, the protest of the army against the removal of the commander and his wife is emphatic. We hope it may prevail.

Massachusetts legislatures come and go, but Chaplains Dowse in the Senate and Waldron in the House—both of them highly esteemed, and, as yet, hardly patriarchal Congregational ministers—seem to be permanent factors in the legislative machinery, as their unanimous election year after year convincingly proves. The genial superintendent of the Boston City Missionary Society is now serving his seventeenth year in this capacity and the Bishop of Sherborn his fifteenth year. Our natural feeling is that the legislature can't do anything very bad as long as these respected gentlemen hold their positions.

Commercial honor of the noblest sort is by no means rare in American business life. Of the late William Libby, a well-known merchant of New York, it is told that when his father's business failure put an end to his hopes of a college education he entered commercial life and, thirty years later, paid his father's outlawed indebtedness in full, with seven per cent. interest. Then having had the creditor's receipts bound in book form, he presented them to his father as a birthday gift. An obituary notice in this issue of our paper brings to view another Christian business man who, foiled in his purpose of being a minister, made his life tell for noble ends.

President Eliot of Harvard, having rebuked Susan B. Anthony for misquoting and misrepresenting his words so as to make him call woman's suffrage a bulwark of our Government, she has given him a characteristic reply. It is based on the same principle as that by which she brought out the New Woman's Bible. She says he ought to have meant what she said he did mean, that he is a bad man, anyhow, and in the way of true progress. She seems to have felt in her soul that the only way to make him of use in the world was to make him appear to stand for the principle she lives for, and she is not altogether alone in trying to do this kind of service for refractory men.

A man died in Boston last week of whom it was said—and what better epitaph could one desire—that "he lived to be a good citizen of Boston," i. e., blessed with a competence, his bodily energy, mental and spiritual culture and surplus revenue were always placed at the disposal of every cause—political, educational, æsthetic and philanthropic—which he thought promised to elevate the civic life of Boston. His great-grandmother was of a Huguenot family driven forth from France after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. His father was one of the first advocates of prison reform in this country. Blood and parental example do tell, and when Hon. Martin Brimmer died Boston lost a precious citizen.

The Herald and Presbyter thinks that if a notoriously immoral man were a member of a Congregational church and the church took no action about it nothing could be done to relieve the denomination of the odium. "This," says the Herald and Presbyter, "is one of the weaknesses of Congregationalism." Not at all. This is only the ignorance of a Presbyterian editor. The conference which included that church could admonish it and, if necessary, withdraw fellowship from it. Such a course of discipline would be quite as effective and consistent as the attempt of the General Assembly to boycott Union Seminary while at the same time retaining its teachers and Presbyterian students in full fellowship.

A glimpse of the wider mission which our department of Closet and Altar may subserve is afforded in the experiences of a Maine pastor, who used the prayer printed in our issue of Jan. 2 at the close of the sermon on the following Sunday. The congregation joined silently as the words were reverently repeated by the minister, and the effect was most impressive. In a private note he says: "I think the prayer is one of the most beautiful I ever read." There are other places, the chamber of an invalid for instance, where an extension of this use of our column of devotional reading could be made serviceable.

What with Elizabeth Stuart Phelps's writings in McClure's and her last novel, A Singular Life, and with the publication of Matthew Arnold's letters containing pointed reflections, the quiet little town of Andover seems destined to continue prominent in the public eye. The professors evidently resent this disturbance of the serenity of the winter term for we find a somewhat vigorous protest in The Transcript from the humorist of the faculty, in which he asserts that Arnold's description of the breakfast which he took at Andover in 1883—when, according to Arnold, the bill of fare included almost everything from fish balls to mince pies—is "a slander more damaging to Andover professors than charges of theological unsoundness and intellectual dishonesty." We see no other balm for the outraged feelings of The Transcript's correspondent than for him to exercise—at some college dinner, perhaps—his exceptional powers of description and characterize some of the English breakfasts of which he has doubtless had the honor of partaking.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM NEW YORK.

A Temperance Revival.

We are in for an old-fashioned temperance revival all around here. The decision of our highest court confirming the temperance people's views of the excise law—adversely affecting as it does fully 1,000 or 1,500, some say nearer 2,000, liquor saloons daily selling within 200 feet of churches or schoolhouses—greatly disheartens the adversaries and puts new life into good citizens, now more earnestly than ever bent on seeing the law executed. The excise commissioners are now two for, to one against, the law's execution, particularly on Sundays. President Roosevelt of the police board is earnest in the good work. Some of the opponents are really aiding the reform by getting liquor sellers arrested that they may have a more plausible ground for their cry of "persecution," on which they are now largely depending for capital in dealing with the thirsty masses who want their grog rations five times a day and seven days in the week.

In Brooklyn, since the concerted preaching in more than a hundred pulpits, Protestant and Catholic, the Congregationalists coming out in full force, and the famous interview of pastors and delegates with Mayor Wurster, followed up by another visitation from 200 strong Brooklyn women, things have been kept hot. At the interview, Rev. A. F. Newton made a capital point. Speaking of the law requiring temperance education in schools, the mayor spoke up with enthusiasm: "In that measure, sir, you shall have my hearty support." "That's exactly what we want to hear from you, Mr. Mayor, in regard to this other law [the excise], which, being law, has equal right to claim your support." The mayor was not so ready to commit himself to this, but professes to be hearing all sides and studying the question carefully. He will have a hard time with the immense saloon force, but there is encouragement in the fact that that crowd are evidently greatly dreading his final decision and action.

Greater New York.

Another burning question which, though far from new, has of late elicited unusual heat is that of "greater New York." Whether a majority of Brooklyn citizens really favor the consolidation of their cherished city of homes with this city of business and politics has been hard to find out, despite the technical decision at the election of 1894 that they do by a majority of 277. For months both sides have freely had their say in the papers, the most noise being made by the advocates of union. But last Monday evening the opponents of consolidation crowded the Academy of Music with representative Brooklynites. Dr. Storrs presided and made the principal address of the evening. Having from the first strongly opposed the amalgamation, and his heart being set on preventing it, if possible, his remarks could not fail to be characteristic, and they were enthusiastically received by the audience. Other speakers were A. T. White, commissioner of city works, ex-Judge Reynolds, A. G. McDonald, Jesse Johnson, W. C. Redfield, president of the Loyal League, and District Attorney F. L. Backus. Resolutions were adopted, the vital one being in favor of securing from the legislature authority for another vote of the city upon the matter that shall be finally decisive.

The Sultan's One Advocate.

The sultan's alleged refusal to allow the Red Cross "good Samaritans" entrance to his dominions on their errand of mercy has raised the thermometer of public feeling here several degrees above the highest figure reached before. Peaceable people, who were before willing to go as non-combatants, talked of weapons of carnal warfare in a way to remind the elders of the days of the Rebellion. But the Nineteenth Century Club, which always goes in for "the other side" of living questions, got hold of F. Hopkinson Smith, the one advocate of the Ottoman monster, and heard him reiterate his praises of that wholesale murderer and his charges of the responsibilities for the cruelties in Armenia to the account of the poor Christians, whose sufferings and death have aroused the world. Dr. H. L. Wayland told many truths in reply, and the assembly went out, each holding the opinion with which he came.

Three Interesting Meetings.

The Mount Holyoke Alumnæ of New York, Brooklyn and vicinity held its semi-annual reunion here on the 12th, about 125 attending. Of course "the endowment fund," with the new expectations from Dr. Pearsons, was uppermost in thought and speech. This branch of the fifteen associations has not yet completed its canvass, but the others have raised $53,000, and a generous addition will be made in this city and State, from which have gone more than a quarter of all Mount Holyoke's pupils in the sixty years of its grand work. The principal addresses were made by the president, Mrs. Edwin Atwill, Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall and Miss Ellen C. Parsons.

Marked interest was awakened by the reports of the University Settlement Society at its annual meeting on the 15th, presided over by President Seth Low, with addresses from him, from Mr. James B. Reynolds, the head worker, Mr. R. F. Cutting, Dr. Felix Adler and Miss Helen Moore, the librarian. The year's receipts were $11,278 and expenses $11,191. Membership 390, annual dues $5,675. Of the population among whom this work is carried on about seventy per cent. are Hebrew, ten per cent. Catholics, ten per cent. Protestants and ten per cent. nondescript. Strong pleas were made for more workers, more books and a suitable building, to cost about $150,000.

The necessity for constructing a new building for the Academy of Design, arising from the recent sale of its present galleries, has developed a rather warm division of feeling among our artists and lovers of art. The majority of a committee on site and plan recommended the consolidation of the academy with three other established bodies of artists here in one building with, perhaps, a union of the several properties. The minority of the committee and a large majority of the academicians opposed the union, and on Wednesday evening it was voted to maintain the separate independence of the academy and to set at once about securing a proper site.

The National Locomotive.

Every passer-by can see and hear that a deal of work is going on in Madison Square Garden. The inquisitive learn that it is in preparation for the great annual bicycle show, beginning on Saturday night (18th), to follow up that of last year, only on a much larger scale. It is said that not only a sample of every "wheel," old or new, made in the country is to be exhibited, but every part of each style of machine is to be set disconnected before the visitors, that each may judge for himself as to the relative merits in every particular of the entire collection. The promoters of the show say that there will be nearly 500 exhibitors, and that the value of the machines on view will not be less than three-quarters of a million dollars. Some, built more for show and advertising than for use, will be of great cost—one, adorned with gold and gems, to be sold, if at all, for $5,000. Not only are "tandem" wheels promised, but those with electric motors for carrying four and six persons, and others for traveling on ice and for navigating the water. It looks as if walking would soon be wholly discarded.

HUNTINGTON.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

Help for Armenia.

Not only are the churches of our order ready to contribute to the poverty-stricken Armenians, but the city, as a whole, is becoming interested. A committee of twenty-five, appointed by the mayor, includes the names of some of our best citizens. Mr. S. M. Moore, the father of Mrs. C. F. Gates of Harpoot, is chairman. Its appeal will soon be issued, and to it one cannot doubt there will be a generous response. In common with the whole country, Chicago was shocked at the sultan's refusal to permit the Red Cross to furnish relief to his subjects and at his claim to be a compassionate ruler. Still the course seems a natural one and one which certainly ought not to surprise people who have known that free speech has been muzzled to some extent even in Chicago and persons kept from serving on the committee appointed to secure aid for Armenia by the influence of the Turkish consul.

The minute on Armenian affairs adopted by the Ministers' Meeting Monday, although not entirely acceptable to our brethren of British descent, was yet voted for almost unanimously. The feeling with the ministers is very decided that England could, if she would, put an end to the massacres, that having insisted upon reforms, in the interest of humanity, it is true, which have irritated the sultan into ordering these massacres, it is now within her power, and has been for months, to make such representations to the tyrant on the Bosporus as would compel him to be humane.

New Buildings for the University.

It has been decided to erect at once four new buildings for the biological department of the university. They will be paid for out of the gift of Miss Helen Culver. They will stand on Fifty-seventh Street and will form a quadrangle of their own. President Harper is off duty this term. He has taken no rest since he began his work here four years ago. Having turned the first corner in the founding of the institution he feels that he is justified in having a vacation. So he has brought his course of lectures on Prophecy to an abrupt close and retired to Morgan Park, one of our suburbs, for rest and, it is reported, to write a book. He meets the trustees once or twice a week and evidently keeps his hand on the helm, although openly responsible for no work this winter. The theological department asks for $50,000 from its friends with which to pay debts and to secure an additional $50,000 from Mr. Rockefeller. It should be remembered that large gifts for definite objects often leave former departments greatly hampered. The old theological seminary has always had a hard task before it, and, although it is on a better foundation than formerly, it needs the special gifts from its Baptist friends for which it sends out its appeal.

High School Teachers and the Board of Education.

Those who are especially interested in the reputation of our schools have been anxious over the recommendation of a so-called retrenchment committee to reduce the pay of our high school teachers. The saving through reduced salaries would be only about $56,000 a year, but this would come out of four hundred persons, to many of whom it would mean either a good deal of hardship or an entire change in their plans of life. Under the recommendation of the committee some of the salaries would be reduced from twenty five to thirty per cent. Through a change in the grouping of teachers into classes for promotion, from most all hope of promotion would be taken away. The teachers were justified in regarding the action as involving a disgrace to which they could not willingly submit. At the last meeting of the Board of Education, in view of the protests of the teachers and of many influential tax-payers, the matter of reduction was reconsidered and referred to a joint committee on which the high schools will be represented, which undoubtedly will report that no change is desirable, either in amount of salary paid or in the grouping of the teachers. Certainly, if the hope of advance by reason of merit or faithful service is lost, the character of our teaching force will rapidly degenerate. There is no shortage in the school fund, calling for retrenchment, although general city taxes are about twenty five per cent. higher than last year.

Dr. Davis of Detroit.

While we congratulate Eliot Church, Newton, on its acquisition we cannot help sympathizing with the First Church of Detroit, the State of Michigan, and the whole Interior on the loss they sustain in the removal of Dr. Davis from among us. He has had an exceptionally prosperous pastorate. He has loved his people and they have loved him. He has entered heartily and sympathetically into every effort which has concerned the moral and spiritual welfare of the State. Considerations of health on the part of some members of his family are the only reasons for his leaving a church which has stood loyally by him from the first, and which was never more thoroughly united in him than now. We predict for Dr. Davis a most successful pastorate in Newton, though in the gain of the East we feel sensibly the loss of the West.

Reception to Dr. J. G. Johnson.

Thursday evening the New England Church gave their pastor a reception at which he was welcomed back from his trip to Japan most heartily. Professor Mackenzie, who has supplied the pulpit so acceptably in his absence, took part in the exercises. Dr. Johnson described some of the customs in Japan and promised next Sunday to say something about the missionary outlook in Japan.

The Religious Life of Yale University.

By Charles S. Macfarland.

Among our larger colleges Yale stands pre-eminent in its religious life and activity. Of a recent graduating class of 200 men 164 were members of churches—a larger proportion than one would be likely to find outside of college in any but a religious organization.

The public religious life at Yale centers in its Y. M. C. A., which is the largest and the leading among the many college societies. Dwight Hall, the association building, is one of the handsomest on the campus. Its purpose is primarily to furnish a home and center for the religious life of the whole university. It forms, with its attractive reading-rooms and library, a common meeting place for the students. Here its general secretary has a permanent office, where his fellows can meet him for any service he may be able to render them. An employment bureau, for the benefit of the multitude of Yale men who depend on employment to meet their expenses, is sustained. The membership is now more than a thousand, and it is the largest of the 525 college Y. M. C. Associations in the world.

Each new student receives at his home by mail, about a month in advance of his coming to Yale, a handsome handbook, extending an invitation to Dwight Hall privileges and offering aid in obtaining board and rooms. During the opening week a reception is tendered the incoming students, thus initiating them at once into the religious life of the university. Every Sunday noon at the close of chapel service the class prayer meetings are held, each class having its own room. These meetings have a total average attendance of about 200. On Sunday evening, at twenty minutes before seven, is held the general religious meeting of the university, conducted by students and addressed by the professors or by leading visiting men. For this year the average attendance has been about 500.

Weekly Bible classes are taught by the students on Wednesday evenings and have a total average attendance of about two hundred and fifty. About one in every five students is enrolled as a member of these classes. In addition Bible lectures are given, at which special topics are treated by members of the faculty to supplement the work of the Bible classes. The annual course of Dwight Hall lectures, at which religious topics of live interest are discussed by eminent men, are among the most popular lectures of the university year.

An important department of Yale's religious work is that of the Foreign Mission Band, which holds weekly meetings for special preparation for foreign work by study of facts and fields. There are now thirteen student volunteers preparing for service who meet with the band. The members also give frequent addresses to interest the churches in foreign mission work. In this connection it is interesting to state that the Yale students are paying the salary of one of the leading missionaries in Japan. Another important phase of religious work which has a marked reflex action upon the Christian life and character of the students is the home mission work.

The Yale Mission was started in 1888, when a number of the men began to conduct religious meetings in a hall on Grand Avenue. The work grew so that in 1893 a whole house was rented, and the upper floors were equipped with comfortable beds and otherwise fitted up for a lodging house. The first story, which was once a saloon, now makes an excellent meeting and reading room. The students conduct evening services here and last winter a Bible class was conducted. A student superintendent and the janitor are paid by the Yale Y. M. C. A. Thus far this year twenty-nine men have been reached. Fifty students go out into the slums on every Wednesday, Friday and Sunday evening in connection with this work. Another department is the Bethany Mission Sunday School conducted and taught by the college boys on Sunday afternoons.

A Boys' Club was organized in the lowest part of the city by the Class of '92. A large room was fitted up where street urchins might gather or be gathered for instruction and amusement. In December of each year the Sophomore Class turns the club over to the Freshman Class. Last year the club had 325 boys in its membership. Members of the class were on duty each evening as teachers. The club furnished bath-rooms and a weekly gymnastic class was conducted. A penny savings bank scheme and the formation of a military company were among the advances made last year.

DWIGHT HALL.

The Y. M. C. A. is constantly called upon to supply men to go out into various cities and towns to deliver addresses and conduct meetings, and such requests are usually complied with. The great preparatory schools which feed the university are regularly visited by members of the deputation committee, who hold religious meetings in these schools.

During the past year the work of the association has so enlarged that a separate department has been opened for the Sheffield Scientific School. Commodious rooms have been rented and the Bible classes of the Sheffield school have doubled. Such branches will eventually be established in the law and medical departments.

Each undergraduate class elects its class deacons, who have charge of the religious interests of the class and, together with the undergraduate officers of the Y. M. C. A., compose the executive committee of the association. A separate Bible class, meeting weekly, is composed of members of the law, medical and graduate departments.

The supervision of all these lines of work is in the hands of the general secretary, who is selected from recent graduates and whose salary is paid by the students. The present secretary is Mr. W. H. Sallmon of the class of '94. In all this work the students have the co-operation of the university professors and they are very generally identified with it. In addition to what has been described, which is entirely the work of the undergraduates, is that of the theological students. Much of the work of the city mission is in charge of a committee from this department of the university.

The general religious and evangelistic spirit of Yale students is shown by the large proportion of Yale men at the annual student conferences at Northfield. Last year there were fifty delegates at the conference and the Bible classes were conducted by the general secretary of the Yale Y. M. C. A. During the recent college Week of Prayer twenty-five men met for prayer each morning before breakfast. It is also a significant fact that, out of 269 members of the recent entering academic class, 217 are church members.

A glance any day at the columns of the Yale Daily News would give one a fair conception of the large place that religious work and culture have in Yale life. The leading men of the college in scholarship, in athletics and in its literary life are men who are active Christians. The present editor-in-chief of the Yale Daily News, Mr. Anson Phelps Stokes, Jr., is chairman of the Bible study committee and leader of his class in Bible study. The majority of the editors of the several college publications, the prize debaters and the honor men in studies are Dwight Hall men.

Moreover, in view of the commendable interest of Yale in athletics, it is significant that so many of her prominent athletes have been leaders in the college religious life. For several years past nearly all the captains of the football and baseball teams have been Christians. Such names come at once to mind as those of Vance C. McCormick, captain of the eleven in 1892 and deacon of his class; W. H. Corbin, captain in 1888 and superintendent of Bethany Mission; C. O. Gill, captain in 1889 and who recently sailed as a missionary to China; T. L. McClung, captain in 1891, a frequent leader of his class prayer meetings; the renowned pitcher Stagg, who was general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. for two years; George Case, captain of the nine in 1894 and also treasurer of the Y. M. C. A; Harry L. Williams, 1891, the world's record hurdler; Edson Gallaudet, 1893, stroke of the crew and vice-president of the Y. M. C. A.; J. A. Hartwell, 1889, S., captain of the crew and end rush in the eleven; Laurie Bliss, 1893, S., captain of the nine and who with McCormick made a team in Christian work. Other names that present themselves are those of Frank G. Chase, valedictorian of 1894, and W. A. Thomas, the salutatorian of the same year, both active Christian workers. Such a list might be extended. Captain Thorne of this year's eleven is a Dwight Hall man.

Within four months fifty-six persons have been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment in Germany for speaking of the emperor without the respect which he thinks is due to him. Most were chance remarks on the streets. Yet the emperor says what he pleases of his subjects. In this country, every citizen being a sovereign, they and their rulers talk about one another freely, and we trust our Government is not less secure.

THE SITUATION AT OBERLIN.

BY PROF. E. I. BOSWORTH.

It is sometimes asked whether the religious life of Oberlin is as pronounced today as it was forty years ago. College life in many of its phases has certainly greatly changed since then. The children of Oberlin's alumni come to college with better clothes than those which their parents used to wear. Athletic sports here, as in all colleges, have become a greater factor than they were even ten years ago. Streets full of boys in crimson sweaters, coming in from the athletic grounds, shouting themselves hoarse with the college yell, might seem to a graduate of thirty years ago to present a less devout appearance than that to which he was accustomed in his day. Such changes, however, are soon seen to be superficial and to give little indication of the real spiritual life of the college.

A member of the faculty, who graduated in the class of '59, recently stated quite positively his conviction that the religious life of the college is stronger and more pervasive now than then. The changes have been chiefly in its method of expressing itself. There are probably fewer conversions than formerly, but there are also fewer unconverted students here. Many are converted in Y. M. C. Associations and C. E. Societies before they reach college who, before the days of these organizations, would have come to college unconverted. At the close of last year there were only about twelve unconverted persons in all the college classes together, though the proportion of non-Christian students was much larger in the academy and Conservatory of Music.

At present the great work of the college religiously is to supply conditions favorable to Christian growth. As a result revivals are not as frequent as in former years, but there is perhaps a more evenly strong and constant religious life throughout the entire year. It finds expression in various organizations peculiar to these later years. A vigorous Y. M. C. A. and a recently organized but growing Y. W. C. A. hold weekly meetings, which are well attended, have circles for Bible study and touch the life of the student at many points. A society of Christian Endeavor existed for a time, but was found to be simply duplicating the work of the other two organizations and was discontinued as an unnecessary multiplication of machinery. Each class has its prayer meeting on Friday afternoon just before chapel, led by some member of the faculty. There is a band of missionary volunteers, not as large just now as it has sometimes been, owing probably to the inability of the American Board to send out missionaries at present, but it has a present membership of nineteen, and in the ten years of its existence has enrolled 245. It has actually sent at least forty-five of its members into the foreign field. This is a large proportion when account is taken of the fact that many join the band early in the academy or college course and have eight or ten years of study to accomplish before they can enter the work.

The college partly supports a missionary, Rev. Cyrus Clark of Japan, a graduate of '84. Last year over $900 were raised, the largest sum yet contributed in any one year. This year the contribution is not likely to be as large. Sunday mornings, at the Sunday school hour, Professor King conducts a training class, the primary object of which is to fit for personal Christian work. This class has an average attendance of 325, and has become one of the most powerful religious forces of the college.

In these comparatively new ways the religious life of the college is finding an expression which is strong and steady, though not as striking as that of forty years ago. There are still times of special effort, and whenever any special appeal is made to the Christian sentiment of the college the response is generally quick and sure. The meeting of the Day of Prayer for Colleges brings 900 or 1,000 students to the chapel. There are also from time to time revivals. In 1890 Mr. Mills conducted a successful series of meetings, and last winter witnessed a revival of marked power. For some three months after the Day of Prayer for Colleges the work went on without interrupting the regular college exercises. Only one public meeting was held each week, but a great deal of personal work was done and the whole college was profoundly moved.

The religious exercises at which attendance is required are, as they always have been, daily chapel, family prayers in the various boarding houses and two services on Sunday. There has never been any serious discontent with these requirements. In recent years two terms of Bible study have been required during the college course, with the possibility of electing six other terms.

Any résumé of the religious life of the college would be incomplete without a recognition of the influences upon which that life depends. First and foremost among them is that of the Christian townspeople of Oberlin, for the connection between the life of college and town is peculiarly close. The dormitory system does not prevail, and there is no college church. The students, therefore, find homes in the families of the town and worship in the town churches. The students come and go rapidly. One college generation may be more or less religious than another, but the permanent religious atmosphere of the place is afforded by the people of the town, including the faculty.

An important part of this permanent spiritual environment of the college is, of course, the preaching of the First and Second Church pastors, Dr. Brand and Dr. Tenney. Perhaps there is not more than one other man now living in Oberlin who has exerted as powerful an influence upon the whole body of students during the last twenty-five years as has Dr. Brand during his long pastorate. Another important part of this local environment is the influence of the missionaries who come to Oberlin to spend their vacations. The First and Second Churches together have about fifty of their present membership in foreign missionary service. Every year several of these or other missionaries are spending their vacation here. Their children are here in school. For the younger children a Missionary Home has been established. These missionary visitors keep the missionary spirit alive in college and town and often really, though unconsciously, do as much for the evangelization of the world while here as when in their foreign homes.

The presence of the theological seminary has much to do with the religious life of the college. Generally in universities there is no real connection between the student life of seminary and college. To some extent this general tendency to separation manifests itself here, but a year seldom passes in which there are not in the seminary one or two students whose influence is felt throughout the entire institution and who are leaders in its religious life. The revival last year was largely due to two such men. Thirty or forty students gathered in their rooms every Saturday evening and on these occasions many began the Christian life.

But perhaps next to the influence of the town, with its pastors and resident missionaries, the religious life of the college depends for its support upon the Christian homes from which the students come. Many of them doubtless come from a Christian home life of more devoted consecration than that which they find here. The college draws from a constituency of Christian homes all over the world. Last year its students came from forty-five States and eighteen foreign countries. If this widespread Christian constituency should ever cease to be distinctly Christian, the religious life of the college would perhaps speedily deteriorate in spite of its local environment. May that day be far distant!

CHRISTIAN INTERESTS AT COLORADO COLLEGE.

BY PROF. EDWARD S. PARSONS.

Colorado College, like most of the colleges of the country, was the fruit of the religious spirit. In 1874 the Colorado Association of Congregational Churches appointed a committee to consider the advisability of planting a college in Colorado, and out of that act the college sprang. During the dark days of financial distress, up to 1888, it was kept alive by the prayers and contributions of Christian people in Colorado and in the East. The religious spirit brought it into being, and the institution has never been false to the purpose of its founders.

Congregationalism, with its far-sighted genius for education, is thus responsible for the founding of Colorado College. By the terms of its charter a majority of the trustees must ever be Congregationalists. But, although within the circle of Congregational influence, guided largely by Congregationalists, and appealing most directly for its support to the benevolent men and women so numerous in the Congregational churches, it has never been, in any narrow sense, sectarian. On its board of trustees and its faculty are many who are members of other churches, and in its student body every leading denomination is represented. Its spirit is the broadest in thought and feeling that is consistent with unswerving loyalty to the Master. Denominationalism is never thrust upon the students, is rarely ever alluded to, but permeating and dominating all the life of the college is the religious spirit.

The aim of the college has always been to cultivate the personal element in the relation between faculty and students. The college life has been singularly free from the enmities which characterize so many institutions. It has not yet outgrown—it is to be hoped it never will outgrow—the family spirit. So it has been possible for the religious conviction of the teacher to make itself felt on the students, and the latter have always made a cordial response anything suggested for the betterment the individual, or aggregate, religious fe.

The religious services and activities of olorado College are shaped by the fact at there is no college church. The col-ge has not been large enough, nor is it at resent ready, for such a development. he students have their religious homes the various churches of the city. Up a year ago each student was required attend one service on Sunday in the urch of his choice, but since that time e experiment has been tried of expect-g, but not requiring, such church attend-nce. The trial has given such satisfactory sults that the new plan will doubtless come the settled policy of the institu-on.

The college itself conducts prayers in the apel at a quarter past nine on every reci-tion morning. During each of the last vo winters a short series of vesper serv-es have been held on Sunday afternoons, which representative clergymen from ifferent denominations and different parts the State have preached. These have een largely attended and very helpful. college prayer meeting is about to be tarted, which will furnish a new religious nter.

In the curriculum of the college there are wo classes for Bible study, one of young en studying under President Slocum the fe of Paul, the other class studying under ne present writer introduction to the New estament. This work is elective and is pen to all the college classes.

But the religious work in which the fac-lty personally lead is only a small part of he work done. The students themselves re active and aggressive. The proportion f Christian students is very large, seventy r seventy-five per cent. Among this num-er, almost without exception, are the lead-ng students of both sexes, a fact which ives tone to all the college life. Both the . M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. have vig-rous organizations, which hold regular rayer and conference meetings on Sunday nd sustain a varied work. A personal orkers' class of young men meets once a eek to study the problems of reaching nen with the gospel. There are two vol-ntary Bible classes among the young adies for the study of Old Testament His-ory and the Life of Christ. A mixed class s studying home and foreign missions. The student volunteer movement has en-olled nine, five of whom are young women. These students are active in endeavoring to rouse the missionary spirit in the college nd in the churches. They have addressed lmost every Christian Endeavor Society in he city, and have distributed much mis-ionary literature. The young women of he college have decided to support a Bible woman in India. The students have charge of a mission on the main street of Colorado City, a few miles away, which has been productive of much good.

The moral standard of the students of Colorado College is exceptionally high. The president's report to the board of trus-tees at the last Commencement said: "There has been no case of discipline during the year, and, in fact, for the past three years." One strong influence toward the securing of this high tone in the life of the institu-tion is the series of chapel talks given by the president once a week during most of the year. These discuss in a strong, prac-tical way the ethical questions involved in the personal and social life of college stu-dents, and they almost never fail to work immediate and lasting effects. A marked change is always observable in the bearing and life of the students at the close of the year as compared with what is to be ob-served at the opening of the first term. Skepticism always diminishes in a marked way with the length of residence. All these facts show how strong is the influ-ence with which the students are sur-rounded.

Early in the present college year there was a marked religious interest which crowded a daily college meeting and wrought changes in many lives. We are all hoping that the Day of Prayer for Col-leges will result in a continuance and en-largement of the good work.

BODY AND SOUL.

BY HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD.

Miss Fitzroy knew perfectly well that when she left this earth she would leave her body behind her. But notwithstanding this knowledge she took pleasure in the thought that it was really a delightful body. It was in perfect health and allowed its owner great enjoyment; the long limbs, the strong, straight back, lent themselves to move-ment that brought the fresh red blood springing along its circuit, dyed the carmine in cheek and chin and fed the life gener-ously.

It was certainly a beautiful body; a sculptor would have loved its slow curves; a painter would have studied its exquisite tints; a priest would have felt the purity and loveliness of its contours. Of course Miss Fitzroy knew this, or something of it; and while she did not plume herself upon it, she was well content about it. Pos-sibly she was more than well content, although it may be for singular reasons; for she thought more or less of the con-dition to follow this—as young people often do, through some antipodal necessity of their fullness of life—of its probabilities and semblances, and felt the pleasantness of carrying into it the spiritual likeness of a perfect shape and a seraphic countenance.

For of course she never doubted that that would be. Was not this body of hers the work of all the influences upon her from the beginning of time? Did it not repre-sent the action of good and evil upon her and her race, the assimilation and develop-ment of either? And was such action to be wasted? This symmetrical frame of hers could be only the result of harmonious forces, the absorption of the best and most beautiful. It was impossible, she thought, that evil passions, disordered brains, low standards and crooked methods should not have led to their outward similitude, in ir-regular eyes, ugly outlines and deformities, the physical molded and stained by the moral and mental condition. Not that she gave much time to these fancies, but it was an underlying consciousness. If fire or dis-ease or accident had scarred or maimed her irretrievably it would not have changed her mind, because the body as it came to her was hers and therefore her right. She did not vex herself with speculations concern-ing the effect of such things in the variation of species; the species to which she be-longed was a race of well-made men and women, lithe and strong of limb, clear white and red of color, with eyes that looked at the sun and ears that heard the grass growing, so to say.

It was not, however, that she expected to carry into the unknown this identical red and white, this statuesque rondure and hight, but that she was sure her guise and form there would be the correspondence and sum of her guise and form here. She would have been blind and stupid not to know that she was beautiful; and the com-plete sum of her philosophy upon the mat-ter was that the beauty was but the work-ing out, the expression and appearance, of the inner nature. People who were not beautiful might be very well in their way—it was a lower way; they might have been retarded, arrested, hindered in their devel-opment, but the fact remained that they were hindered. She remembered abortive apple blossoms that fall and never come to fruit; in her unformulated thought she perhaps felt concerning these people as certain thinkers do of those without reli-gious life—that they have no souls. At any rate, they were not Fitzroys, that was all. There had never been a base or a plain Fitzroy. With this there was no arrogance visible in Miss Fitzroy other than the arro-gance of youth and strength. It was all the same as her understanding that the world is round; the world has nothing to do with it other than to receive the benefit of being round.

But although this was a substratum of sentiment it was not a matter of active thought. It never occurred to her more strongly than it did just as she was going down to dinner on the excursion boat on which her father had taken a company of Western friends for some sea experience, and had commanded her rather unwilling presence. As they moved they met a throng descending the broad staircase from the upper deck. Some one called her father's name, and she saw Mr. Fitzroy reach up and shake hands with a person to whom Mr. Devlin was unceremoniously presenting him, Mr. Hope, a city mission-ary, as she afterwards learned. As the man threw his enveloping cloak over his shoulder, and, leaning forward, with his long arm took Mr. Fitzroy's hand over the head of the group below and with his other hand removed his slouched hat, she thought she had never seen a more singularly repul-sive countenance—a mask of irregular fea-tures, a heavy and protruding jaw and an extraordinary yellow pallor. The fancy shot across her of the loathliness of such a creature's soul, of its hideous aspect pres-ently in the unknown life hereafter.

When she came up from dinner and out upon the upper deck, she saw the slouched hat and broad shoulders leaning across the rail, and as the man turned and rose at her father's mention of his name, his arms hanging by his side, dwarfed, misshapen, she thought only of some gigantic creature of the woods and shrank with a swift ap-prehension before she regained herself, but not so swift that he had not seen it.

He smiled, however, and the instant's illumination transfigured the face. "I have seen you before," he said. "Often. And I have wished to meet you. I have wanted your help."

"My help?" she murmured, in a little doubt.

"Yes," he said, smiling again. "When I want a thing, I find the best way is to say so at once."

"But I"—

"O, only for outskirt work. For such uses as the bells and pomegranates upon the high priest's robe had."

"Do you mean that you want people of—society—to take up the work"—

"O, not in the least! The workers who came to me because Miss Fitzroy came would be of no sort of use. I mean—well—will you sit down? Here is an air-cushion. May I have this place beside you?" And again she thought of a man of the woods, sitting high, leaning forward on the bough with which he had helped himself to walk upright.

"How clear and fine it is tonight," he said, directly. And although the quality of his voice was harsh there was some inner tone in it that gave presently a vibration of music. "I have been watching these great waves chasing the boat, white and fierce, as if to overtake her, waves the boat makes herself—and thinking they were like many of the troubles that pursue us."

"But what was it you wished me to do?" she said, the least in the world attracted, in spite of herself, by the smile, by the strange resonance of the tone.

"Very little, indeed. And yet an immense amount. Perhaps you will think me abrupt—I hope not gross. But I reason that a prince should know he is a prince and be ready to use his power." He hesitated. "Sometimes I have thought," he said, gazing out across the sea, and almost as though he were talking to himself, "I have thought if one looking like an angel sat at the foot of a bed it would be easier for the dying there." He paused. "In truth, it must have been a great thing to the Greek that he saw forms of beauty in every play of light and shade, in wood or field, the dryad as a bough bent, the nereid in the wash of a wave."

Did she understand him? Was it possible he wanted her to pose for an angel at his deathbeds? It was just as she had thought from his look. The man was either a knave or a fool. But some reply seemed necessary. "Perhaps," she said, indifferently, "one thinks too much of beauty."

"It isn't possible," he said. "Beauty of all sorts, the human face being one. For beauty is only absolute harmony — order; and absolute order is God. Yet it is only the beauty righteously used that is permanent. The other, it seems to be an illusion, a mask, a simulacrum; that of the drunkards of Ephraim whose glorious beauty was a fading flower; that of the city of purple, 'O Tyrus, thou hast said I am of perfect beauty' and 'thou shalt be a terror, and never shalt be any more'; that of which the Psalmist said, 'Their beauty shall consume in the grave.' For my part, I always felt I would rather their beauty went with them."

"Why! Does it not? Of course it does! We look there as we look here, or who would know us?"

"I hope we don't," he said, brightly. "All of us, that is. Doesn't St. Paul say we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye? Well, all the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come!" He was silent then a few minutes, but before Miss Fitzroy recovered herself from the surprise of his manner of conversation, "You were rather astounded just now," he said, "when I told you what I wanted. Did you fancy I wished to practice fraud with an apparent, a theatrical angel?" laughing lightly. "No, no, you mustn't misunderstand me. If you blushed as I spoke, I might pause. But you treat what all men who look at you must feel as a well-known circumstance, a fact of nature. And I, if I were other than I am, should keep silence. I, a man separated from pleasure," with a gesture of outstretched arms, "a man vowed to solitude and service"—

"O, but you know"—she began in confusion.

"Well, well," he exclaimed, "I am inexcusable! And one day I shall change these prison garments. But since we have trenched upon the matter," he said, "why should I expect to look there as I look here? Why should you? The other reading of the cry of the poet of the desert is, Yet out of my flesh shall I see God! O, yes, I shall drop it. It is written that he makes his ministers a flame of fire. Wherever I am I shall be his minister. I don't know what the flame of fire may signify, but I know that we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory. And what that image may be—well, I only know again that it is, as it were, the body of heaven in his clearness. Yes, yes, when he shall have changed my vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, then shall I be glorious in the eyes of the Lord!" The words came in a torrent, but so low was the tone she seemed to hear him more by intuition than by sound.

"We have a habit of thinking that feet and hands and eyes are necessary to our existence," he went on. "But because we have personality in another life it is not at all necessary that it should be personality as we know it here. My semblance may be that of a flower, a star, a domination, a cloudy presence of snow and vapor fulfilling his word, an unknown power, but I shall be a soul, and God will love it!" Miss Fitzroy's passing thought was of the improbability of that. "After all," he said, "is there surely a body here, a material body? When we look from a lighted window on a dark night is not the room there on the darkness, length and breadth and shape and color, as real as the other room? Is not all, for some purpose of use, an illusion? Is there anything real but the ideal—this ideal body of heaven in its clearness?" Suddenly he shook his shoulders like a shaggy dog coming out of deep water. "It is your fault," he said, laughing. "You began it! But so suddenly speaking to you in familiar ways—have we known each other before in some forgotten life, or is time so short with us here that all acquaintance is crowded into it?" he asked, turning upon her. "But it all leads to what I set out to say," he resumed; "that those who have money, those who have eloquence, those who have sympathy, those who have beauty, should use what they have. There may be a ministration of beauty as there is of acts of mercy. One can offer it and serve with it, even sacrifice with it. There are other sacrifices than those of a contrite heart, you know."

"If one has never done wrong one cannot have much of a contrite heart," she said, for want of something better to say.

"Well, I will not ask you to be contrite—at any rate, not yet. Only to help those that are contrite. To make them feel in looking at you"—he hesitated—"that the gates of heaven are lifted," he added, half under his breath. "To let the little street wretches see"—

His glance spoke for him. But it would not have abashed her consciousness to supply the word: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

"To give young girls just turning down evil paths the salvation of"— He paused again; and it occurred to Miss Fitzroy to wonder, for the first time in her life, if she were that ideal.

"I don't know what you are talking about!" she exclaimed, half impatiently.

"All the better then," he said, looking at her with the wonderful smile again that made her recall stories of transformations in the Arabian Nights. "I will not trouble myself to discover—however I may have wondered in seeing you—if the soul is as beautiful as the face, nor even to try and make it so, if it be not—for you know the glory of the celestial is one and the glory of the terrestrial is another—if only I may claim your help, send for you now and then when I need you, in places not pleasant for the feet. At Poor Poll's—O, I assure you I should not spare you. You have fed on the roses and lain in the lilies of life so long it is only fair you should have the other side of experience."

"Is it so different?"

"It is a life of which you have no more notion than the fish in the water down yonder have of the life of the birds of the air."

"Do you suppose a fish ever does see a bird?" she asked, thinking to get the conversation within her reach.

"A bird on the wing? And wonder concerning the fishes of that great upper ocean of the air? Who knows? Just as we wonder at the dwellers of the sphere above us and beyond us. To every life its own form you see. To that life certainly not this form."

"But a fish cannot live in this air—how shall we live in that?"

"Only the deific in us, perhaps, may live at all."

As Miss Fitzroy gazed in reply she wondered where the deific in him was hidden. It was growing dusk as they swept along the gray waters from which the sunset fires had died, and, in the dim light where she could guess more than she could see, her repulsion was no longer from some hideous wild man of the woods beside her, but from the companioning of one in some weird manner enchanted into evil shape. There had been a fascination in his tones as he spoke, perhaps in his thought, that had made her half forget the rest; but as she looked out before her and across the water, drawing a misty veil over its molten jewels, she could not repress the sense of awesomeness concerning something outside her ken. It was all oppressive to her—possibly the ideas he had suggested not the least of it. She did not think of him as intrusive or impertinent, but it was worse than the vexatious surprises of a bad dream to have the world you had walked on disappear. She had been so sure of herself—and now, after all, it might be that her whole body was not full of light. As is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly, and perhaps there was not much in her of the heavenly.

The moon was coming up, sending a dream of light before. The band in another part of the boat was playing for the young people and the children to dance. The music came to her confusedly, but with great ringing arpeggios on the harp, "Like vast pointed wings cleaving the air,"

Mr. Hope said. The lamps were everywhere kindled, and the excursion boat, with its broken and sparkling reflections, slipped over the tide like a great fairy palace of light.

Miss Fitzroy was becoming uneasy. She wished her father would come for her, for she did not know her way about the boat. She raised herself from her leaning posture to see if he were in sight. And suddenly there were cries from this side and from that, the captain's trumpet was thundering orders, the music stopped with a crash, and then one assembled, agonized shriek rent the air and there was a vast, black bulk towering above them like the side of another planet. A mighty shock, a recoil, a plunge, a hissing of water and steam, and the excursion boat had been cut in two and was settling to her fate, and the great ship that had wrought her ruin was slipping over the dim water like an escaping ghost.

In the horror of her immediate sensations Miss Fitzroy lost all consciousness of time. She could not tell how long she stood there struck to stone—if it were five minutes or fifty before the boats from the Beltrania were coming back, rowing might and main with great sweeps across the seas swelling to the increasing night wind. She heard their encouraging halloos. She was aware of her father's arms about her. She saw Mr. Hope climbing in and out among the huddled, terrified and paralyzed people, reassuring and soothing and exhorting. She felt that they were settling deeply and more deeply, and more than once it vaguely seemed to her as if some terrible black monster were looking over her shoulder. She did not know if it were death, or if it were the impression that man had left upon her senses, or if it were the darkness of shuddering horror taking shape—the darkness into which one-half the boat, with the captain and the first officer and all the other souls there, had gone down, she herself joining in the wild cry that followed them to their doom. Now, at last, they were being lowered into the boats, hurriedly, breathlessly. Now it was her turn, and her father's, fortunate only in being together. The boat was full, and drew off. One after another, with loud orders, louder outcries, splashing, half-drowning, sobbing, shrieking, the people were crowded into the other boats and pushed off. The last boat was receiving its load, swinging up against the settling mass, rolling back upon the big wave, in danger of being drawn into the swirl of the sinking.

There were left, high under the stern lantern, only two people, a colored woman—the forgotten servant of some members of the party possibly—who had been going from one fainting fit to another, and Mr. Hope. The woman was not fainting now, but, half prostrate, she was clinging to the minister's knees. "O, take me! take me!" she was imploring. "O, don't leave me! Don't let them leave me! O, there's my boy, and my old mother! What will become of them! They haven't anybody but me! O God! Save me! Save me!"

Plainly the minister was trying to comfort her. Miss Fitzroy could almost hear him from their own receding boat. "Save me! Save me!" the woman still shrieked.

"Push off!" they cried in the boat beneath. "You'll swamp us! We can't hold another! No! No!"

"O, can't we make room?" came a woman's voice.

"There's no room to make!" was the rough reply. "We're weighed down to the water's edge now. Hold together up forward there! Bear away, men!"

"O it's the minister! It's Mr. Hope. It's the missionary! You must take him!" another cried.

"It's worth more than all our lives to try it!"

"One of you, then! One!"

"Damnation! Do you want to be sucked down? Pull! Pull!"

"Save me! O, save me!" shrieked the woman.

And Mr. Hope lifted the little colored woman with his long, strong arms, swung her free of the rail, dropped her into the half dozen arms waiting for her, while the boat careened, recovered, the oars flashed and pulled away.

And then the moon came soaring up, and her light lay full on the missionary's face in the moment ere the wreck plunged down into swelling and seething water, as he stood looking up into heaven, and the splendor there seemed shining and breaking from within. Miss Fitzroy's blood was curdled with terror. A sound like a silver trumpet was in her ears. She thought she heard a voice saying: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." And it was love she saw in that swift instant that bloomed sweet, serene and mighty on that face—love looking into infinite love blazing back upon it. It was nothing—that misshapen body plunging down to death. It was worse than nothing—her own dazzle of color and curve. For a moment, before she hid her eyes, she had seen heaven hang in the air, and in that moment she had seen also the man's soul, white and strong and beautiful as an archangel, mounting up to God.

A DAY AT THE CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, LONDON.

BY THE ENGLISH REPRESENTATIVE OF THE CONGREGATIONALIST.

The Memorial Hall, in the heart of the city of London, is known to many Americans. Standing on the site of the old Fleet Prison, where were incarcerated victims of religious persecution in the reign of Queen Mary and Charles I., the hall was erected to commemorate the fidelity to conscience shown by the ejected ministers of 1662 and to provide accommodation for the Congregational library and denominational societies. The building was completed in 1874, and a new wing was added a few years ago. The library consists of more than 12,000 volumes of Nonconformist literature, besides some 16,000 pamphlets, tracts and sermons. The venerable Dr. Newth, formerly principal of New College, has recently done valuable service in classifying and cataloguing the collection. A recent addition to the hall, much appreciated by regular and occasional visitors, is a well-lighted reading-room, where the latest theological and other notable books can usually be seen. Persevering seekers may discover a ministerial smoking-room in a secluded part of the building.

As the official headquarters of English Congregationalism and the home of the denominational societies, the hall is a scene of continuous activity. Of the daily workers there, Mr. Woods, secretary of the Union of England and Wales, Mr. Mearns, secretary of the London Union and Mr. Burford Hooke, a man of multifarious labors, are early at their desks, and it would be hard to say which is the most industrious. Scarcely a day passes without a meeting of some kind being held. Jan. 7 was a busy day, the hall being then visited by most of the denominational leaders. One of the first to appear was Dr. Fairbairn, the kindly, genial, unassuming principal of Mansfield, Oxford. Then came Dr. Mackennal, ruddy and virile, the picture of health and peace, bringing with him a breath of strong, north country air, followed by Dr. Barrett, thinner, according to Mr. Woods, who ought to know, than when he started for America and the West Indies, but still not looking altogether an invalid, and certainly as brisk and pat as ever. Among subsequent arrivals were Dr. Guinness Rogers, "our veteran standard bearer," quick of eye and ready of speech, Dr. John Brown, of benevolent countenance, who, when he comes to town, usually divides his time between the Memorial Hall and the British Museum, and Mr. Albert Spicer, M. P., always fresh looking, well dressed and imperturbable. In the evening Dr. Newman Hall was seen striding about as though he were eighteen instead of eighty.

The first business of the day was the meeting of the co operating committee in connection with The Congregationalist's Pilgrimage. This committee consists of Dr. Rogers, Dr. John Brown, Dr. Mackennal, Dr. Barrett, Dr. Horton, Dr. Berry, Mr. Woods and Mr. Mearns. Having elected Dr. Mackennal chairman, and Mr. Albert Dawson secretary, the committee proceeded to discuss the arrangements for the reception of the party in England. Much pleasure was occasioned by the reading of a cordial letter from the Dean of Westminster, who said he would be very glad to do anything in his power to welcome the American Congregationalists and mentioned that after inspecting the Abbey they could meet and be addressed in the Jerusalem Chamber, which has witnessed many historic scenes and held many remarkable gatherings, notably the Westminster Assembly of Divines, who sat here more than five years formulating the assembly's catechism and confession of faith, and the Bible revision committee. The offer of courtesies from Dean Farrar at Canterbury was also greatly appreciated.

At Oxford the arrangements include lunch at Mansfield College, to be followed by a talk about the city by Principal Fairbairn, who will hold a reception in the evening. Letters promising hearty welcome were read from Congregationalists at Plymouth, Lincoln, Gainsborough and other places, one writer remarking that very happy memories abided of the visit of American brethren during the International Council and that some whose names had been mentioned in connection with the Pilgrimage were like personal friends. During the stay in London the point of assembly will be the Memorial Hall, where a room will probably be placed at the disposal of the visitors. Dr. Rogers will receive the party at Clapham in connection with the celebration of the 250th anniversary of Grafton Square Church. It transpired at the committee meeting that application has already been made by English Congregationalists to join the American party, and it is tolerably certain that an English contingent will accompany it to Holland. Some of the Pilgrims are sure to be in demand as pulpit supplies. Inquiries with this object have already been made, one by a Presbyterian minister.

In the afternoon the general committee of the Union assembled for its usual monthly meeting. Naturally the relations between America and England came up for discussion, and it was resolved to cable Dr. Hazen a message, which has doubtless ere this appeared in The Congregationalist. One happy result of the "war scare" has been to reveal the depth and intensity of the fraternal feeling between the two peoples and particularly between those who name the Name. One important matter now engaging the serious consideration of the committee is the education question in its threefold aspect of religious teaching in board schools, state aid to voluntary schools and the provision of higher education for the nation, irrespective of class or creed. The denominational statistics for the year have just been compiled. They show that there are in the Union of England and Wales and the Channel Islands Union 4,428 churches, branch churches and mission stations with 1,626,865 sittings, an increase in the year of 13,143. Add to this 4,428 the stations known to be supported by individual churches, and the figures for Scotland, Ireland and the islands adjacent to Great Britain and the total is 4,816. Of the 2,816 ministers in England and Wales, 127 are without pastoral charge, 74 are engaged in collegiate and 42 in secretarial work, and 327 are retired; 265 churches are without pastorates; 386 students are preparing for the ministry. The untimely death of Rev. W. Evans Hurndall, M. A., has caused deep sorrow throughout the denomination by which he was greatly respected. By his consecration, industry and evangelical zeal Mr. Hurndall bade fair to repeat in the West End the splendid success that attended his labors in the East End. Escape of gas fumes through accidental displacement of a stove chimney in Mr. and Mrs. Hurndall's bedroom has cut short the career of a most faithful minister and brought his wife to death's door. Thus Westminster Chapel, which had so much difficulty to secure a minister, is once more pastorless. Who knows but that Dr. Amory H. Bradford may again be approached?

With the New Year Rev. J. Morlais Jones has relinquished the chair of the London Congregational Union and assumed that of the National Union. The addresses of few Congregational chairmen have reached a higher level than those of Mr. Jones, the poet-preacher of Lewisham, and his deliverances from the more important position he this year holds are anticipated with unusual interest. A quarter of a century ago his uncle, Rev. Thomas Jones, occupied the chair and he too was known as "poet-preacher." Mr. Morlais Jones, need it be said, is a Welshman. Twenty-seven years ago he crossed the border in response to a call from Lewisham and there he has since remained, exercising a quiet but powerful and far-reaching ministry. A highly esteemed layman, Mr. Arthur Pye Smith, succeeds to the chair of the London Union.

The evening was spent in welcoming Dr. Barrett and Mr. Woods on their return from Jamaica and in discussing colonial Congregationalism. Just now the colonies are much in evidence, both politically and religiously. As Mr. Chamberlain has brought new life to the colonial office, so Mr. Burford Hooke has infused fresh spirit into the Colonial Missionary Society. Shortly after assuming the secretaryship he set out on a visit to the Congregational churches and mission stations in Cape Colony, Transvaal, Bechuanaland and Natal. He found that the need of the right kind of men was in some places greater than the need of money. In Zululand he was struck by the excellent work done by the American missionaries, who not only teach religion, but give instruction in trades and crafts. Shortly after Mr. Hooke's return, Dr. Barrett, representing the Colonial Missionary Society, and Mr. Woods, on behalf of the Congregational Union, went as a deputation to the churches in the West Indies. These churches are the fruit of the labors of the agents of the London Missionary Society. Among the early missionaries were Dr. Barrett's parents, who half a century ago went to Jamaica, where the future Norwich pastor was born.

Having decided to limit its operations to heathen countries, the London Missionary Society gradually reduced its subsidies to the churches of Jamaica and British Guiana. Industrial depression, however, prevented them from becoming self-supporting, and two societies guaranteed relief for five years. This aid came to an end two years ago, and the churches, being in a critical condition, chiefly through the continued decline of the sugar cane industry, appealed to British Christians—hence the deputation.

Although Dr. Barrett came from America and Mr. Woods from England, their vessels passed each other off Kingston. The original intention was to visit the churches in British Guiana as well as in Jamaica, but for several reasons this part of the program had to be abandoned. Dr. Barrett and Mr. Woods have come back with what is on the whole a cheerful report.

In Jamaica there are thirty-seven churches and eight pastors—five English, three colored—and Congregational church property is valued at £18,290. During the last twelve years, in which the churches have been learning to stand alone, membership has risen from 2,484 to 3,763, and Sunday scholars from 1,481 on the register to 2,266 in average attendance. Dr. Barrett testifies that the ethical standard of the people has distinctly risen in the last twenty-five or thirty years. Sins against purity and chastity are not unknown, but in every case they are visited with the displeasure and discipline of the church. The deputation was impressed with the reality, depth and beautiful simplicity of the religious life of the churches, their loyalty to Christian ordinances and fidelity to Congregational principles. Outside Kingston there is not a white man in all the Congregational churches of Jamaica, and their poverty is great, but the members cheerfully contribute according to their ability. Educational work is kept at a high level.

The deputation urge English churches to provide and maintain a supply of white ministers as the only means of preventing retrogression in the work so well begun early in the century. In the course of a rousing speech Dr. Mackennal, vigorously combating the idea that Congregationalism is not adapted to the Negro, effectively quoted from a speech he heard at the Worcester Council of American churches, when the color question was being debated, from the lips of a young cultivated Negro minister, who declared that only two churches had persistently refused to allow that color had anything to do with Christian fellowship or equality within the church—Roman Catholics and Congregationalists—and that if the Congregationalists deserted them they would be driven to become Roman Catholics. A gentleman from Johannesburg, who had been asked to speak on the progress of Congregationalism in the Transvaal, remarked that Christianity could hardly be expected to make headway under existing political conditions. He stated that his pastor, Rev. D. W. Drew, for whom a new church building was recently completed, has been denied by the government of Pretoria license to marry persons in his church, because four years ago he expressed sentiments hostile to the government.

Dr. Barrett said it was touching to meet the children of old slaves, who used to walk fourteen or more miles at midnight to obtain instruction without coming under the lash of the manager. He met a very large number of black women, all of whom seemed to have nursed him when a baby. Each of the delegates had a tale to tell at the expense of the other. Dr. Barrett narrated how, when Mr. Woods was crossing a river swollen by the tropical rains, the horse that drew the buggy suddenly broke the harness and calmly walked up the hill, leaving the unfortunate secretary in the middle of the stream; whilst Mr. Woods remarked that he understood any one in the clutches of a tiger never made any noise, but when in Jamaica he learned that a person set upon by a tiger ant made considerable noise, especially when, as on one memorable occasion, not one ant only but a thousand besieged a certain Doctor of Divinity. The Norwich people prepared a surprise for their pastor on his return. In his absence they subscribed £450 for the renovation of the building and the introduction of the electric light.

It is quite common to mistake our own incapacity for God's unwillingness to give. We cannot take more than our hearts and lives can hold, not even of the free and abundant grace of God. The limit of blessing for every man is the limit of capacity. Even God does not put more than a pint into a pint cup. Therefore God's richest blessing is the blessing of enlargement. When a soul submits to him he causes it to grow, so making room for more delight and larger power of use in every blessing. God's will to give may always be taken for granted. Our will to receive is not so sure. And when we are disposed to complain of our small share of spiritual blessing, may it not be best to ask ourselves whether it is not our will that fails and our littleness which cannot find room to receive? God's apparent grudging, we may be sure, is always a sign of our incapacity. What we most need, therefore, is a continual enlargement of soul which comes to men only from the continual presence of God's Spirit. God does not offer gifts at random, much less does he enlarge a soul which has no desire for him. He who thinks that spiritual capacity may be picked up anywhere along life's dusty road, and that one may set his heart upon the earth and then enjoy the full measure of a disciple's happiness besides, will surely be disappointed. However we may persuade ourselves to the contrary, the spiritual ambitions of the opening year will be the measure of its growth and its delight.

THE DEAR TOGETHERNESS.

I dreamed of Paradise—and still,
Though sun lay soft on vale and hill
And trees were green and rivers bright,
The one dear thing that made delight,
  By sun or stars or Eden weather,
  Was just that we two were together.

I dreamed of heaven—with God so near!
The angels trod the shining sphere,
And each was beautiful; the days
Were choral work, were choral praise:
  And yet in heaven's far-shining weather
  The best was still—we were together!

I woke—and lo, my dream was true,
That happy dream of me and you!
For Eden, heaven, no need to roam—
The foretaste of it all is home,
  Where you and I through this world's weather
  Still work and praise and thank together.

Together weave from love a nest
For all that's good and sweet and blest
To brood in, till it come a face,
A voice, a soul, a child's embrace—
  And then what peace of Bethlehem weather,
  What songs as we go on together!

Together greet life's solemn real,
Together own one glad ideal,
Together laugh, together ache,
And think one thought, "each other's sake,"
  And hope one hope—in new-world weather
  To still go on, and go together!

WHIFFS OF COMMON SENSE.

IV. THE AGE LINE.

BY MARION HARLAND.

Long life and happiness may be broadly stated as the sum total of human desire, so far as this world is concerned. The announcement that, in the last half-century, the average of human existence has been lengthened by five and a half years may well raise our hopes of the future of our race. Still more encouraging is the palpable truth that our men, and especially our women, wear better than their immediate forbears. We may, if we like, refer the circumstance to certain changes in the conditions of our sex peculiar to this day. The fact cannot be disputed that the majority of American women are younger by ten years than their mothers were at the same age. At fifty a woman speaks hopefully and reasonably of twenty years more of active employment and relishes life as keenly as at twenty-five. Her cheeks are plump, not withered, her eyes lively and bright instead of moving listlessly over the face of earth and man, nonexpectant of any good for one who has emptied the cup of mortal delights and turned it upside down. Even beyond the Scriptural limit of old age the modern woman of brains and energy still bears her torch aloft, well trimmed and burning.

The most active workers in our literary clubs are over forty years old, and the graceful fashion of chaperonage gives to matrons of still more mature age prominence in the gayest society. We hear daily of artists who never appreciated their own talents until their children were out of the nursery and they could gather and concentrate their forces, and of popular authors whose first books were written after they had passed their fortieth and even fiftieth birthday. Ours is the period of delightful surprises in the unlooked-for development of latent powers and the sustained usefulness of intellectual laborers. Climatic changes have had something to do with this increase of vitality and access of staying power in the national physique. Sanatory precautions, scientific skill and dissemination of hygienic principles have done more. The wise seize upon the blessed fact and avail themselves of the opportunities flowing from it.

Whence, then, should arise the growing disposition in our churches to divide workers of different ages into sections as decisively as if the bodies acted upon were sheep and goats? If a successful republic be a possibility, republicanism of the purest type should flourish in the Church of Christ, where the unity of the spirit and the bond of peace are the avowed principles of action. Much capital is made by chronic growlers of the preference showed by church people to the rich above the poor. Money is a power everywhere, and the church founded by a homeless Galilean Peasant is not an exception to the sweeping rule. The probability is that it will burrow, like a slug, in the heart of the bride of Christ, until he come to draw his own lines of separation.

Let us note here that it is nowhere enjoined that we shall love all the brethren alike, or consort with as much pleasure with the boorish and illiterate as with the gentle and learned. The Master had his beloved disciple. His followers do not sin in obeying the laws of harmony in the choice of intimates and friends.

None of these rules of natural selection explain the widening chasm between elderly and youthful members of the fin de siècle church. It contradicts the object-teaching of the times and is foreign to the polity of the children of this generation. Upon two occasions I have found myself in a position eminently favorable, as I imagined, for the study of the history of this "movement" and for the local rectification of the abnormal situation. In one case, learning, to my disgust, that a Young Woman's Guild was pointedly ignored by the older women of the "Tabitha Circle," I contrived at a meeting of this last, called to discuss important business, to have a Guild representative appear with a neatly-trimmed olive branch in hand. At a given signal from the chair she presented it with modest grace. It was an offer to unite with the "Tabitha" in the anniversary festival under consideration.

"If you will tell us how we can help you, we will do it," summed up the communication. It was heard in stony silence, and when pressed home upon Tabitha by the chair, it was dissected suspiciously and finally accepted ungraciously. The young would-be coadjutors were regarded as presumptuous and their organization as an invidious reflection upon the seniors, "who had conducted women's work in the church before these upstarts were born." The olive-branch was bruised and withered in the skirmish. Thereafter the two societies wrought separately and in rivalry so ungenerous that it approximated enmity.

In the second place the rebuff discourteous came from the Young People's Association. To the ambition natural to youth, the leaders of the band added the intolerance which would seem to be equally innate in adolescence. The age line these described was not merely deep and wide, but it bristled with prickly defenses. Length of years was prima facie evidence of imbecility and obstinacy. If oil, as represented by men and women who had crossed the dead line of fifty, arranged for lecture, concert, supper or a series of special religious services, vinegar, in the form of the younger element, held itself contemptuously aloof. "They think that the church can be run without us. Let them try it!" was the tone, if not the language, of the disaffected.

Oil bided its time, making meek references while laboring to Sanballat the Horonite and Tobiah the Ammonite, and, when livelier entertainments were projected by vinegar, patronized them under protest, "out of respect to the church it had upheld all these years." Such show of tempers would disgrace a poolroom. After the lapse of years I recall the experience with mental nausea and sickness of soul, for which the sole solace is the hope that these were extreme cases of the pervasive disease. "Variance, emulations and envyings" ripen fast into "wrath, strife and hatred." Their root is one and the same.

If age and experience ever count for anything anywhere they should be highly esteemed by believers in growth in grace and in such knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, as makes the veteran saint a wise mentor for the new recruit. For a quarter-century the cry of the church has been for young men in the pulpit. "Saplings well in front!" is the law in ecclesiastical husbandry. Maturity of judgment, ripe scholarship and knowledge of mankind and the world qualify men for honored places in other professions. The church, as represented by the average congregation, discounts all this when accompanied by age. With these latter-day prophets wisdom is no longer with the ancient, nor is understanding associated with length of days. So well known is this state of affairs that many devout hearts, borne under graying heads, no longer pray the Lord of the harvest to send laborers into his vineyard, and liberal hands withhold contributions from church boards of education, while hundreds of earnest and able clergymen, whose only disability is that they are on the wrong side of fifty, are unemployed.

Let this side of our subject pass; it is less deplorable because it affects fewer people than the outrush of the same prejudice toward men and women who have loved and served and prayed for the church during the long years that have sifted white ashes upon their heads—the years which have brought their children from babyhood to positions that, in their hasty judgment, justify them in laying strong young hands upon the rims of the Lord's chariot. Youth is not a fault that we should challenge it impatiently, neither is length of days a blunder. If, by divine appointment, the rich and poor meet together in the house and in the service of their common Maker, the sober thought and mellowed charity of the elder brother should temper (in love) the impetuosity of the younger.

"The heart without the head is too hot. The head without the heart is too cold. Make them work in partnership," wrote George D. Prentice to a young author. We may borrow the aphorism in pondering perplexedly upon a phase of church effort that is arousing the interest of the Christian world. We would not depreciate the motives and methods of ardent spirits eager to be set in the forefront of the battle. I do, as a lover of the young, protest for their own sake, and in the name of the church so dear to us all, against their distrust of those whom experience and calmer pulses dispose to prudence. In the campaign for which we are all enlisted the age line should never be so much as named among us, except when untried youth turns to maturity for counsel, and doubting age is stimulated to enterprise by his sanguine juniors. In the un-Christian altercation excited by the array of one of these parties against the other, there is usually—I might say always—fault on both sides.

"Do you see that phalanx of young people who have voted tonight for a motion involving the expenditure of $4,000?" said a gray-haired trustee to a visitor at a church meeting. "Out of the thirty odd who are crowing over their victory we will not get $100 to help carry out the measure they pushed through. Their organization is a 'side show' that controls the church."

In leaving the chapel the visitor was joined by one of the thirty odd. He glowed with his triumph, yet had a kindly, compassionate word for the vanquished party. "They mean well," he admitted, "but their joints are too stiff for the double-quick at which the church must move in these times. Old people are afraid of that which is high and young people are good for nothing unless they are high. We hitch our wagon to a star; they hitch theirs to a post. See?"

The visitor thought that she did see. Her conclusion was identical with that of the candid, middle-aged reader of this plain, sorrowful talk. It is a threadbare truism that the safe course lies between two extremes, but bare threads are in evidence of much use, and use implies value.

THE BIRTHDAY OF BURNS.

BY ELIZABETH PORTER GOULD.

The memorials of the Burns district come forcibly to mind at this anniversary of the poet's birth. Again we are in the little, low, thatched roof, white, clay built cottage in Ayr—

> Auld Ayr, wham ne'er a town surpasses
> For honest men and bonnie lasses—

by the side of the bed where Robert Burns first saw this world's light 137 years ago. The peculiar grate in the old-fashioned fireplace still gives the cheerful fire, while an adjoining room offers an opportunity to buy any of the many and varied Burns mementos. The father—the "farmer William"—who built the cottage with his own hands, lies with "Agnes Brown, his spouse," not far from the house in the Auld Alloway Kirkyard. The "auld brig," dating from 1250, still stands to remind us of Tam o' Shanter's escape that wonderful night, though the "new brig" of the poem is replaced by what is now called the new. The "bonnie Doon" still runs its own sweet course, the flowers still bloom on its banks and the birds still sing their songs in spite of the poet's lament—

> Ye banks and braes o' bonnie Doon,
> How can ye bloom sae fair?
> How can ye chant, ye little birds,
> And I sae fu' o' care?

In Dumfries the little house still stands in Bank Street to which, in 1791, the poet moved from his home farm in Ellisland, five miles away. Having been forced by failure of the crops to accept the government position of exciseman, Dumfries seemed a better place of residence. But his heart often turned to the little house he had built in Ellisland, where some of the happiest years of his life had been spent. There he wrote his Tam o' Shanter, which he called his "standard performance" and of which Alexander Smith said, "It was the best single day's work done in Scotland since Bruce fought at Bannockburn." There he wrote To Mary in Heaven and many other poems, and on one of the window-panes he cut with a diamond a favorite maxim of his, "An honest man is the noblest work of God."

When, with his Jean, three children and furniture, Burns moved from Ellisland to the little Dumfries house, he was about thirty years of age. His eyes were as full of fire as when Sir Walter Scott saw them, a few years before, in Edinburgh, and afterwards said, when recalling them, "I never saw such another eye in a human head, though I have seen the most distinguished men of my time." When settled in the new home, the poet writes to a friend how his life is spent: "Hurry of business grinding the faces of the publican and the sinner on the merciless wheels of the excise, making ballads and then drinking and singing them, correcting the press of two different publications." All this comes to mind to the student of his life when standing before the little Dumfries house, now marked with a tablet to his memory.

Other thoughts of Robert Burns are suggested by a visit to one of his favorite resorts still standing in the little Scotch town, the Globe Inn. In a room wainscoted to the top is the same table around which he and his friends spent convivial hours, and his favorite chair is unlocked from its case in the corner for the special use of visitors. What tales the old room could tell could it speak! Perhaps it is well it is silent, but who would not like the opportunity of culling the wheat from the chaff in the flow of wit and poetry which must have resounded from wall to wall? So I thought when sitting in the favorite chair, while an elderly man was remarking that he had come from another land to see if he could not get some of Burns's elixir of youth! He wanted some of the overplus of life that time had seemed to deny him. Perhaps it amounted to the same thing in the end, but my desire was to imbibe some of the tenderness for our common human nature which the poet in his best moments revealed. In another room in the Globe Inn Jean's workbox and chair and other Burns relics suggest the daily life. "Comin' thro' the rye" and Polly Stuart are said to have been cut on the window-panes by the poet himself.

But the most pitiful place in Dumfries, or in the world, associated with the poet Burns is the old, shabby, dirty-looking house in a lane—now dignified as Burns Street—leading out of St. Michael Street. Here he and his family lived the last three years of his life and here he died. Ah, the pathos of it, the abject poverty! When looking into the little rooms I could but think of the consolation he found when he wrote to a friend, "I know I must live and die poor, but I will indulge the flattering faith that my poetry will considerably outlive my poverty." And does it not? for in the midst of his poverty there he wrote, the year before his death, "A man's a man for a' that." Doubtless he was inspired there to heroic thought by his service as a volunteer in a corps raised in Dumfries to defend the country while the regular army was engaged abroad in war with France. Through Allan Cunningham's eyes we can see him, "with his very swarthy face, his plowman stoop, his large black eyes, and his awkwardness in holding his arms," as he marched with the regiment in "their white kerseymere breeches and waistcoat, short blue coat faced with red and round hat surmounted by a bear-skin, like the helmets of the Horse Guards."

The following year, July, 1796, the soldiers with muffled drums and arms reversed were following the dead body in the procession to St. Michael Churchyard. A mausoleum there now marks where the poet, his Jean and their children lie buried. The temple-like building, with its pilasters and domes covering a space of about twenty feet square, though not particularly attractive from the outside, contains a full-length marble statue of Burns guarded by an angel figure. Looking at this I was reminded of the real ministering angel, the young neighbor who—the wife being ill—ministered to the bard in the last sad days. She it was to whom he showed his gratitude by addressing to her the poem afterwards set to music by Mendelssohn, "O, wert thou in the cauld blast!"

But can such a mausoleum, with its lugubrious surroundings, ever be satisfactory to the lover of the simple bard, who found more delight in seeing a flower grow, a "mousie" run than in a Grecian temple? I could but ask this question again, when standing before the pretentious monument in Ayr erected seventy-five years ago by public subscription. Can this imitation of a Grecian temple on the banks of the bonnie Doon—fine as it is in itself—be an appropriate memorial to the simple Scotch bard, the flower of Scotch poetry? For a more satisfactory Burns memorial I turn lovingly to the simple monument in Dumfries, where at the feet of the marble statue of the poet-farmer, or farmer-poet, is the "mousie," "wee, sleekit, cow'rin', tim'rous beastie," having its full recognition among the other animals. This memorial, erected in 1882 by his friends, suggests nothing but the poet and his work; for on three sides of its pedestal are appropriate quotations from his poems, while the fourth has an inscription to his memory.

As the thoughts come of the Burns district, at this anniversary time, other places, such as Manchline, where Burns married his Jean Armour and spent some important years of his life, and Mossgiel farm, where he wrote some of his best-known poems, come in for a share. But all the country round about seems imbued with his earthly life. More and more are people seeking the famous haunts. Today it is said that twice as many pilgrims go to Ayr as to Stratford. It is a surprise to me that any lover of the bard passes by Dumfries in seeking the birthplace in Ayr; for, taking all things into consideration, no place is more tenderly, pathetically and suggestively connected with Robert Burns than Dumfries.

Last month differed in one respect from any preceding December since the beginning of the Christian era. There were two full moons during the month, and it is of unique interest that no such astronomical phenomenon has occurred since the year when Christ was born.

Prayer, which we deem so easy, is, when it is real prayer, the passion of an effort, the wrestling of a life.

We confess that we cannot live without a daily renewal of life. We confess that we cannot separate our life from the life of our kind. Consider earnestly what is involved in that acknowledgment. See whether it does not mean that every faculty of sense, feeling, perception is awakened in us by an impulse from above; see whether every such faculty does not remind us that we must go out of ourselves if we would be truly ourselves. To be always going out of ourselves, always in fellowship with the source of all good and truth, always communicating what we receive from it to those about us, this is the highest perfection we can dream of; this is the life of Christ. To be receiving nothing, to be communicating nothing, to be altogether shut up in self, this is that excommunication which we can hardly dream of; this must be the condition of devils.—F. D. Maurice.

If content and thankfulness, if the patient bearing of evil be duties to God, they are the duties of every day and in every circumstance of our life. If we are to follow Christ it must be in our common way of spending every day.—William Law.

So . . . comes a human voice,
Saying, "O heart I made, a heart beats here;
Face my hands fashioned see it in myself;
Thou hast no strength, nor mayst conceive of mine;
But love I gave thee, with myself to love,
And thou must love me who have died for thee."

—Browning.

Be thou my Sun, my selfishness destroy,
Thy atmosphere of love be all my joy;
Thy presence be my sunshine ever bright,
My soul the little mote that lives but in thy light.

—Gerhard Tersteegen.

Though we do but lisp, even though we address God without opening our lips, we may cry to him from the inmost recesses of the heart. When the whole direction of the inmost soul is toward God he always hears.—Clement of Alexandria.

Accept our thanks for the pain with which we are pained when we have consciously gone astray. We cannot slide from integrity or yield to it without sorrow and reproach. Accept our thanks for any weakness battled with and triumphed over and for any virtue achieved. We thank thee, too, that if we have our times in which the sadness, the severity of life is brought home to us, and are made to feel how much of evil and suffering are bound up in it, we have our times also in which its softer, brighter sides are impressed upon us, and we are glad for all the love, the beauty, the happiness that there is in the world. May the evil and the good alike be blessed, may life be to us always richly worth living while there is truth to seek and knowledge to gain and wisdom to be learned and duty to be performed. Strengthen us to stand in our lot till the end. Amen.

THE NEW AFTERNOON TEA.

Mrs. Shaler's article, in a recent number, on The Possibilities of the Afternoon Tea, so interested me that I am tempted to add a feeble plea for that higher social life which she suggests. I recently attended a "tea" where only five souls were present, but they were souls, and, though of different types, were congenial to each other. Everything was served daintily. There were high thoughts and many bright ones; there were fresh violets, too, and a song to finish, just as the setting sun threw golden waves over the little group. Delicious cocoa, dainty cakes and pretty china ministered to the physical and æsthetic sensibilities, but, above all, there was felt to be a spirit present, a spirit of friendliness and higher sympathy, which gave the real refreshment and a kind that is rarely afforded by the ordinary social function of the "crush" tea.

Nowadays we know, and are perhaps fond of, many people, but, instead of gathering all the different types about us in a "crush," once in three or six months, and entertaining them in a wholesale manner which can be, at best, but a poor expression of our cordial feeling towards them, why not have the different ones—"few and fit"—at a time, and have them oftener, giving ourselves the opportunity of more fitly expressing our feeling of friendly indebtedness and social obligation? Surely then it would not be the "Giggle, gabble, gobble, git" of Oliver Wendell Holmes, but "come, be refreshed, each by the other, be cheered, be gladdened and uplifted," separating, then, not with a sense of time wasted and worse, but of life newly flavored, even though only by an "Afternoon Tea."

TWO WAYS OF GIVING.

The holiday season which has just passed has brought to us all once more the thought of giving. I wonder if others as well as I have been meditating on the difference between generous giving and unselfish giving. The generous man gives more in quantity than the unselfish man, perhaps, but less in quality; he gives more of his substance, but less of himself. His giving probably wins more praise from men, but unless there has been sacrifice with it it wins far less of the praise of God. There have lately come to my notice two such givers. The one gave a goodly sum of money from his abundant store to be sent with a home missionary barrel. Every one said: "How generous!" It was; I do not wish to belittle the act in any way; but it cost the giver nothing. The other took from the back of her favorite rocking-chair the only tidy in her simple living-room, laundered it with loving care and sent it with a kindly greeting as a Christmas gift to the wife of a stranger missionary out in Washington. When she was remonstrated with for taking from her room almost the only adornment which the house afforded, she answered, cheerily: "O, yes, I want to do it. I can have other people's tidies to look at, but they, poor souls, perhaps have none." The first gift left behind it a sense of self-satisfaction; the second a feeling of humility. And is it not always so? Generosity and unselfishness may be counted synonyms, but there is often a world-wide difference between them, and unselfishness is incomparably the greater. When our Christmas giving is actuated by unselfish hearts it will repeat the spirit of our Lord.

Who gives himself with his alms feeds three—Himself, his hungering neighbor and me.

It seems to me that we must bear this difference in mind as we train our children in the difficult art of giving. It is hard to insist upon another's sacrifice of what is dear to him, but it is our duty to do so with our little ones. When my little daughter and I looked through her toy box at Christmastime to select something to be given to less fortunate children, it was a temptation to accept her natural decision to withhold those things which she enjoyed and to share those which she cared little for. But that was not the spirit to cultivate in the child; and when, later on, she saw the big eyes of the eager little girl who came, in response to our invitation, to get the basket of good things, my daughter's satisfaction in having given her best railroad train and her pet china chicken proved to her little mind, as to my older one, that unselfish giving had brought the keener joy.

The Conversation Corner.

Here comes the old Captain with his winter turn-out! Perhaps he was actuated to make the transfer from the "26" by Reuben's hint about an ice boat last week, or more likely by the various references in the previous Corner and Corner Scrap-Book to the dog-teams of the far north. It is certainly time for him to haul up his boat and take to runners, for it has been zero weather for several days and, although it is milder now, a northeast snowstorm is raging. (Just as I placed this sheet in the typewriter I heard the slow, deep-toned toll of the town bell; counting the strokes and noting the time between them, I knew it was the signal for no public school this afternoon—the children will like that!)

The first letter comes in very appropriately under this picture, for it is about Pomiuk, and he knew very well how to manage "komatik and dogs." Now, poor fellow, instead of driving dogs he has to lie in one position on his bear-skin at "Burnt Wood Cove." The letter was written from London by "Sister Williams," the English missionary who had charge of him in the shore hospital last summer before her return to England:

Little "Prince Pomiuk," who was exhibited in the Chicago Exhibition, was brought to Indian Harbor Hospital, Sept. 28, 1895, Dr. Grenfell having cared for him and nursed him for several weeks. With him came a sack with some very curious looking stuff in it, which on inquiry proved to be Pomiuk's food [raw], walrus and trout. The walrus was a very dark brown color, almost black, with a greenish oil oozing out of it—one could hardly bear to see it eaten, yet the first thing he wanted after recovering from the effects of chloroform was walrus and trout.

The poor little lad was in a very sad state, with wounds burrowing in all directions in his left hip, and his leg drawn up under him, with three long tubes inserted in the wounds. To make matters worse he developed whooping cough, yet bore it all with patience and without murmuring; indeed he was quite happy and would laugh merrily when I tried to say some Eskimo words. He was very musical; one had only to hum a tune and he would play it on his accordeon.

He was delighted with a horse and cart, and a Noah's ark with so many animals in it was a great wonder to him. One day he was shown a doll and his curious look of surprise was amusing. He was very much struck with the eyes, nose and mouth, and looking up said in Eskimo, "It is something like a baby!" He was shown another doll that had come to grief and lost its hair, but which on lying down closed its eyes. Pomiuk was very much afraid of it, and each time its eyes closed he popped his head under the bed clothes. . . .

Some of the responses to the first story about Pomiuk (Nov. 28) are very interesting. One offering is from "a Sunday school class in the Church of the Pilgrimage, the first church in New England." Another from the Junior Endeavor Society of the Pilgrim Church, Nashua, N. H., and adds, "The Corner will be eagerly watched for any news from Pomiuk." The following is from a well-known mission among the Sioux Indians in our own country:

FORT BERTHOLD, N. D.

Dear Mr. Martin: In a recent Sunday school lesson I told the story of the little Eskimo boy. My little Indian boys and girls were much interested and agreed that they would do what they could. They have very few pennies, but they gave their mites very willingly, and I am happy to send their collection of 100 cents. We shall be interested watchers for further news of Pomiuk in the "Corner." A. P. B.

That is Christianity—the poor Indian children of our Western tribes helping, "in His name," their suffering brother in far-off Labrador!

GOLDFIELD, IO.

Dear Mr. Martin: I enjoyed reading about Pomiuk very much in the Corner and I inclose . . . for him. Hope we may hear more about him in the future. H. P.

LAWRENCE, MASS.

. . . I was very much interested in the account and recalled seeing him at Chicago. Our company, numbering seven or eight, visited the "village" one day and were standing about him in a circle. He pointed with his stick to one lady and asked, "What is your name?" "Mary," was the reply. He repeated the question to the others, and the same reply was given three times—"Mary." This greatly pleased him and he said, "Free Marys!" A young man standing next to me wore a cap, on which were the letters, "U. S." I pointed to them and asked Pomiuk and he quickly answered, with a hearty laugh, "Columbus." MRS. B.

CHESTER, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am a little five years old girl, and my papa read me the story in the Corner and I want to help the poor little Eskimo boy. My papa is writing this for me and I am so sorry for poor little Pomiuk. I want to join the Cornerers. Can I?

J., Hartford, Ct.; S. L. W., Saratoga, N. Y.; M. S. W., Philadelphia, Pa.; Evan and Dora H., Ft. Berthold, N. D.; Mrs. F. A. G., besides anonymous letters.

Several letters received, too late for use, about the "Two Little Pilgrims." Helen C. of Galesburg, Ill., thought they were boys of about the same age, but not brothers. Edith B. of Sunderland, Mass., thought they were brothers and that "they must have a nice mother, they are dressed so neatly." Mary S. of Pittsfield says:

. . . They both have boy's collars and ties on, and mamma and I are surprised that so many think it is a girl. The picture in the Corner this week would be perfect if our friend in the chair had turned his face toward us. [Rather than trouble him to look around when he is busy, why don't you stand over by the Cabinet?—MR. M.]

Helen H. of Portland, Ore., thought they were "the same child, a boy about six years old, named Raleigh, the youngest in the family"—but she guessed one thing too many, for there is a smaller pilgrim there, saying nothing of Kitty Couzukebabian!

A gentleman in the Congregational House, who lives in the town of ——, told me, two or three days ago, that my "Two Little Pilgrims" while out on an errand went on a pond, broke through the ice and, if a man had not pulled him out, would have been drowned. But the brave little fellow went on his pilgrim way and did his errand before going home—but there ought to be two of him when he goes on the pond!

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

About Daniel Webster. His birthday was during the past week, and I have recalled the humble surroundings of his boyhood and his struggles for an education. It may be an encouragement to country boys, such as I frequently get letters from, who are beset with difficulties in trying to make their way, to note a little speech he once made:

You do me no more than justice when you call me the farmer of Marshfield. My father was a farmer and I am a farmer. When a boy on the hills of New Hampshire, no cock crowed so early that I did not hear him, and no boy ran with more avidity to do errands at the bidding of the workmen than I did.

The strange thing about his early education was his diffidence as a speaker. This is his own account:

There was one thing I could not do—I could not make a declamation. I could not speak before the school. Many a piece did I commit to memory and recite and rehearse in my own room over and over again, yet when the day came, when the school collected to hear declamations, when my name was called, and I saw all eyes turned to my seat, I could not raise myself from it. When the occasion was over I went home and wept bitter tears of mortification.

And yet this bashful boy conquered himself and became the greatest of American orators. The masterpieces of his eloquence in the United States Senate and on historic occasions have furnished declamations for thousands of other American schoolboys ever since, and still do so. His famous "First Bunker Hill Oration" (1825) is on the list of requirements for entrance to many of our colleges. A little book has just been published (Longmans, Green & Co.) containing the two Bunker Hill orations and those on Adams and Jefferson and on the Character of Washington, with notes and references for an essay on Webster. Such historic orations are far better to study and declaim from than the tame and flimsy collections which are so popular.

What Becomes of Old Engines? The Springfield Republican describes a train of ten worn-out locomotives that started from that city for Philadelphia, where a firm deals in such second-hand goods. Boys who have locomotive lists will take notice:

Part of this lot will be sent as far South as Tennessee and part to other places. They were numbered respectively 5, 23, 295, 438, 540, 550, 568, 574, 575 and 609. 568 was the old "Deerfield" on the Connecticut River Road and used to be a pet, but its day has long since passed.

Will Railroads Ever Be Used in the United States? An old man told me last week that when he was a young man, teaching school in Wenham, the Lyceum had a debate on that question. Most of the speakers thought it absurd. But in a few years he and many others rode to Boston on the absurdity and heard Daniel Webster deliver one of his great orations!

What the Boy Said About a Railroad Train. He lived in a remote region in Scotland, but once on a time accompanied his father to a village near which a branch line ran:

The morning after his arrival he saw a train go by. For a moment he stared at it with astonishment and then, running into the house, said: "Fayther, fayther, coom oot! There's a smiddy [a blacksmith's shop] ran off wi' a row o' houses, an' it's awa' doon by the back o' the toon."—London Telegraph.

What Another Boy Said. It was the undersigned, and, although not as old as the Lyceum man, he distinctly remembers talking it over with his contemporaries, when the railroad was still forty miles awa' (say at Springfield). The conclusion was: "We shall hear it coming, and see it over by the Baptist meeting house [a quarter of a mile east], and before we can look again, it will be over at the tavern [a quarter of a mile west]!"

ESSON FOR FEB. 2. Luke 5: 17-26.

THE POWER OF JESUS.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

Luke follows the account of the initiation f Jesus into his public ministry by his statement to his townspeople of the nature and urpose of his mission. Then Luke masses ogether a number of illustrations of our ord's miraculous power, thus showing how is wonderful claims were supported. That od sent him and that the Spirit of the Lord od was upon him were evident because the ower of God was present with him to control ature and to heal the sick. One of these inidents is the subject of our lesson. It preents the climax of his power. He can forive sin. In this vivid picture, which makes nown the most precious truth ever revealed o men, the points to be noted are:

1. The helpless sinner. He was a paralytic, hysically dead, yet conscious, with a body hich refused to obey his will. Jesus saw hat his moral nature was paralyzed, no longer ontrolled by his conscience. His sickness ay not have been the consequence of his sin. here are great sinners who have splendid hysical health and there are great saints ho are paralyzed. But there was an analgy between this man's physical and moral isease. Both were in themselves fatal. For either of them had he any remedy.

Our sin is a moral paralysis, gradually exending its influence over mind and body. ature knows no remedy for it. Moral and piritual life depend on vital connection with od, who is its source. The sinner has broken hat connection. Some sinners are conscious f this separation from God. Others appear ot to realize it at all. Their spiritual vitalty seems to have ceased.

2. Helpful friends. A great healer of disase had appeared in Galilee [v. 15]. He was olding public meetings in the sinner's own own [Mark 2:1]. But the sick man had no ower to get to Jesus. His friends had no ower to cure him, yet his restoration deended on them. There was only one who ould meet his need. They might have been atient and kind in their ministries and yet ave left him to go to his grave a paralytic. ut it was their prompt, persistent energy hich secured health for him. They took him n his bed as he was. They violated proprity. They invaded the rights of others. They roke in on a public meeting. They interupted the great Teacher in the middle of his ermon.

The unforgiven sinner is fatally diseased. nly Jesus can restore him. If he cannot of imself get to Jesus his friends must take vigrous measures in his behalf. The emergency pressing. Tomorrow the opportunity may ave passed. Let any one sit down and think n what it is for a soul to be lost, to go away, s Jesus said, into eternal punishment. Then et him think on what it is for a soul to go into fe eternal, to be forever with Christ. Let im apply these thoughts to his own unsaved riends, and will he hesitate at any steps hich seem likely to save them?

3. Forgiveness granted. The sick man's riends sought for him healing for his bodily isease. They had only one ground of appeal o him, and that was their confidence in his ower to heal. He never refused such an apeal. When Jesus saw their faith he granted eir request. The faith which he saw was ot belief in certain doctrines about him, but as simply confidence that he could give eeded help. He did not demand as a conition of giving help that men should have omplete or even correct knowledge of himelf or his mission. He only required that hose who applied to him should put their ase fully into his hands.

The method by which Jesus wrought the ure surprised those who saw it. He had beore rebuked fevers and they fled. He had said to the leper, "'Be thou made clean,' and straightway the leprosy departed from him." But he did not declare that this man's disease had vanished. He simply said, "Son, thy sins are forgiven." He pronounced the sick man morally clean and declared a most tender relation between the forgiven one and himself. Jesus did not come to mankind simply to drive away physical disease He came to ransom men from sin. He healed one to prove that the forgiveness of millions is genuine. Once he gave to his disciples miraculous power to cast out demons and heal sicknesses, in order that they might show that their mission was from him. He does not give such power now, for it is not necessary to his purpose. He gives more convincing evidence than that. When a sinner is restored to peace with God he has the greatest blessing that a sinner can have. Sickness cannot destroy it, and therefore it is a minor ill. He may even be glad to have his petition denied, and say with Paul, "I take pleasure in weaknesses, . . . in distresses, for Christ's sake."

4. Forgiveness proved. Those who heard this astonishing declaration, "Thy sins are forgiven thee," said nothing openly. They did not believe it was a genuine act, but the assumption of power to forgive sins shocked them. In their hearts they charged him with blasphemy. The sick man and his friends had to take his assurance on faith. When Jesus told the Scribes and Pharisees what thoughts were in their hearts [Mark 2: 6-8], he gave evidence of that discerning power which belongs to God. Yet so far he had not furnished convincing proof of his power. There was only one possible answer to his question to them. Of course it was easier to say, "Thy sins are forgiven thee," than to say, "Take up thy bed and walk," for only in the latter case could they see whether or not he had the authority he claimed. He forgave the sick man because of his faith and that of his friends. But he healed him that the Scribes and Pharisees, and we also, might know that "the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins." It is sometimes said that men can forgive sins. Only in a mediate, partial sense can this be true. The convicted sinner will never find peace by any assurance of forgiveness which he does not believe comes from God himself. The Jews rightly said that one who claimed authority on earth to forgive sins is either God or a blasphemer. Jesus proved his authority by a miracle of healing.

5. The proof accepted. The sick man carrying his couch and walking home was a fact not to be disputed. Those who witnessed it glorified God. Whether or not they also sought and accepted forgiveness of their sins we are not told. If they did not, they rejected their great opportunity. If they did, that was the best day of their lives.

The miracle of the manifestation of God through Jesus Christ, which has transformed nations, shed light from heaven into darkness and conquered death, is before us. He who has thus manifested God says to each of us, "The Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins." That is either a message so sweet and true that we see God in Christ and worship and obey him, or his words sound to us as blasphemy. The way the message strikes our hearts and affects our motives foretells our eternal destinies.

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE C. C. B. S.

During 1895 222 more churches have contributed to this important society than in any previous year. In the total annual receipts, amounting to $141,566, are included gifts from 2,600 churches, 104 Sunday schools, 143 Endeavor Societies and 342 women's missionary organizations. Every State and Territory, with the exception of Mississippi and Indian Territory, has contributed toward the work. By the payment of $18,500 from the parsonage loan fund, forty-two parsonages have been built or essentially improved, bringing into use parsonage property valued at $43,188; while $62,319 in the form of grants and $29,160 in the form of loans on 129 houses of worship have secured church property valued at $456,188. The church building loan fund Dec. 31, 1895, was $294,477, which has been distributed in the form of five-year loans among ninety churches. To the roll of honor have been added the names of twenty-two houses of worship and forty-two parsonages upon which accounts have been closed during the past year. Never in the forty-three years of its existence has this society been in more urgent need of funds, in view of the thirty-two left-over applications for aid requiring $21,575, and twenty-six other special calls for large and small sums, which would take the form of formal applications if warranted by the funds on hand.

THE OLD MISSIONARY CONCERT.

The regular monthly missionary meeting, known in past generations under the name of the "missionary concert," has ceased to become a feature in the majority of our churches. Some of them, which are fortunate enough to secure a good speaker, now and then give up their midweek prayer meeting to an address from a returned missionary or field secretary, but neither this nor the missionary meetings of the Women's Auxiliary or the Y. P. S. C. E. can fully take the place of the old-fashioned concert, which reaches all classes and ages of church members and, by throwing an individual responsibility upon them in preparing the programs, stimulates a desire for intelligent information and generates interest in and enthusiasm for the cause. We believe that the pastors are largely responsible for the decline of the monthly missionary concert. One of our correspondents writes that he has attended one Congregational church for twenty-one years and of his six pastors during that period not one ever took a step towards instituting regular church missionary meetings, and adds, pertinently, "It is not so very strange that the interest in missions in our churches is limited if the ministry does nothing to instruct."

Another reason why the monthly missionary meeting has died out is for want of fresh and original topics for study and discussion. But we can hardly plead such an excuse in this era. The missionary enterprise was never in so interesting a stage as at present, with its varied aspects and complex problems, and missionary literature was never so rich and abundant. Now, at the beginning of a new and eventful year, is the time to reinstitute the missionary concert as a regular feature of the church calendar. Let those who are responsible for laying the plans consult lists of topics prepared by others if their own ideas are not satisfactory. For foreign topics see those suggested by the American Board and the Woman's Board, or for subjects for home missionary meetings obtain the list proposed by the Woman's Home Missionary Association; while if a church desires to study the efforts and opportunities of our six Congregational societies, together with a few general subjects of current interest, why not adopt our list in The Congregationalist Handbook for 1896? An article in the current Missionary Herald dealing with this whole subject of the missionary concert will be found to be illuminating and convincing.

OUR OWN WORK.

American Board in Johannesburg. Many contributors to the American Board never heard of Johannesburg in the Transvaal until within the past few weeks, yet two of the workers connected with the Zulu Mission, Mr. and Mrs. Goodenough, began an interesting enterprise in that city more than two years ago with gratifying results. While on a visit to Johannesburg for the purpose of looking after some of the Zulus from Natal, who had gone to work in the gold fields, Mr. Goodenough was impressed with the favorable opening for missionary work among the 100,000 natives working in the mines along the Witwatersrand and in Johannesburg. He wrote that many of the Zulus from Natal had been trained in our mission schools, and these, with others of the tribe, could be reached and helped by church services conducted in their own language. Moreover, they would be glad to find a friend in the missionary in a land where they often need a white friend, for the black man has no standing, can own no land and must have a monthly pass to stay in the city at all. The law does not recognize native marriages and treats the natives more like cattle than men. This opening for city missionary work Mr. Goodenough and his wife entered with vigor, and were welcomed with such enthusiasm by the Zulus that in a few months a new chapel which accommodates 300 was built and filled every Sunday with the Natal Zulus. A large share of its cost was contributed by the natives themselves, who, poor as they are, know how to be generous and have also assumed responsibility for a part of the current expenses of the work. Evening evangelistic meetings at the native quarters and open air services have also been successfully established. Of the latter Mr. Goodenough writes: "It required some courage to hold such a meeting, for the prejudice against blacks is all-pervading here. I saw one white man turn away with a look of contempt on his face because Mrs. Goodenough let a black boy sing out of the same book with her."

Co-operation. Christian Education calls attention to the fact that through the harmonious agency of five societies an educated Christian Mexican, Mr. Moya, and his wife are at work among their own people in the village of San Mateo, N. M. Mr. Moya graduated last summer from the Training School in El Paso, supported jointly by the C. E. S. and the A. B. C. F. M., and Mrs. Moya is a graduate of the girls' school in Chihuahua, Mexico, under the charge of Rev. J. D. Eaton, missionary of the American Board. They were recently married by Rev. G. E. Birlew, a pastor supported by the C. H. M. S. in San Rafael, and the young couple have been sent to San Mateo under the auspices of the C. E. S., with money furnished by the New York Woman's Home Missionary Union, to reopen a mission school once taught by Miss Virginia Dox under the direction of the New West Commission.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Feb. 2–8. Laborers Together with God. 1 Cor. 3: 6–23.

In a certain sense all our daily labor relates to the progress of the kingdom, and we have a right to believe that honest, faithful toil in the service of a worthy enterprise may, in the large way of looking at life, be considered co-operation with God. But our Scripture passage sets forth manifestly the conditions of special spiritual work. Paul is thinking of the efforts which Christians put forth to bring their fellowmen into a saving relation with Christ and to establish his rule in the hearts of all men. And this is certainly a part of our Christian duty. Something is wrong if we are not anxious to save people about us from their sins and to sustain those special agencies that endeavor to lift and educate the spiritual nature. Our encouragement in this undertaking, the apostle reasons, is that God is working with us.

The thought is, first of all, a source of enthusiasm and a guarantee of ultimate success. We are interested in a certain individual. If we were to approach him on the subject of his soul's salvation, relying simply on our poor, halting way of setting forth the Christian life, it would seem often a hopeless task, but to remember that before we thought of this friend God has preceded us in his own striving with that heart, that he will be with us when the difficult and dreaded effort is made, and that he will continue with the soul after we are gone and press home the truth which we have tried to utter, brings a great access of strength and inspiration to us.

It is equally true in respect to any larger enterprise to which we commit ourselves in connection with others. Some of the strongest and noblest causes that today are scattering light and blessing in all parts of the world have grown out of the faith and hope of two or three men. If we go back to the beginning of almost any of our prosperous churches we find that at the start they were feeble, subject to hostile criticism, despised by the world, but a certain few devoted believers, trusting the leading of Providence, committed themselves without reserve to this special form of service for God and man, and the outcome of their labors justifies what to others seemed at first foolishness and perhaps madness.

Another advantage of working with God is that we learn God's way of doing things. It is almost essential for success in business to enter into the spirit and method of the firm with which you associate yourself. This is the safeguard against unwise and fruitless ventures in Christian work. A man who lives near to God learns something of the purposes of God, catches a little of the tranquillity of God in his activities, acquires the persevering habit, is not daunted by the misrepresentation and harsh judgment of others and quietly and hopefully toils on sure of the final outcome. To share in God's work and to do our part, not thoughtlessly or impulsively, but striving to forge our link in such a way that it will fit into the chain of God's purposes, is the ideal toward which we should strive.

HOW ONE EMPLOYER AVOIDS STRIKES.

I have a friend in Washington who is the president of a great manufacturing establishment in the West. He told me last year that in twenty-five years' experience they never had had any difficulty in their works. There never had been a strike, there never had been any reduction of wages during that whole period; and yet there had been a constant reduction in the price of their goods and in their cost. A neighboring establishment has a strike about every year. The manager of this, seeing the prosperity of my friend's establishment and its freedom from difficulties, came to him when they were suffering from a strike, and said: "Colonel, what is the secret of your management? What do you do to escape strikes and these labor troubles?" "Well," the colonel said, "I probably do some things that you would not." "Well, what is that? I want to learn." "To bring the thing down to a point, let me say that we have now on our pay-roll a man who has been with us twenty years—a skillful man, who knows his business. We never have reduced his wages. He has been sick on his bed six months, and is likely to be there several months more. Yet his name stays on our pay roll. Now, you wouldn't do that." "No," he said, "I wouldn't." "Very well," said the colonel, "have your strikes."—Hon. Carroll D. Wright.

CONDENSED NOVELS.

Mr. W. T. Stead, that restless and effer-scent Englishman, who always means ell and often does considerable good, en when his zeal outruns his discretion, s proposed to publish a series of repro-uctions of the masterpieces of the leading ovelists in so condensed a form that they n be sold to the reader at a penny, i. e., ro of our cents, apiece. He would repro-uce the best chapters in full and all the ost famous scenes, most brilliant descrip-ons of character and most thrilling inci-nts. The remainder of each work he ould boil down into a very brief compass. e expects to condense novels containing 0,000 to 300,000 words into from 30,000 to ,000 "without destroying the aroma of e original and without omitting any of the st passages of the author."

This plan already is in process of exe-ution and its success or failure will be atched with considerable interest. The rst novel to be treated thus is Mr. Rider aggard's "She," and 250,000 copies of the rst condensed edition are to be printed. he theory is that, as penny editions of the ets have succeeded, penny popular edi-ons of the leading novelists ought to suc-ed. But apparently the theory overlooks at the poems were not condensed in the me manner proposed for the novels. The urpose in view, that of increasing the pub-c knowledge of the best literature, is emi-ently laudable, although there may be me question whether such stories as She" represent that class of literature. ut we doubt the success of the scheme. condensed novel always bears the marks f its condensation too plainly. It is like ndensed milk, a very different thing from e real article, and by no means equally dapted to be popular.

BOOK REVIEWS.

STUDIES IN THEOLOGIC DEFINITION.

The special feature of this volume, the ork of Rev. Frederic Palmer, rector of hrist Church, Andover, Mass., is its inter-retative quality. It is elucidative and xplanatory, setting forth with clearness any things which often are accepted more r less unconsciously. It is one of the ooks which will reveal to many readers at they have much in common beyond hat they were aware of.

It discusses some of the vital doctrines of e gospel—the being and character of God, he incarnation, salvation, forgiveness, the tonement, etc.—and it deals with them in n unusually helpful manner. The chapter n the incarnation brings out effectively he need of Christ's life to reach its climax n such a death, but rightly putting more mphasis than used to be put upon the sig-ificance of this life in itself. That on the tonement also embodies sound and vital octrine in exceptionally intelligible sen-ences.

The church in his thought represents the rganic relation of God to humanity, and oth the spirit and substance of what is aid are generally judicious and admirable. ut he does not appreciate the jealousy ith which the independence of the local hurch is guarded among Congregational-sts. The organic mutual relation of the ifferent parts of the universe is urged trongly and the development of the organic lement of Christianity in intellectual and spiritual directions is one thing which he strongly purposes to show.

Plain people can understand this book yet profound thinkers will find it well worth their attention. To mediate between learning and untrained intelligence, to help thoughtful seekers after spiritual light and truth to realize how much they already have, how to gain more, and what more to strive after—to do these things and to do them well is to deserve high praise, and Christians of all forms of faith will find much to approve in these pages. If any are disturbed at first by some differences from their accustomed phraseology they will find the substance of the truth carefully preserved and honored. The volume is one which most readers will read a second time. An appendix contains an able critique of the "Andover Movement." [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.]

RELIGIOUS.

Temptation and Toil [Thomas Whittaker. $1.50] are the respective subjects of two series of religious addresses which form a volume by Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken, an English clergyman somewhat well known for popular and even evangelistic labors. They are eminently practical and also embody the results of a great deal of careful and sometimes profound reflection. The sermon or address upon The Temptation of the Perfect Man is somewhat striking. The ordinary reader will find new and useful thoughts suggested to him, and he who already has traversed the ground which the discourse covers will be grateful for the clear and telling statement of truth which is here afforded. There are eight discourses upon Temptation and they bring out a large variety of aspects of the subject and uniformly handle it with a masterly grasp and make stimulating spiritual impressions. The second part of the book upon Toil is similar in manner and equally to be commended, although from the intellectual point of view it is less elaborate, but the subject does not call for profound treatment.

The Bennett lectures for 1895 have been published with the title Light on Current Topics [Massachusetts New Church Union. $1.00]. These lectures, endowed by the late Mrs. Eleanor Bennett, are devoted to the inculcation of the teaching of the Swedenborgian, or New, Church, so called. In the year 1895 six lectures were delivered upon this foundation upon the following topics: Theosophy and Religion, by Frank Sewall; The Right and Exercise of Ownership, by J. K. Smythe; The Divine Law of Use and Its Application to Industrial Problems, by Albert Nason; The Relation of Church and State to Secular Affairs, by S. S. Seward; Pauperism and Crime, by T. F. Wright, and Natural and Spiritual Health, by James Reed. There is much in the book which is timely and of great interest to Christians of all names, but the members of the New Church of course will appreciate them most highly. It is useful for us all, however, to learn to look at such subjects from each other's points of view and something may be learned about Swedenborgianism in its relation to the study of truth from these pages as well as about the topics more specifically considered.

Rev. A. R. Buckland is the author of Women in the Mission Field [Thomas Whittaker. 50 cents], a little book intended to indicate the recent growth of women's work in connection with foreign missions and to point out both the perils and the joys which beset such missionaries. There are sketches of Sophia Albrecht, Charlotte Tucker, better known by her nom de plume A. L. O. E., Mary Riggs and others in the book, which is very simple and unpretending, but makes a clear and striking impression.

Dr. Lucy R. Meyer has edited The Shorter Bible Chronologically Arranged [Hunt & Eaton. $2.50]. It is an abridgment of the Bible and its component parts are synchronized. Bishop J. H. Vincent has supplied the introduction. Whether the condensation of the Bible is much to be desired or not is questionable. We confess to a strong preference for the accustomed form, but, if condensation be desired, Dr. Meyer's work appears to be a good example of judicious and skillful effort in that direction. It is printed neatly and even handsomely.

Another little book intended to promote Christian Endeavor work and spiritual progress in young people in general is Guidance in Prayer [Presbyterian Board of Pub. & S. S. Work. 50 cents]. It has been prepared by M. E. H., and Rev. Dr. J. R. Miller has furnished the introduction. The prayers impress us favorably, but not strikingly. We have no doubt, however, that those who desire aid in this direction may find them useful, and their use may stimulate the unready to more natural and extemporaneous prayer.

STORIES.

A story with a moral is no longer either novel or specially attractive on that account, but a good story with a moral makes a deeper impression than any other. Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson's new book, The Temptation of Katharine Gray [A. J. Rowland. $1.50], is too long and too improbable, yet it does not lack elements of strength and even deep interest. The moral enforced certainly is important and the manner in which it is impressed is effective, yet too much is undertaken in the plot and the various loose threads are gathered up and interwoven finally in a manner which is decidedly more probable in a story than in life. But in spite of its faults it is a bright, stirring, high-toned volume, which will convey needed warning to many readers and perhaps equally needed inspiration to others, and which is likely to be a favorite in the Sunday school library for a long time.

Dean Farrar certainly wields a versatile pen. We are not clear whether his volume just sent us, Gathering Clouds [Longmans, Green & Co. $2.00], is a new book or one of his earlier productions reprinted, but in either case it is a powerful and touching story of the days of Chrysostom, who is its chief hero. Its extraordinary length bears witness to the engrossing nature of the labors of its author. He has not had time to be terse and the voluminousness of its style is a literary defect, yet one which does not diminish the effect of the story as much as might be expected. The author has drawn a vivid picture of the church quarrels of the time, of the rivalries of different individuals and schools of thought, and the striking contrast between the self-sacrificing piety of Chrysostom and the selfish and corrupt ambition of most of the contemporary bishops, and the pathetic develops into the dramatic and the dramatic into the tragic ere the story closes. If the author could have written it in two-thirds its length it would have been a far better piece of work, but as it is it is a credit to his inventive and descriptive powers and does equal honor to his heart.

The contrast as one turns to Hamlin Garland's new book, Rose of Dutcher's Coolley [Stone & Kimball. $1.50], is almost painful. Dean Farrar's book is an example of old-fashioned novel writing, Mr. Garland's of the fin de siècle type. No honest critic can deny that the book exhibits real, considerable and, now and then, exceptional power, and no such critic can fail to note the undercurrent of sensuousness, which almost becomes sensuality at times, which, whether intentionally or not, is the most conspicuous feature of the book. It would have been easy, by altering a comparatively few expressions here or there, to have so modified this feature of the work as to have rendered it unobjectionable. But, although it is more suggestive than outspoken, the book belongs with the school which is characterized as a whole by morbidness on the subject of the body. There are clear and strong portrayals of character, fine bits of descriptive work and other evidences not merely of the author's possession of the literary instinct and of considerable mastery of his art but also of his capacity to do work of a very high and noble order, but in this book he has written too often with the eyes of his mind cast down instead of elevated.

Charles and His Lamb [Charles H. Banes. 75 cents] is by Miss Marshall Saunders, author of that charming, impressive and popular story of a year or two ago which was also an effective plea for kindness to animals, Beautiful Joe. This new tale is very short and simple but is equally telling and will take a strong hold, especially upon the younger children. It is dramatic and pathetic in its utter simplicity and artistic with an art which reveals itself by concealing itself.

ESSAYS.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe has been known for some years as an agreeable and thoughtful essayist. Identified as she has been with the woman's suffrage movement so largely that many of the general public never think of her in any other connection, it is well that she should remind the world that that supposed reform does not bound and limit her life. She has long been known to a considerable circle of friends as a thoughtful and at times brilliant writer and speaker, and the book just issued, which contains seven of her essays and which bears the title of the first one, Is Polite Society Polite? [Lamson, Wolffe & Co. $1.50] will do much to enliven public appreciation of her conspicuous power. These essays are on a variety of subjects, chiefly literary and social, and they reveal the sincerity as well as the frankness of the author and illustrate the high quality of her literary culture.

Mr. Gamaliel Bradford, Jr.'s, little volume, Types of American Character [Macmillan & Co. 75 cents], is little only in form and appearance. Its seven papers on the American Pessimist, Idealist, Epicurean, Philanthropist, Man of Letters, The American Out of Doors, and As a Scholar, contain the conclusions and indicate something of the processes of conscientious and remunerative reflection. A high ideal is kept in view, although certain positions may be open to question. The literary form of the work is exceptionally choice. The author possesses an uncommonly pure and telling style.

POETRY.

Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons have brought out a book called Love and Laughter [$1.25] by James G. Burnett. It is a memorial volume and the portrait of the author is its frontispiece. Most of its contents have appeared in one or another of the magazines and journals, but it is a collection of verse which in an unusual degree is sparkling and entertaining. The poems are mostly prompted by sentiment and feeling and few go much below the surface of things, but they are the productions of a skilled hand, even if a young one, and abound in promise the fulfillment of which must be elsewhere.

Another book of poems is Nymphs, Nixies and Naiads [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.] by M. A. B. Evans. It embodies legends of the Rhine in verses which are musical and diversified and which those familiar with the Rhine region will read with special interest.

Those of our readers who are Knight Templars will read with interest a historical poem by Mr. G. W. Snow, which is called The Martyrdom of Jacques De Molay [$1.50], last Grand Master of the antique order of Knight Templars. It is carefully studied and is animated by warm zeal for the order to which the author belongs, and, although it varies considerably in respect to poetical merit, it is graphic and vivid throughout and is worth being read for its portrayal of striking scenes of the past.

A Doric Reed [Copeland & Day. 70 cents] is a collection of poems by Zitella Cocke, whose contributions of verse to our columns have commended her to our readers. Some of the poems are full of color, reflecting the life of the South from which Miss Cocke comes. Others are introspective and spiritual, revealing her study of profoundest problems of life and belief in their solution through Christian faith. A few are cast in the mold of some of Herrick's best verses. But best of all are the thirteen sonnets, some of which in their analysis of the characteristics of the great masters of music indicate subtly the love which Miss Cocke has for the art which Sidney Lanier said was "love in search of a word." The typography of the volume is attractive, it being one of a series which the publishers designate as the Oaten Stop Series.

BOOKS ON ART.

The late Philip Gilbert Hamerton attained an influence as an art critic which will long continue. His volume, Imagination in Landscape Painting [Roberts Bros. $2.00.], is adapted rather for art students than for the general reader, but is likely to be profitable to any one disposed to reflect seriously about art. The relation of the imagination with memory and with feeling and the conception and execution of artistic work are dwelt upon in these chapters with a lucidity and a skill which render them not only intelligible but interesting to an ordinary reader, while the art student will gather from them a wealth of suggestion which only he can appreciate. More advanced artists may be interested in the book as declaring its author's opinions, but hardly will regard it in the same degree as deserving of study. It is illustrated with some fullness and will perpetuate the recollection of the author's unusual power of clear and impressive utterance upon matters often obscured instead of illumined by discussion.

Another very suggestive treatise is Considerations on Painting [Macmillan & Co. $1.25] by John La Farge. These lectures were given in 1895 at the Metropolitan Museum in New York. They were uttered directly to students and are intended mainly for students, although other auditors listened to them and were expected to do so. The six lectures form a volume somewhat less technical than Mr. Hamerton's, yet instructive not merely in matters of detail but even more impressively by the laying down of broad and comprehensive principles of art which are fundamental. The chapters on illusions and on sincerity recall a little Mr. Hamerton's pages, and the volume, although very different from his, might well be read by the young art student in connection with it. The success of the author, both as an artist and as a teacher, abundantly qualifies him to speak to others on the subject.

Painting, Sculpture and Architecture as Representative Arts [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50] is another volume by Prof. G. H. Raymond, L. H. D. It is an essay in comparative æsthetics and applies to the arts of sight, the principles laid down in his former volume called Art in Theory, in which the correspondence between the principles and the factors of representation in the arts of sound and of sight are set forth. The volume is one of a series by the same author which are adapted to use either as textbooks or for general reading and study. This is one of those best adapted to instruction. It is a scholarly book and its plain and easy style will aid its success.

Studies in the Science of Drawing in Art [Ginn & Co. 90 cents] by Aimée O. Moore is a book of such details and directions as a drawing teacher would find it necessary to suggest to his class. Used in class work or in connection therewith it will be found eminently serviceable. If studied apart from such work the student will find it helpful in a considerable degree, although such study can be pursued only with difficulty, if at all, independently.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mrs. Oliphant, novelist and historian, has made a conscientious compilation of the results of the studies of experts and has embodied them in an attractive volume The Makers of Modern Rome [Macmillan & Co. $3.00]. It is in four books, one dealing with Honorable Women, a second with The Popes Who Made the Papacy, a third with The People and the Tribunes of the People and a fourth with The Popes Who Made the City. It is an intelligent and thoroughly interesting study of the growth of the modern city and of the influences which have shaped that growth. It is long, too long, but the reader will acquire a general conception of the subject which will be easily retained and will be trustworthy, and will also have gained possession of a considerable mass of material in the shape of facts. Mrs. Oliphant's name is sufficient warrant of the workmanlike skill with which the book has been compiled and the publishers have illustrated and otherwise issued it in a very attractive form.

The Merriam Company also has brought out an edition of the first volume of Constant's Recollections of the Private Life of Napoleon [$2.50]. It has been translated by Walter Clarke. We reviewed the other edition a week or two ago and will merely call attention to this one as apparently well translated and of course possessing the same interest so far as concerns the mean-ng of the original text. It is issued in ffective covers.

It is possible to exaggerate physical ten-lencies and dangers, especially those con-nected with the subject of heredity, which las become something of a hobby of late. Ve do not mean that the dangers involved hould be overlooked, but there is no need f being alarmed over them unduly. Such book as Dr. Forbes Winslow's Youthful Eccentricity a Precursor of Crime [Funk & Vagnalls. 50 cents] seems to us to go too ar. It is quite true that there is beneath he teaching of the book a possible basis of ruth. Nevertheless it does not follow as a natter of fact and common observation hat eccentricity in a child necessarily is vidence that the child will become a crim-nal. We do not suppose that Dr. Winslow ntended to be understood to take such ex-reme ground, yet the tendency of his book s rather in that direction. We heartily pprove, however, of his earnest recom-nendation of remedial effort aimed at edu-ation of both heart and head. In our udgment the mere cure of eccentricity is ften reward enough even if the subject be n no danger of lapsing into crime. There s something pitiful in many of the eccen-ricities which one observes in people who, t is clear, could have been rendered more greeable and probably more useful in the vorld by timely and suitable training. The endency of this book will be to bring about hat result.

The plan avowed by Susan P. Lee, author f A School History of the United States [B. F. Johnson Pub. Co. $1.50], is that of iving to the children and youth of the Jnited States, and especially those of the Southern States, a fair, just and interest-ng account of the whole country. It avows tself to be a Southern book, in the writing nd publishing, and hopes to commend tself especially to the Southern public, although professing to avoid all purpose f exciting prejudice at the North. We annot commend the book as we should like o. There is much in it which is true and mportant but much which is misleading nd inadequate. Without going into de-ails, it is enough to say that the account f the outbreak and progress of the War f the Rebellion is not such as public senti-ment should approve or as scholarly criti-cism can indorse. It is better adapted to uit the feelings of those of our Southern ellow-citizens who are still more or less nreconciled to the result of the war than t is to accord with the conclusions of those who have studied both sides with impar-iality. Moreover, the period of the Rebel-ion is given too much relative space and he generation which has intervened since he war is passed over in far too hasty and ummary a manner. Neither in arrange-ment, nor style, nor in scholarly exactness does this appear to be a first-rate work. It certainly should not be put into the public schools.

In her book Making Friends and Keeping Them [Pilot Pub Co. 50 cents] Miss Kath-erine E. Conway has added a second volume to her series of sensible talks supposed to be given in the family sitting room. In chapters with such titles as On Demanding Gratitude Not Due, On Doing Too Much for a Friend, The Friends of Our Friend, The Friends of Our Enemy, etc., Miss Con-way has voiced views which if accepted and assimilated by young people, and especially young women, society would be her debtor.

NOTES.

—— All of the unpublished writings of the late Alexander Dumas, the younger, are to be burned, by his order.

—— Dr. George Macdonald, when he wrote Lilith, expected it to be his last work, but al-ready has begun another.

—— A copy of Henry Esmond, given by Thackeray to Charlotte Brontë and bearing an inscription, has recently been sold in Lon-don for $100.

—— The late Prof. H. H. Boyesen once said that he never felt that he actually had con-quered the English language until he had be-gun to dream in it.

—— It is now understood that Mr. Watts's memoir of Dante Gabriel Rossetti never will appear, and that the full truth concerning his life never will be told. So states The Critic.

—— The English courts have decided—in the case of the Bishop of Hereford vs. Griffin, in 1848—that copyright rests in the author except so far as he specifically parts with it, and that the right to publish matter in one form does not authorize the use of it in an-other form.

—— "The great dictionary century"—so The Critic thinks the closing century will be called. Webster, Worcester, the Imperial, The Century, Stormonth's, the Standard, and others in English not to mention any in other tongues, are proofs of the justice of the ex-pression.

—— An example of the power of pluck and persistence is the Russian painter Vereschagin's use of his right hand in his work. He lost the thumb long ago and the middle fin-ger is permanently crippled, as a result of a wound in war, while his right arm also has been broken by a fall.

HON. CHARLES THEODORE RUSSELL.

Congregationalism has lost one of its most eminent leaders in the sudden death, Jan. 16, at his home in Cambridge of this distin-guished lawyer, citizen and philanthropist, who was ex-mayor of Cambridge and father of ex-Governor Russell. He was born in Princeton, Nov. 20, 1815. His ancestors were among the Puritan immigrants to Boston about 1640. After graduation from Harvard University, where he ranked among the fore-most scholars in his class, and after a course in the Harvard Law School, Mr. Russell was admitted to the bar in 1839. In 1845 he en-tered into a partnership with his brother un-der the firm name of C. T. & T. H. Russell, which has continued to the present time. His first public office was that of member of the Boston school committee early in the forties, when he alone of all the committee took a stand in favor of admitting colored children to the public schools on an equality with white children. The following year he was dropped from the committee, but under the influence of Phillips and Garrison the Anti-Slavery Society presented to him com-plimentary resolutions. Mr. Russell was a member of the lower house of the legislature in 1844, 1845 and 1850, and of the Senate in 1851, 1852, 1877 and 1878, and in 1861 and 1862 he served as mayor of Cambridge, where he resided after 1855.

In numberless other ways did this eminent man minister to the public good and promote the causes of philanthrophy, Christian educa-tion and evangelization. He had been pro-fessor in the Law School of Boston University from its foundation. He was for many years one of the Board of Visitors of Andover Theo-logical Seminary and served as secretary of the board. He was also a corporate member of the American Board, a member of the American Oriental Society, of the Boston Y. M. C. Association—of which at times he had been vice-president and president—of the Congregational Education Society, of the So-ciety for Promoting Theological Education Among the Indians and of the Massachusetts Bible Society. He had served as president of the Congregational Club and was at the time of his death president of the Board of Minis-terial Aid.

The impressive funeral services at the Shep-ard Memorial Church last Sunday were con-ducted by Dr. McKenzie, and the large assem-blage testified to the esteem in which Mr. Russell was held by the legal profession, by the highest officers of the State and by the public generally. Formal action had been previously taken by the Cambridge city gov-ernment, and flags were at half mast through the day. This quotation from Dr. McKenzie's tender tribute justly estimates the dead man:

Wise and prudent, he built no wall about his thoughts, about his beliefs, his purposes. He was as ready to teach the divine truths of Christianity as the statutes of the State. He was as simple in his faith as he was profound in his reasoning, and was conscious of a di-vine life.

S. M. SAYFORD, THE COLLEGE EVANGELIST.

BY ROBERT E. LEWIS, BOSTON.

About eight years ago, during a series of evangelistic meetings in Amherst, a student who had been reclaimed to Christ turned Evangelist S. M. Sayford's life into a new channel. Since then he has gone from college to college bearing the dying message of this Amherst student—"Tell him to plead with the fellows in college to be first-class Christians."

This message gave form to the movement in which Mr. Sayford is the leading spirit in American student life. The work may be briefly described as a straightforward presentation in public address and private interview of the claims of Jesus Christ, and a fearless denunciation of the "little vices" and secret sins of college students.

Though his work among students is evangelistic in principle, it is not always so in form. During his recent campaign among the professional students of Boston a non-Christian said to me: "Yesterday we fellows were discussing whether we would go into

S. M. SAYFORD.

Mr. Sayford's meeting. We thought he probably would put us through the usual stand up and sit down program. We concluded to go in, and though I'm frank to say I did not believe all he said, yet I am sorry he is not to speak again." Into more than two hundred colleges has this Christ message been carried.

The last two years have probably seen the largest recorded results. His work has touched academies, denominational colleges, State universities and professional colleges. President Carter of Williams College says: "If I were asked to name the evangelist whose religious influence upon students would be likely to be most permanent, I should name Mr. Sayford. His peculiar success in approaching young men and winning their confidence rests on a combination of qualities and a wealth of experience decidedly rare." Among such institutions as Olivet, Pomona, Lake Forest, Wesleyan, Yale, University of Southern California, his work was notable.

One of the secrets of his power among students is that while at a college, in the right sense, he is "one of the fellows." Any one who has been a college man knows how much that means. This adaptability largely accounts for his victory at Princeton under trying circumstances. One of the prominent Christian students at Princeton says that when Mr. Sayford came to the college everything augured ill. The football season was at its hight. But "we had the grandest set of meetings that we have had since I was in Princeton and for a long time back."

We find a different class of institutions in the State universities. Ten years ago little organized religious work was to be found in them. In this field notable victories have been won. Mr. Sayford has spoken in the majority of the State institutions of the country. Two incidents illustrate both sides of his work—the saving of the man and the awakening of the college. When last at Iowa State University one of the keenest students of the institution, an avowed infidel, called on Mr. Sayford simply, as he said, to please a college friend. The ice melted, and before the student left the room they had been upon their kness and the student in prayer. Today a Congregational pulpit, not a hundred miles from Chicago, is honorably filled by the erstwhile student of Iowa.

Now as to the awakening of a college. A few weeks ago Mr. Sayford was invited to the State Mechanical and Agricultural College of Mississippi. Six days were spent in counsel and address. Near the close of the meetings Gen. S. D. Lee, the ex-commander of Vicksburg, who is now president of the college, announced that, though theirs was a State institution and its position in matters religious was neutral, there would be a break in the recitations until the students had quietly considered their personal relation to Christ. In the hours of meditation that followed, with books laid aside, forty-four men accepted Christ and fifty were enrolled in classes to be taught the Bible by members of the faculty. In an Indiana normal school 1,000 men crowded into a hall, and 400 expressed a desire to be Christians.

His work among professional students in the great cities has special significance. With their overwhelming temptations and lack of solidarity the problem is of no small proportions. Mr. Sayford's campaigns in Philadelphia and Boston reveal the nature of this work. In the former case the effort was among medical students. Professors gave way in the midst of their medical lectures that the students might attend. The Christian organizations were completed and strengthened in seven medical schools in the city, and the Walnut Street theater was packed with 2,500 men, mostly students, to hear his confidential talk, and there literally hundreds covenanted for a purer life.

In Boston during the present month, at the invitation of the Intercollegiate Association, Mr. Sayford has spoken at ten colleges to medical, law, technological, liberal arts and pharmaceutical students, besides two mass meetings for men and two group meetings of twenty or more general secretaries.

The next months will be busy ones. He goes from Phillips, Andover, to the University of Vermont and possibly to Dartmouth; thence to the State universities of Ohio, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan; and thence to the first student summer school of the Pacific coast in May, and after that to preside over the college conference of the Middle States, which meets again in June at Lake Geneva, Wis.

In this college year, now about half through, fully 1,000 professedly Christian men have covenanted for a purer life, promising to discontinue the indulgences that have prevented the development of Christian character. Take with this the fact that about 400 young men, mostly students, have publicly expressed a purpose to be Christians, and we get a glimpse of the results of such work. No statement, however, bears more directly on the significance of Mr. Sayford's work than the following extract from a letter written a month ago by John R. Mott, the student leader, who, after being closely associated with the students of Europe, was when he wrote pressing his way to the college centers of India:

> Mr. Sayford's work is needed in every land and in every college which I have visited. . . . Impurity, intemperance, skepticism are found in nearly every European country to a degree that we know nothing about in America. The condition and practices of professing Christian students, with the possible exception of those in Britain, is simply terrible. This greatly blocks the work of God in the universities, and whatever hinders his work there hinders it everywhere in the country. As I witnessed the awful state of the European universities, I prayed God, and do not cease to pray him, that America may be saved from drifting into a similar state. This attaches almost infinite importance to Mr. Sayford's work. In my judgment the men and women who have the privilege of making his work possible are rendering a service to the social, national, educational and religious life of our country, the immediate and far-reaching importance of which cannot be exaggerated.

CURRENT THOUGHT.

AT HOME.

It is asserted that whereas the East is divided on the Administration's war policy, the West and South are unanimous in favor of war at any cost. Judging by the comments of the Charleston News and Courier, The Southwestern Presbyterian, the Richmond Christian Advocate and the Nashville journal of the same name, we beg leave to question whether the South is as belligerent as has been asserted. The Nashville Christian Advocate, for instance, the organ of Southern Methodists, says: "There is a considerable class of men in the South who seem to feel that it is incumbent upon them to prove their loyalty to the Federal Government by perpetually protesting their willingness to fight for the old flag. Many of them are to the front just now. The tone in which they talk is loud enough to subdue the British lion into absolute silence. How much of all this is mere bluster, we shall not undertake to say. But we wish to express it as our decided opinion that the great majority of the Southern people are not spoiling for another war. They know too well what it means. As a matter of course, they are thoroughly patriotic, and if an emergency arises they will stand by the country till the crack of doom. . . . The editor of this Advocate is old enough to remember that a good many of the men who were most active in bringing on the war of 1861 were among the last to take a hand in it when it actually came. It might be so again."

ABROAD.

The Methodist Times says Mr. Gladstone is complaining bitterly that the Church of England has left the advocacy of the claims of Armenia to the Nonconformists, and adds: "But surely he cannot be ignorant of the fact that this has been the case at every period of English history since the Reformation. . . . There could be no more significant fact than the contrast between the silence or hesitating speech of the Anglican pulpit and the promptitude and freedom with which the great American churches have spoken out for peace and brotherly love." The same journal says Great Britain should at once invite Russia to stop outrage and massacre in Armenia.

Rev. William Ashmore, the veteran Baptist missionary, writing to The Examiner from Swatow, China, says the hungry nations are gathered around the carcass of China: "Russia is having her own way; England seems half bewildered. That Russia will come into possession of Leao Tong peninsula has long been accepted as a certainty. That she will dominate Korea has also been foreseen. Now it is getting to be about certain. The Japanese are going to leave it to itself. That means that the Russian bear will have it before long. . . . Meanwhile, within herself the fostering ulceration of the whole administrative system is leading to insurrections and to no end of insubordination."

The sentiments in the Hamburger Nachrichten indicate how far reactionary ideas have gone in Germany. It says: "Sooner or later the conviction must come that no mere legal or social political weapons are of any avail against social democracy, and that a recourse to arms is inevitable. According to our modern jurisprudence the individual is entitled in self-defense to resort to the last extremities, and it is to the same principle that the state must appeal in its action against social democracy."

THE STATUE OF PRES. THEODORE D. WOOLSEY.

Prof. J. F. Weir of the Yale Art School as been known to the public hitherto hiefly as a successful painter, but it is safe o say that after the public and the art ritics see the statue of the late Dr. Woolsey, a photograph of which we show on ur cover page this week, they will unhesitatingly concede that Professor Weir is a culptor of unusual ability. A number of ears ago Professor Weir prepared a model or the statue. It cost him two years of work nd study and was modeled from President Woolsey when he was in his prime. The ears that have intervened have been devoted to gathering the twelve or fifteen housand dollars necessary to defray the expense of casting and erecting a bronze statue o serve as a memorial to President Woolsey. A few weeks ago the completed plaster cast f the statue was shipped from New Haven to New York to be cast, and it is expected that he statue will be placed on the Yale Campus, n all probability in front of Durfee Hall, before Commencement Day. The bronze figure will be about ten feet high and rest on a pedestal of polished red granite eleven or twelve eet high.

Professor Weir has represented Dr. Woolsey as seated in a Greek chair typical of the place which the great man filled at Yale from 831 to 1846, being professor of Greek prior to his election as president of the college. The pose is natural, one hand lying loose on his ap and the right hand holding a book partly pen on his knee, the body leaning a little orward, the figure being that of Woolsey the eacher listening keenly to a recitation. He s clad in the customary president's robe, suggesting his service as president of Yale from 846 to 1871.

Professor Weir has endeavored to be realistic and yet at the same time not trivially so. The face is modeled in broad masses, the pose s natural, easy and yet dignified. The many tudents of Yale who studied under Dr. Woolsey will rejoice that his memory is to be honored in such a permanent and satisfactory way, and lovers of æsthetics will rejoice that he task of executing the work fell to one so ompetent as Professor Weir. College campuses afford fine sites for sculpture that can both stimulate students to live lives of nobility and at the same time create or satisfy he love of the beautiful, and it is well that Yale has taken such an important step forward in this respect.

EDUCATION.

— During January, February and March a band of speakers and singers from Hampton nstitute will travel through the North and West in behalf of the schools from which they ome. The series of meetings has opened successfully in New York and vicinity. Five Negroes and one Indian, all graduates or students of the institute and men and women with records of good, practical work for their respective races that give them their warrant or speaking, present pictures of the work to be done, the conditions to be met and the actual beginnings made in the South and West. A quintette of mixed voices enlivens he program with some of the finest of the old ongs peculiar to the Negroes of the South nd a stereopticon is used to make more real o the audience the lecture on the school, its urroundings and its offshoots that is given by the principal, Dr. H. B. Frissell, or Rev. H. B. Turner, the chaplain. The Twentieth Century Club of Boston will hear the party next Saturday, and on Sunday evening following a public meeting will be held in Trinity Church.

Experience, when it contradicts our cherished convictions, is like water dropping on he rock, which it wears away, indeed, but only after thousands of years.—Froude.

VENEZUELA AND ARBITRATION.

Hearty applause greeted Pres. E. H. Capen of Tufts College when he rose to address the Boston Ministers' Meeting on Monday morning. He said that when asked to consider this subject, his first act was to seek a definition of the Monroe Doctrine. In an encyclopedia of 1866 the doctrine is stated in effect as follows: any attempt of any European Power to extend its system on this continent would be considered as dangerous to our peace and safety. No doctrine comes into being all at once, there is always a process of gestation of ideas, and the germs of the Monroe Doctrine were found in the farewell address of Washington, when he retired from the presidency.

After narrating the circumstances leading up to the enunciation of the Monroe Doctrine, the speaker said that every Power except England has acknowledged it and England is now claiming to have originated it. He then went on to state concisely the history of the Venezuelan question. President Cleveland's message, in his opinion, has united the American people as nothing has done since the War of the Rebellion, although there is a party as there was then that cry for peace at any price.

In regard to the feeling between the two nations, the speaker said there are two Englands, the one of Cromwell and the common people, who have warm sympathy for Americans, and the Tory England of Charles the First and George the Third, who have a very different feeling. The nation which alone has interest upon this continent that may ever interfere with ours is Great Britain, and the audience were advised to look at a map of this hemisphere and see what Great Britain is doing and has done. The fortress at Halifax which soldiers and statesmen alike unite in pronouncing impregnable, with its immense stores, the fortress at Bermuda, with its harbor big enough to float England's whole navy and in strength second only to Gibraltar, the fortifications almost equally strong at the Bahamas, England's late efforts in Nicaragua, her higgling in Hawaii and her immense strength at Puget Sound, where she is in a position to control all the commerce of that body of water, were touched upon briefly and the inference drawn that while Great Britain has no definitely hostile intent toward this country, she at the same time means to dictate terms should any question as to her control of the world's commerce ever arise.

Rev. W. W. Jubb, at the close of Mr. Capen's remarks, deprecated strongly their partisan nature and asked that a meeting be arranged at which the other side be presented. He said that Lord Salisbury's words contained no hint of war, that all that could be construed as meaning war came from this side the Atlantic, and that there was in the remarks to which he had just listened no presentation whatever of England's claims or reasons for the course which she pursued. Other gentlemen spoke of the friendly feeling between the common people of the two nations and Dr. Lansing asked if it would be possible for the Tory party to drag the two nations to war. Mr. Jubb answered that it would be possible but that others present could tell better than he whether the American people would be dragged into a war with England. Dr. Quint was called upon to speak on this point, and said that the sentiments of the American public were in entire harmony with the address of the morning, but the worst result of a war between the two nations would be the blow it would strike to the cause of arbitration, which would not recover for generations to come, and in view of the questions which are looming up for settlement in the not distant future, questions in regard to the Alaskan boundary line, the British claims in Nicaragua, the seizure of an island off the coast of Brazil, an appeal to arms now would be most disastrous.

PASSING COMMENT.

A rule of a church recently reporting provides for a yearly revision of its roll of members by a consideration at two consecutive annual meetings of such persons as have been absent from communion during two years. Without good excuses for absence, such members are dropped "with the least possible friction."

The Week of Prayer is developing into a "month of prayer" in more than a few places. When every week and month are as full of the spirit of prayer as these special seasons, the unconverted and the indifferent will not have the power to resist such an overwhelming influence.

Scores of churches have been warmed up to a high degree during the Week of Prayer, but to make the effect permanent this condition must be looked upon merely as an encouragement to added and persistent efforts. Brother pastors, do not miss your opportunity.

A church in Indiana which has just accomplished a giant task says little but this about it to its sisters everywhere: "Go thou and do likewise!" Either one of its two efforts would be enough for the ordinary small church.

"Take care of the rural churches!" says a brother commenting on the remarkably successful work of a pastor who traces the beginnings of his Christian life back to the influence of a little village church. A good argument.

Most Sunday schools might do well to inquire of a western Massachusetts church how to double its collections. The solution is not deep: have an object for giving.

How many churches and their individual members are truly one with that Interior church in a spirit of "help the world movement"?

THE GRAND RAPIDS CHURCHES.

The churches of this region in Michigan have come to the beginning of another year full of hope and confidence, having been greatly blessed, as is manifested in the courage of the people, fidelity of the pastors, and strong maintenance of all the organizations in spite of a trying financial situation.

The First Church, Dr. D. F. Bradley, pastor, reports fifty-three additions, twenty-three on confession, home expenses $7,200. A model society treasurer has collected ninety-nine per cent. of the pew rents, and as a result of the envelope plan the benevolences, aggregating $10,000, are $800 in advance of any preceding year. The four women's societies have collected and spent $2,500, more than $1 000 of which went for foreign missions. Nearly $3,750 were given to maintain the city and State home missions. The present membership is 853. In four years 355 members have been received.

The Second Church, whose pastor, Rev. J. T. Husted, is about to close his eighth year of service, reports a net gain of five, and the membership finds itself more strongly united than ever. It has met all its obligations, paid some old debts, increased its benevolences, lent its pastor every Sunday afternoon to Plainfield Church, and looks forward to better times to rebuild, for the better accommodation of the throngs that attend. Its Sunday school averages 275 in attendance.

The South Church, Rev. G. P. Moore, has had a year of trial in removal of members and financial failures. It is now revising its membership and will show a smaller aggregate than in previous years, but it is systematizing its benevolences, improving in spiritual tone, and is keeping up strongly its organizations and agencies for work.

Smith Memorial Church has lost its beloved pastor, Rev. Thomas McRoberts, who left Jan. 1 to assume his new duties at St. Joseph, but it rejoices in the acceptance of its call by Rev. F. G. Blanshard of the Senior Class at Oberlin Seminary, who will begin work next May. He has had experience as a pastor in Fredericksburg, O., and comes with the highest recommendation of the brethren of that State. Smith Memorial Church is unanimous in selecting him and looks forward to a continuance of the prosperous conditions that have characterized the past year, where there has been a gain of membership and benevolences.

Plymouth Church, Rev. R. M. Higgins, has finished its third year, having received seventeen members, running the total up to over 100. It is steadily paying back its loan from the Church Building Society, it is fully organized in every department, gives to all the Congregational societies, and is thoroughly hopeful and united.

East Grand Rapids and East Paris are yoked under the ministries of Rev. W. H. Underhill, and both have been blessed in the accession of twelve and eight members respectively. East Grand Rapids has lost some members who became indignant because the local association would not pass a third party prohibition resolution. These members who have gone out, with others, expect to organize what is known as a "federated" church, consisting of all who desire reform so much that they are willing to sacrifice every interest to secure it, after the example of the old "come-outers." Thus the East Grand Rapids Church is relieved from internal discussion and looks forward to building this summer, a lot having been secured and paid for.

The three Sunday school missions of the First Church—Avery Chapel, Ottawa Street Mission and Mayflower Chapel—have been vigorously maintained through the agency of the Y. P. S. C. E. The fourth mission, at Lincoln Park, on the west side, was to dedicate a chapel, Jan. 19, free of debt, costing $1,500, to be called the Barker Memorial Chapel, after the late George M. Barker, a Swedenborgian, who gave two handsome lots for the purpose. A Y. P. S. C. E., a midweek prayer meeting and a mission band have been organized and evening services are held steadily. It is hoped soon to organize a church there, with a pastor in charge, by the help of the Home Missionary Society and the First Church. B.

FROM PHILADELPHIA.

Let us go and hear Moody at Conwell's Temple, about two miles due north of the City Hall. We need not ask the way but "follow the crowd," as the Brooklyn ferryboat men used to say in the palmy days of Henry Ward Beecher.

Admission is by ticket, but the clergy enter a side door and find seats reserved in the huge choir gallery. What a sight meets our eyes! This is a week day afternoon, yet every seat in the vast auditorium is filled and the wall aisles are packed with people standing. This Grace Temple is used to crowds. It is filled every Sunday and admission can be gained only by ticket until the hour for throwing open the doors to the public. The head of this great church, which is said to be the largest in America, is Rev. Russell H. Conwell, D. D., LL. D., known in former years as a Boston lawyer. The auditorium is the largest audience-room in any Protestant church in the world, except Spurgeon's tabernacle. The Mormon temple and the Ocean Grove auditorium alone surpass it in accommodation for a multitude at religious services.

Mr. Moody enters promptly and at once assumes command. The famous blind player, David Woods, usually manipulates the great organ, and Prof. J. R. Sweeney of Bethany Church and the summer leader of the mighty chorus in the Ocean Grove auditorium leads the audience in a burst of song.

Three-quarters of an hour elapse before the address begins. It is on How to Study the Bible. You have heard that! But it is never twice alike. Into his talk the great evangelist packs the nuggets of wisdom gathered through many years. Fiery earnestness, wit, humor, pathos, good sense, flashes of wondrous illumination hold every one to the end. "It is the same Moody," say the Philadelphians, who remember the famous Moody campaign just before the Centennial in the old Pennsylvania freight depot, now John Wanamaker's store. After the service not a few who then began to lead the Christian life pass across the platform to give a hearty hand-grip to their old leader. "I never heard him speak better," says one who has heard him many times since the old Andover days of 1866, when he astonished the people of that scholastic town by an address in the Old South Church. His address was followed by a prayer by Rev. J. W. Chapman, who has just returned to the pastorate of Bethany Church after three years of evangelistic work.

The Central Church, under the lead of Dr. C. H. Richards, is holding special services for two weeks. Among the preachers announced are Rev. Drs. Danforth and Worden and F. H. Jacobs, Mr. Moody's singer. Park Church welcomed its new pastor, Rev. C. B. Adams, on the first Sunday of the year. He comes from a successful pastorate at Lansford, in the coal regions of Pennsylvania. Under the leadership of Rev. D. E. Marvin the First Church is making good progress and occupies an interesting and growing field. At the last meeting of the Philadelphia Association Rev. G. W. Reaburn of Reading, Pa., for ten years in the Universalist ministry, presented himself for examination, in which he declared his renouncement of Universalism and his hearty acceptance of Congregational doctrine. He had previously united with the Central Church on confession, and he was approved as a preacher.

A noteworthy company of Sunday school workers met at the Continental Hotel for a dinner and reception to Messrs. B. F. Jacobs and William Reynolds of the International Sunday School Association, at which Hon. John Wanamaker, Rev. Dr. Worden, Rev. Dr. Blackall and others made addresses. Much enthusiasm was aroused which, it is hoped, will ripen into earnest and fruitful endeavor for better Sunday school work. M. H. W.

NEW ENGLAND.

Massachusetts.

BOSTON.—Brighton. The church held its annual neeting Jan. 18 and closed a prosperous year with ver $600 in the treasury. Reports from the various rganizations showed the total benevolences to be 2,382, against $2,410 in 1894. A thoroughly united nd working congregation looks forward to a useul year. Over 200 persons sat down to the annual upper.——Park Street people had the pleasure last unday of hearing their former pastor, Dr. Withow, who is East on his usual midwinter vacation.

CAMBRIDGE.—Prospect Street. Advance proof heets indicate that the new Year-Book will be a nodel of its kind. It represents much labor on the art of the compilers and introduces several unsual features which are desirable elements in uch a publication. One of these is the cataloguing f members in a way that shows not only the treets where they reside but the pews which they ccupy. Another departure is a list headed "surames by streets." Rev. D. N. Beach enters upon he thirteenth year of his pastorate with unabated ourage and with a people fondly attached to him.

CHARLESTOWN.—Winthrop. The year opens with reat promise. The annual reports from all departnents show that effective work is being done. The inances are in an encouraging condition. Especial satisfaction is felt with the thorough success f the first year's work of the city missionary of he church. The spiritual life of the members is eing quickened. The relations of the pastor, Rev. . R. Brown, and his people are mutually helpful.

DORCHESTER.—Pilgrim held its annual supper nd meeting Jan. 14. Over 250 persons sat down to upper, and of a total of 405 members, including welve absentees, more than 300 responded to their ames. The present pastorate covers a period of early six years, and during that time 368 persons ave been received into fellowship. The church as eleven organizations, all operating in healthful nd harmonious activity. The total contributions uring the year for all purposes have been a little ver $10,000. The Sunday school has 400 scholars nrolled and about 300 in attendance. The C. E. umbers about 125. The evangelistic services in hich Dr. Chapman assisted have proved an inspiation and uplift to the churches of this locality.

CHELSEA.—First. After the midweek prayer neeting last week a farewell service was held in onor of Miss C. B. Hartley, one of the younger nembers of the church and C. E. Society, who ailed this week for India, where she will engage in nissionary service. Representing the church, the astor, Dr. R. C. Houghton gave the farewell words nd Miss Ellen M. Stone, the returned missionary rom Bulgaria, paid a tender tribute to Miss Hartey's former interest and work at the home church nd chapel. A purse of money, a gift from her nany friends, was a token of their esteem.

Central.—The new year opens more encouragngly than ever. The church was never larger and nore vigorous. The bills have been paid, the total expenses being $9,528, and a debt of $500 has been wiped out. The benevolences were over $2,400. The visitors and deaconesses together have made over 4,000 calls. The Bible school enrolls 1,100 members, and the Women Workers number 500. The additions to the church were forty-eight, thirty-four on confession, making the total membership 650, including eighty-six non-residents. Rev. C. E. Jefferson has been pastor about eight years and looks forward to the next year with great hope.

NEWTON.—First. The annual meeting was held Jan. 16. About 240 members sat down to supper and others came later. A pleasant feature of the social hour was the presence of Rev. T. J. Holmes, the former pastor, and his wife and daughter. The reports showed an addition of thirty to the membership and of twenty-seven new families to the congregation. All bills are paid and a balance remains in the treasury. Benevolent gifts amounted to $5,551, of which $1,817 went for foreign missions and $1,791 for home missions. All departments are in a vigorous condition. This is the first annual meeting since the church was incorporated and the interest and enthusiasm manifested were an evidence of the wisdom of the step. Rev. E. M. Noyes is pastor.

NEWBURYPORT.—The Week of Prayer was observed by all the churches separately and by a union meeting in the afternoon, which was a great help to all the city.——Prospect Street. The pastor, Rev. M. O. Patton, has been assisted for two weeks by Evangelist W. S. Martin and Miss Horton, a singer. The meetings have been largely attended, interest has increased and the church has been quickened, while a number of persons have decided to follow Christ.——North. Special meetings since the Week of Prayer have resulted in several conversions among the young people of the church.——Whitefield.—At the annual meeting 150 persons sat down to supper and the reports for the year were encouraging. Rev. J. H. Reid is pastor.——Belleville. A pleasing feature of the annual meeting was an interchange of epistles in the style of the early saints between this church and the North, which was gathered for the same purpose a mile away, thus approaching the ideal relation when all churches shall be but the Church of Christ. The church closed the year without debt and is in a promising condition. Prayer meetings have been continued since the Week of Prayer with deepened interest of Christians. Brigadier Brewer and his staff of the Salvation Army conducted a service with a large congregation, Jan. 19, and were given over $40 for their work.

ROWLEY.—Rev. M. G. Papazian, formerly pastor here, now pastor and teacher in Aintab, his native city, has sent heart-rending accounts of the destitution in his large flock. The churches of the Essex North Conference have been urged to contribute to a special relief fund for him and it already amounts to over $250 in the hands of Rev. C. P. Mills.

NEWBURY.—First. At the annual roll-call three-fourths of the total membership were heard from, and among the reports of a successful year the attendance at Sunday school was declared the largest for thirty years.

GEORGETOWN.—Memorial. Total benevolent contributions reported for the past year are $362. The congregations have greatly increased under the new pastor, Rev. C. J. Tuthill, and a spirit of brotherly love and affection is manifest. The tone of the Week of Prayer meetings was called the best for years, due to the fact that songs and prayers took the place of sermons and discussions. A fine notice board has been placed on the meeting house, said to be one of the finest in Essex County. It bears the words, "All the churches of Christ salute you."

LOWELL.—French. At the annual meeting the total of additions reported was thirty, twenty-four on confession. The membership is now eighty-five. The contributions since July have been larger than for two years before. Debts of three years' past have been paid and general improvements made.——First. The annual meeting last week showed that the church was more determined than ever to adhere to its pastor, Rev. G. H. Kenngott. By the decisive vote of 242 to 137, all the rules of the church were declared null and void and all the offices except that of pastor were declared vacant. New rules satisfactory to the majority were then adopted and new officers were elected entirely from among the pastor's friends. The deposed deacons have called for this week a special meeting of the society, which is controlled by their adherents, and the end of the sad controversy is not yet in sight.——Eliot. The annual report shows the addition of forty-two members, all but ten on confession. This is the largest addition for several years, due to the Moody meetings of last winter. The Sunday school has gained eighty-seven members and the report of the first Sunday following showed seventy-two new scholars for that day. Dr. J. M. Greene is the senior pastor in the city.

CHELMSFORD.—Central. The twentieth anniversary of the church was celebrated last week by a reception given to the pastor elect, Rev. E. C. Bartlett, of the last class at Andover Seminary. Interesting addresses were given by the pastors of the neighboring churches and by representatives of the Lowell churches.

EAST BRIDGEWATER.—Union united with the Methodist church in a series of meetings through the Week of Prayer. The attendance was good and a spirit of co-operation pervaded the meetings.

ATTLEBORO.—The annual reports from all departments are encouraging. There have been forty-one accessions to the church, twenty-nine on confession. Over $4,000 have been raised for benevolences. The church rejoices that the pastor, Rev. E. L. House, has declined his call to a Presbyterian church in Dunmore, Pa., at an increase of salary. In his two years' pastorate about one hundred persons have joined the church on confession, besides a good number by letter. The present membership is 464.

UXBRIDGE.—First. The membership is now 146, the additions last year numbering fourteen. The total benevolences were $1,306. The Sunday school enrolls 540 members and the Y. P. S. C. E. fifty-one active members.

PAXTON.—First. The Week of Prayer has resulted in the conversion of several persons. The meetings were held every night and two afternoons. Not a day passed without conversions. On following days the pastor, Rev. L. E. Perry, was assisted by a number of Worcester pastors. Mr. Perry preached to the new converts last Sunday.

HAMPDEN.—Last year was successful. In a small village with two other evangelical bodies this church has held its own, and the constant drain upon the membership has been supplied by newcomers. Benevolence has been made a part of the worship by the introduction of an offertory service, and collections have increased for missions. The Sunday school report shows an increase in attendance and collections, missionary offerings having been taken monthly and the total collections showing an increase of almost one hundred per cent. The Young People's Society of Willing Helpers has raised money for repairs and improvements. A porch has been built over the vestry door and the house newly painted. This society is also buying a piano for the church. The Women's Society reports its receipts as $213. It has raised a portion of the parish expenses and has repaired and improved the parsonage. The total of parish expenses this year is $1,118. Mr. G. W. Solley is pastor.

NORTH BROOKFIELD.—The additions during the past year were by confession ten, by letter five. The present membership is 381. The benevolences for the year were $1,590. The Sunday evening services of late have been evangelistic, with much music and responsive reading and short sermon. During the Week of Prayer, besides union meetings, college prayer meetings were held in different sections of the town. Dr. Lyman Abbott preached Jan. 6 in honor of the coming dedication of the new Tucker memorial edifice.

SHELBURNE.—Rev. Austin Dodge closed his labors here after a successful pastorate of four years. The meeting house has been remodeled at an expense of several thousand dollars, a new organ has been secured and all bills are paid. There have been fifty additions to the church, mostly on confession. Mrs. Dodge has been an earnest worker among the young people. The benevolences have increased. Gifts of money and other useful articles have been presented to Mr. and Mrs. Dodge.

WORCESTER.—Salem Street and Union have taken steps toward consolidation. The latter expects its new edifice to be completed early next summer, when it will have larger accommodations than its present needs require. Salem Street is struggling with the problem how to maintain itself under the changed conditions of a down town church.

The needs of the Y. M. C. A. were presented in most of the city churches Jan. 12. The association has been running behind financially for nearly three years. Strenuous efforts have been made for some months to reduce the floating debt. A larger membership among the church people is called for to make the institution self-supporting.——The Worcester Reform Club observed its twentieth anniversary at the Old South Church, Jan. 24, with a large attendance. It has induced 14,000 men to sign the pledge.

Maine.

MACHIAS.—The annual fast, Dec. 31, was this year, as always, a time of special interest in this church, of which Rev. C. D. Crane is pastor. The membership has been increased by twenty-one, sixteen on confession. The Sunday school reports a prosperous year, thirty of the scholars having joined the C. E. Society and twelve the church. A contribution has been made to the Maine Missionary Society's debt and the Ladies' Society has sent two barrels and a box south. The King's Daughters have raised $768 the past two years to free the parsonage from debt. A box is annually sent to Micronesia, which, with other contributions, amounts to $75. The finances of the church are in good condition and the pastor's salary is paid promptly and regularly. The C. E. Society enrolls 101 members. At the roll-call there were ninety-nine responses and forty-nine messages.

SKOWHEGAN.—Island Avenue. Under the efficient lead of Rev. H. W. Kimball, who entered this field last June, the church begins the year with pleasing prospects. The past season has been one of advance. A tasteful new steeple has been added to the building to replace the spire blown down in a gale. The exterior of the meeting house and chapel has been repainted. New carpets in tints to harmonize with the wall decorations have been laid and new hymn-books procured. The Week of Prayer has brought out a gratifying degree of interest.

BANGOR.—Hammond Street held its annual meeting Jan. 16, with a large attendance. A social reception was followed by reports showing the present membership as 402, and nineteen additions, also an increase in the benevolences for the year. The meeting closed by a renewal of the covenant.

DEER ISLE.—First. The annual meeting was considered a great success. Eighty-three persons were present and twenty-seven others were heard from. The benevolent contributions exceeded those of 1894 about fifteen per cent. Rev. J. S. Richards is pastor.

SCARBORO.—A large congregation witnessed the admission of seventeen members to this little church, sixteen on confession, at the last communion. There were nine men, four of whom came with their wives.

THOMASTON.—The past year has been one of growth in the various branches of the work. The church parlor and kitchen have been improved. A C. E. Society has been formed and is doing helpful work.

WELLS.—Second. Eleven persons have been added to the roll of members during 1895. The church contributes to all the six societies. The increase in the Sunday school has been marked.

HIRAM.—The two young men from the seminary, who have been assisting here, have been a great help and the meetings have been profitable. Twelve persons have manifested a desire to be Christians.

New Hampshire.

WEST LEBANON.—At the annual meeting benevolent contributions were reported considerably larger than the previous year, and the different departments are in an encouraging condition. A Junior C. E. society was organized during the year and already numbers fifty members. The Senior Society was never more flourishing and has lately purchased a piano lamp for the chapel. The Ladies' Social Union raised the past year $300.

MAGALLOWAY.—During the past year Rev. S. S. York was sent here to look after the religious welfare of the scattered population on the borders of Maine and New Hampshire and to visit the various lumbering camps in the vicinity. He holds preaching services in schoolhouses and visits from house to house. In this way only is the gospel brought to the people.

CROYDON.—The present church membership is forty-four, a net gain of seven during the past year. The C. E. Society has been revived after four years of inactivity. The pastor, Rev. M. T. Runnells, is doing a good work at his three preaching places, and was generously remembered at Christmas by his appreciative people.

BRADFORD.—This church is supplied, with encouraging prospects, by Rev. Samuel Eaton, pastor at Hillsboro Center. Four persons have lately united with the church. At a late prayer meeting forty-five were present. The C. E. Society and the circle of King's Daughters are in a flourishing condition and doing a good work.

ACWORTH.—At the annual reunion more than a hundred persons were present at a time of good cheer and of welcome to absent members, whose faces brightened the hearts of the stay-at-homes. The old church has begun the new year with encouragement. Rev. C. O. Parker is pastor.

PORTSMOUTH.—The pastor, Rev. L. H. Thayer, has closed his fifth year here. The benevolences last year were larger than during 1894, and the congregations have enlarged. It was voted at the annual meeting to hold the communion bi-monthly.

MANCHESTER.—First. It is generally felt that a true effort was made during the Week of Prayer to make the meetings productive of great good. Many expressions of help received and of renewed life were given.

ANTRIM.—Attendance at church services is good and spiritual interest encouraging. During the past eighteen months twenty-seven persons have united with the church. A movement to raise money for the erection of a new edifice has been started and the outlook is promising.

CANTERBURY.—This church, which for the past year has received $100 of aid from the New Hampshire Missionary Society, will again resume self-support much to its joy, as it will hereafter have the income of $3,000 left in trust by the late Mrs. M. W. Brown of Manchester.

DEERFIELD CENTER.—Rev. T. C. H. Bouton has resigned the pastorate owing to the ill health of his wife, which necessitates their going at once to a milder climate. They propose to spend the rest of the winter in Florida.

GILMANTON IRON WORKS.—At the annual meeting the finances of the society were reported as in good condition and missionary offerings larger than for 1894.

NEWINGTON.—The present acting pastor, Rev. C. W. Rogers, is to continue his supply till April 1. The weekly system of offerings for raising money, adopted a year ago, is proving a decided success, having secured a larger total than previously. The C. E. Society has increased its membership to fifty.

BATH.—The benevolent contributions the past year amounted to $184. Rev. William France is pastor to the general acceptance of the people.

Vermont.

BURLINGTON.—College Street. At the annual meeting the total of members was reported as 284.—— The two churches have recently sent a contribution to Armenia for the work of Mrs. Montgomery, a Vermont woman who has been at work in Turkish missions thirty years.

WEST BRATTLEBORO.—Twenty-five persons were added to the church last year. The benevolences amounted to over $1,300 and the expenses were about $1,500. At the annual meeting of the women's missionary societies more than $350 were reported as raised by them during the year.

DERBY.—Services of special interest were observed Jan. 12, when the pastor, Rev. H. M. Perkins, received eleven new members on confession and one by letter as fruits of the recent revival meetings conducted by Rev. E. A. Whittier.

Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE.—North. At a men's prayer service every week continual conversions occur. The average attendance is about thirty.——Union. A great sorrow has fallen upon this church in the death of John McCauslan, who has stood in every way as a tower of strength since its formation. On the day of the funeral his business partner, John E. Troup, also a member of this church, fell dead while preparing to attend the service.——Pilgrim. The annual business meeting took the form of a supper and a roll-call at which there reported in person or by letter over sixty per cent. of the enrollment. It was the first annual meeting of its kind held by the church.

BRISTOL.—First. The pastor, Rev. H. A. Stevens, has resigned, but by a large vote the church has refused to accept his resignation.

Connecticut.

NEW BRITAIN.—First. The annual reports show receipts of $11,172 and expenditures of $11,167, including $5,000 paid towards the new organ. The society is free from debt. During the year there were sixteen additions, eleven being by letter. The church collections amounted to $2,074. The present membership is 700. Rev. G. H. Sandwell, D. D., is pastor.——South. The treasurer reports a small balance in the treasury. The pledge system has been successful, a larger sum being raised the past year from free seats than in any previous year. The treasurer, W. H. Hart, has served thirty-seven years. The new organ is now practically completed and will be ready for use in a few days. Rev. J. W. Cooper, D. D., is pastor.

GLASTONBURY.—The last meeting of the society was held last week Monday. On that date the committee deeded the property of the society to the church corporation. The church reports that, contrary to false impressions, the free pew system is not a failure nor is it yet to be given up. Owing to unusual circumstances the weekly offerings fell off at one time, but after a careful canvass the needed amount and $200 extra were secured. The Sunday evening congregations have more than trebled, and the C. E. Society and the Sunday school are vigorous. Rev. G. F. Waters is pastor.

NEW HAVEN.—The Mills meetings are steadily growing in interest and numbers. The noon meetings in the Grand Opera House are especially interesting. The increase in attendance has necessitated holding two evening meetings at which Mr Mills and his assistants speak alternately.——A Primary Sunday School Teachers' Union has recently been formed in the city to meet weekly in the United Church Chapel.——United. The service of the Men's Sunday Evening Club was addressed Sunday by Dr. A. E. Dunning on Impressions of Modern Jerusalem.

BRIDGEPORT.—Park Street. The fifth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. E. G. Fullerton was celebrated Jan. 12. During that time there have been 313 additions, 172 on confession. The present membership is 599. A new church has also recently been organized in the northern part of this field called the King's Highway Chapel, with a membership of eighty. In addition several missions and reading-rooms have been maintained.

HARTFORD.—Asylum Hill. Last year closed with a balance in the treasury. The outside voluntary contributions of individual members to benevolent purposes were in all $69,861, which, added to the benevolences of the church and its auxiliary societies, makes the total $77,043.—— Windsor Avenue. Appleton C. Hillyer and Miss Clara E. Hillyer have purchased the large house adjoining the meeting house to give to the society for a parsonage.——Glenwood. The annual reports give evidence of growing work in every department. The close of the year finds the church free from debt.

NEW LONDON.—First. The annual meeting was held Jan. 10. The additions in 1895 were sixty-seven, fifty-eight on confession. The gifts for the year aggregated over $11,400. During the year tablets to the memory of Dr. Abel McEwen, pastor of the church for over fifty years, and Dr. Thomas P. Field, pastor of the church twenty years, have been erected. This is the 250th year of the founding of New London, and the pastor is preaching historical discourses in commemoration of the organization of the church in 1642.

WATERBURY.—First. The yearly Sunday contributions are reported as $1,954, besides large benevolences raised by the various societies.——Second. The charities of the church the past year were $5,320. The Sunday school collections amounted to $358. The question of supporting a monthly paper, to be published in the interests of the churches of the Naugatuck Valley, has been considered.

SHELTON.—This church, Rev. L. M. Keneston pastor, has just completed its third year. The present pastor has received 125 members. The Sunday school numbers 210. The superintendent who has just resigned, has served thirty years in different schools. Gifts to him and the pastor and his wife were appreciated as marks of esteem.

ENFIELD.—The benevolences of 1895 were about $850. A motion to consolidate church and society was tabled after being thoroughly discussed. The church voted to appropriate $150 for the use of the society. At the supper that followed a handsome new tea service was used for the first time. It is the gift of F. A. King, the church treasurer.

LITCHFIELD.—The parsonage has been thoroughly repaired and a large furnace put in. Rev. John Hutchins, the new pastor, and his family are now settled there.

CROMWELL.—About half of the members were present to respond to the annual roll-call. The benevolent offerings the past year are the largest in the history of the church, amounting to $3,386.

GOSHEN.—About 100 persons were present at the annual roll-call. A pleasing feature of the occasion was the presentation of a gold watch and a sum of money to Miss Louise Norton, the organist of the church.

WASHINGTON.—At the annual meeting 200, all but thirty of the members, answered to the roll. The church has given $1,200 to missions during the year. Repairs have been made on the meeting house and parsonage, amounting in all to $600. There were thirteen additions.

COLLINSVILLE.—The annual reports show the present membership to be 393. There was a balance in the church treasury at the end of the year of $373. The year's benevolences amounted to $832.

CHESTER.—After being closed many weeks the repairs are now completed and the meeting house will be formally reopened Jan. 23.

STRATFORD.—The annual expenses of the society are $2,500, including the last payment of $415 on the church debt. There is left a balance in the treasury. The year's benevolences amounted to $500. In twelve years there have been 178 additions; the present membership is 285.

CANAAN.—The new parsonage is now almost an assured fact as the canvassers report $2,500 already subscribed. The lot is owned by the church and adjoins the site of the meeting house.

TRUMBULL.—The church edifice was reopened last Sunday after being closed several weeks for repairs. It has been thoroughly renovated and now presents a pleasing appearance.

MANCHESTER.—South. Two hundred persons were present at the annual meeting. The removals and additions last year were equal, leaving the membership 240. The benevolences were $872.

ROCKY HILL.—After a stormy meeting, preceded by dissensions covering the past year or more, it was voted by a small majority to re-engage Rev. C. D. Chunn for another year.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

BINGHAMTON.—First. The second year of the free pew system produced a revenue sufficient to pay current expenses and nearly $500 over. The pastor, Rev. W. B. Thorp, is finding The Teaching of Jesus a fruitful theme for a series of Sunday evening lectures, following the general line of Trendt's work on the subject. The total amount raised from all sources by the church is $8,452, of which $2,104 was for benevolences. The present membership is 658.——Plymouth. Special services are being held under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. W. H. Kephart.

NORTH COLLINS.—First. There was a much larger attendance than usual at the annual meeting. The Sunday school and Y. P. S. C. E. each reported better work and larger membership. A Woman's Missionary Society has been organized and is doing active work. Of the membership, about twenty-five, one-third has been added during the past year. The church property has been improved and new furniture added. The benevolences are in advance of any previous year. The church had been a long time without a pastor, consequently the increased membership and interest is decidedly gratifying. Rev. Ella Gurney is pastor.

NEWARK VALLEY.—The new chapel has been completed and Jan. 11 the building was dedicated. The services were conducted by the retiring pastor, Rev. J. S. Ellsworth, assisted by neighboring ministers. The chapel is a beautiful structure and the furnishings and carpet, also the library, parlor, culinary apartment and memorial windows, are all in excellent taste. At the meeting great regret was expressed over the recent resignation of Mr. Ellsworth, against the earnest protests of the church and community.

ALBANY.—Clinton Avenue. Last year the new members numbered nineteen. Besides running expenses, $400 were paid on old debts and the interest on a mortgage was cleared. The condition of the church is better now than for many years. Rev. F. A. Strough is the pastor.——First. The story of the Hymns, as told by the pastor's wife, Mrs. J. B. Thrall, including incidents regarding their origin and writing, constituted a unique feature of a recent service.

ANTWERP.—The Week of Prayer resulted in a number of conversions. Seven persons have already been added to the church and the meetings are being continued.

CARTHAGE.—The church is enjoying great prosperity. Thirty-one persons have united during 1896, all but three on confession.

A deepening spiritual interest is manifest in Watertown and new members are joining at each communion.——A Plymouth Literary Club has been organized among the young people in the Ogdensburg church.——The meeting house in Friendship is to be rebuilt at an expense of $1,500.——Several new seats have been put into the meeting house in Maine, considerably increasing its seating capacity.

Pennsylvania.

PHILADELPHIA.—Central is following the Week of Prayer with a two-weeks series of special meetings. Mr. F. H. Jacobs of Chicago, the singing evangelist, is assisting the pastor, Dr. C. H. Richards.——First, Germantown, during the Week of Prayer had the aid of Evangelist John McDowell.——Park has just welcomed its new pastor, Rev. C. B. Adams, who began his services the first Sunday of this year. His people gave him a reception Jan. 16.

District of Columbia.

WASHINGTON.—First. At an adjourned annual meeting the church roll numbered 1,000 names. Reports were read from nine auxiliary societies, showing all to be in a prosperous condition. The report of the Junior C. E. Society was especially gratifying. Excellent missionary work has been done and the Ladies' Home Society has been placed upon the General Howard Roll of Honor.

THE INTERIOR.

Ohio.

HUNTSBURGH.—At the annual meeting reports showed that benevolences more than doubled in 1895. This was brought about by the new missionary organization known as the Kingdom Extension Society, which includes all members of the church. Thirty-one members were added to the church, twenty-two on confession, making the membership the largest in the history of the church, while the absentee list has been reduced. The year was prosperous in every way. Rev. U. C. Bosworth is pastor.

NEWTON FALLS.—Last year the church contributed to all the benevolent societies for the first time in its history. The fifteen months' pastorate of Rev. P. D. Dodge have been entirely acceptable, and his work is to be continued. All departments are in good condition.

SOUTH NEWBURY.—The annual meeting was held Jan. 8. The benevolences for 1895 were one-fourth as much as the home expenses. Thirteen members were received, ten on confession, making the membership, Jan. 1, seventy, the largest in the history of the church.

Illinois.

KEMPER.—This is one of the smaller churches of Springfield Association and has long been without the services of a resident minister, but with a new pastor has taken on new life and the outlook is hopeful. As a result of a series of meetings last month five persons were received to membership.

Indiana.

WHITING.—Evangelist C. C. Goodrich is assisting Rev. L. A. Townsend in a three weeks' meeting, following a five weeks' effort on the part of the pastor. The results are excellent. At the last communion eight new members were received, seven on confession, including the principal of the city schools and his wife. A missionary society recently organized marks the great rise in spiritual life. The young people raised $100 during the year. The women's society has paid for the furnace for the new meeting house and is now working on the organ fund. The brave attempt at self-support made by this church, composed of only fifty-six members, in the fifth year of its existence and with the heavy expense of a new building upon its hands, has resulted not in weakness but in greatly increased strength. Worshiping in a hall when its present pastor came to them, it voted at the expiration of his first year to do three things—engage him for two years more, build a meeting house the first year, cut off the $400 missionary aid at the expiration of twelve months and become self-supporting.

SOUTH PORTLAND.—The new brick edifice is nearing completion. It will cost about $4,000. An addition to the original plan, to include a reading-room and drill hall for the Boys' Brigade, is contemplated. The pastor, Rev. A. E. Pierce, was surprised recently by an evening visit from a large number of the congregation. A supper was served and many gifts, including an easy-chair each for the pastor and his wife, were received. The church is developing an enthusiastic "help the world" movement together with rich spiritual experience.

DUNKIRK.—The new church is prospering with Rev. W. A. Thomas as pastor. The annual meeting showed an increase of over twenty in membership. The Bible school has attained an attendance of 184 with a much larger enrollment. Work on the church building has been going on slowly. The pastor has been giving a series of lectures on Pilgrim's Progress Sunday nights to crowded houses.

TERRE HAUTE.—Second. Rev. W. F. Harding will remain another year. The church will reduce the amount of aid asked from the C. H. M. S. The Week of Prayer has been followed by special meetings in which there is a growing interest.

Michigan.

DETROIT.—First. At the annual meeting reports showed every branch of the organization to be in a vigorous condition. The membership is 750. The benevolences for 1895 amounted to $8,635, of which $1,257 went to foreign missions, $1,299 to home missions and $2,156 to city missions. The running expenses were $11,472. The proceedings were saddened by the resignation of the pastor, Dr. W. H. Davis, to take effect Feb. 9, closing nearly twelve years of successful work and the happiest relations. Considerations of the health of his family were the only causes for this unwelcome step.——Fort Street. Rev. John Pogson, pastor, reports 186 members, a gain for the year of thirty-six, and receipts of $1,784 for carrying on the work.

PORT HURON.—First reports $4,252 receipts for the year.——A new church of forty members has just been organized at the Ross Mission and Rev. B. F. Brundage is secured as pastor. This is the third church of its order in the city.

The church in Freeport is now self-supporting. Its pastor, Rev. G. W. Mylne, is successful in interesting boys and men.——Cannon and Cannonsburg churches have had revivals which have added largely to the membership. Their pastor, Rev. R. L. D. Thurston, is to continue with them.——The Rockford Church moves steadily forward under the wise leadership of Rev. Clarence Finster, who is serving his sixth year here.——In Eastmanville and Lamont two of the oldest churches of this region are dispensing with the services of a minister for the winter and maintaining prayer meetings, Sunday schools and services led by laymen.——The church in Hudsonville grows rapidly under the pastorate of Rev. W. A. Briggs and shows the value of placing in a weak field a strong, well-trained man.——The pastor at Howard City, Rev. W. R. Yonker, who also preaches in the church at Coral, has taken under his care the church at Sand Lake, which had been reduced to a membership of one woman.——Rev. James Provan at Lowell maintains the best traditions of that old and successful church, all departments of which are in excellent running order.

Wisconsin.

MILWAUKEE.—Plymouth. The annual meeting was held Wednesday evening, Jan. 11. The additions during 1895 were on confession twelve, by letter thirty-four, making the total present membership, deducting losses, 481. Benevolent offerings aggregate $2,465 outside of personal gifts, contributions of societies within the church or expenses of the society for institutional work. Dr. Judson Titsworth is pastor.

The church in Jackson, having just dedicated a new edifice, is in need of a bell and would be grateful for a second-hand one. Rev. J. W. Hadden is pastor.

THE WEST.

Iowa.

DAVENPORT.—Bethlehem Mission, which is in the midst of a neglected community, greatly needs a free library and reading-room as a means of attracting all classes. Single books, new or second-hand, or a discarded library would be gratefully received and put to immediate use by the pastor, Rev. A. P. Orth, 522 Warren Street.

ROCKFORD.—Rev. C. E. Taggart has resigned to take effect April 6. The reports given at the annual meeting this year showed the affairs and work of the church to be in better condition than ever before. The home expenditures were $1,300 and over $300 were raised for benevolences. Special meetings are now being held.

GLENWOOD.—The annual meeting was largely attended and a remarkable spirit of harmony was shown throughout. The efforts of the pastor, Rev. M. D. Reed, were heartily indorsed, the treasurer's report was encouraging and work in all branches is progressing satisfactorily.

ALTON.—Rev. H. G. Cooley commenced work on this field Dec. 28. Prospects are bright, congregations were never so large as now and the people are enthusiastic.

BRAINERD.—Rev. T. M. Edmands conducts study of the book of Acts on Tuesday evenings. Enlargement in the Sunday school and the C. E. Society, the organization of a circle of King's Daughters, who have assisted the poor, a part payment of the debt to the C. C. B. S., with nine additions at the last communion, five on confession, are reported.

OWATONNA.—In answer to the request for pledges on the "roll of honor in self-denial" to pay a debt of $750, a hearty response was made and practically the whole amount is pledged. Twenty persons were received into fellowship at the last communion, making fifty-seven since Dec. 1.

ST. PAUL.—A federation of six down-town churches in future will care for the Parish Settlement house.——St. Anthony Park is considering the need of more seating capacity and has closed a prosperous year. The pastor, Rev. G. W. Shaw, has terminated his work.

WABASHA.—Reports at the annual meeting showed all expenses met, three accessions at the last communion and growth in all departments of work. During the pastorate of Rev. W. H. Medlar this church has been greatly strengthened.

HAM LAKE.—This little church is pastorless, being supplied only occasionally. A body of lay workers keeps it alive and active. Evangelist C. B. Fellows has just closed a series of meetings here with a dozen conversions.

SPRING VALLEY.—The women's society has raised $624 during the year, which goes toward payment for the $1,000 organ. The Annual Visitor is published and the total amount of money raised for all purposes is over $3,000.

NORTH BRANCH.—A series of meetings has been held with several conversions, five persons uniting with the church. An out-station has been opened where there is some interest.

MAPLETON AND STERLING.—The Week of Prayer was observed and helped the churches to rise above some discouragements. Nine new members were received.

Kansas.

LAWRENCE.—Plymouth received fourteen additions to its membership on the first Sunday in the year. Dr. Cordley was assisted by State Evangelist Veazie, who held special services in connection with the Week of Prayer. The meetings are growing in numbers and interest and will be continued for some time. The women, having learned that a missionary in western Kansas needed an overcoat, immediately forwarded a new warm one with mittens, arctics and a cap.——Pilgrim. A gracious revival is in progress, eighteen persons having been received to membership Jan. 5, sixteen on confession and as many more being ready to join. Mr. R. H. Williams, a student in Washburn College, conducted special services for ten days during the holidays and has been engaged to supply the church for one year. Evangelist Veazie is also lending a hand on that side of the river and the meetings are increasing in interest and power.

KANSAS CITY.—Bethel. Superintendent Broad spent Jan. 12 with this church and its Armourdale branch. The field is purely missionary and an earnest spirit prevails. A generous contribution was made for home missions. The Bethel Sunday school numbers 132 and the branch enrolls eighty. Several week day services are maintained. Rev. F. G. Mitchell, whose devoted service on the field has been so eminently successful, has been compelled to resign because of impaired health induced by overwork.

TONGANOXIE.—The church had a roll-call and special communion service at the opening of the New Year. Six persons were received to membership, five on confession and all from the Sunday school. The Week of Prayer was observed by a union service with this church, which is gaining in spiritual strength and usefulness.

MANHATTAN.—This church, one of the oldest in the State, celebrated its fortieth anniversary Jan. 1. There were addresses by Rev. R. M. Tunnell, the pastor, Rev. R. D. Parker, who was pastor for fourteen years and still lives here, and President Fairchild of the Agricultural College.

ARGENTINE.—The membership numbers ninety-three and the Sunday school has an average attendance of ninety. There are also a flourishing Y. P. S. C. E. and a women's society. At the annual meeting, Jan. 15, steps were taken to settle a small indebtedness, and to infuse new vigor into the work.

ATCHISON.—At the annual meeting the church found itself out of debt with a balance in the treasury in every department. The best of feeling prevail, and the outlook for progress is hopeful.

WHITE CITY.—This church has raised its full apportionment for the C. H. M. S., besides reinsuring its property and putting a new heater into the edifice.

FAIRVIEW.—Mr. I. M. Waldrop of Buffalo Park is conducting meetings in the school house with large success, people coming ten miles daily to attend.

Union revival meetings, with crowded houses and thorough harmony, are in progress in Chapman.——At Parsons there is a steady gain in membership.

Nebraska.

OMAHA.—Plymouth. A large and representative council met, Jan. 14, to advise with reference to the future of this church, which has been seriously embarrassed for some time with a large debt upon its property. Steps have been taken to foreclose the mortgage. The council was representative and delegates from all the churches invited were present. There is a church membership of twenty-six, united by prayer, effort and sacrifice. Rev. H. S. MacAyeal, the beloved and efficient pastor, has been about six months on the ground. The congregation has been raising about $1,500 for current expenses and has made a good record for benevolence. It has an excellent location, and, if provision could be made for the payment of the debt, would have an encouraging outlook. After full consideration the council was satisfied that the church should be encouraged to go forward and unanimously advised first an earnest effort to secure pledges among themselves toward paying the debt and then a strong appeal to the C. C. B. S. for aid. As it had been difficult to secure a council at Cambridge at the time of Mr. MacAyeal's resignation on that field to advise in regard to the dissolution of the pastoral relation, this council approved the action of the church in accepting his resignation and also adopted a minute expressing appreciation of the important work done at Cambridge during his six years' pastorate.——First is working to secure a minister, and meanwhile is being supplied for a few weeks by Rev. A. H. Byles.

LINCOLN.—Vine Street. The Junior C. E. Society, Jan. 14, at its sixth anniversary, gave a reception to the members of the church and their friends which was greatly enjoyed. This society has been happy in having had for its president from the first a Christian teacher, admirably adapted to the work; and the society has not only done much for its members in the development of Christian character but has aided the church in many ways, one of its offerings being a fine communion set, including a table.

AVOCA.—The evangelistic meetings held by Mr. Billings closed Jan. 12. Rev. O. A. Palmer, lately pastor of the church at Ulysses, preached in the morning. At the communion service ten persons, all adults, were received into the church. At the evening service by the evangelist the house was crowded, and there was deep and tender interest. The church extended a unanimous and hearty invitation to Mr. Palmer to the pastorate, and if a suitable support can be provided he will accept the call.

WILCOX.—A delightful annual meeting and watch night service was held Dec. 31. The reports showed a good year's work, the amount pledged on salary having nearly all been paid and some old indebtedness discharged. Of this latter amount the Ladies' Aid Society had raised $80. The pastor, Rev. S. L. Unger, is unanimously invited to remain another year.

SPRINGFIELD.—Three persons were received to membership Jan. 5, one on confession. The Sunday school has had a good year, the membership having reached 124. On the evening of Jan. 8 the church gave the pastor, Rev. J. E. Storm, a genuine surprise in the way of a pound social.

Rev. H. M. Evans, pastor of the church at Burwell, is assisting Rev. D. F. Bright in special meetings at Taylor.

CHEVAL TOILET DRESSER.

There has always been a large demand for Toilet Tables, Cheval Glasses and French Dressing Cabinets. Today a clever idea comes to us and we unite them all in one piece of furniture.

Here is the result—a Cheval Toilet Dresser—and it is an immediate success. It gives really all the desirable features in the three pieces of furniture, and it presents the best combination design for the boudoir ever invented.

The Cheval Glass is full size and adjustable. The toilet shelf is just the right hight from the floor for convenience. There are two large locked closets with the space above guarded by a low brass gallery. There are six drawers of varying depths.

We are so sure of a large demand for this new piece that we have started a few in Bird's Eye Maple to harmonize with very light surroundings. In oak or the dark color of mahogany we can supply them as fast as needed.

A Point in Economy.—Among the new and ingenious pieces of furniture seen this fall nothing is more immediately attractive than the cheval toilet dresser now on sale at the Paine warerooms on Canal Street. It is really a combination of three pieces of furniture, a toilet table, cheval glass and dressing cabinet. We predict an immense sale for this clever and ingenious combination. They are not at all expensive

A New Evangelist!

So say devoted pastors who have used the lantern in church work. Its usefulness is proved in the conversion of thousands, and it is confidently predicted that the Stereopticon, in ten years, will be as universally used as the organ. All pastors can buy on instalment plan and hire slides very cheap.

Write for pamphlet, "Solved; or, The Sunday Evening Problem." Read its hints, and the actual experience of pastors who have tried the new plan. It is mailed for the asking. Illustrated catalogue 20 cents.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

There has been no marked change in the situation since last week. Business is still restricted by the uncertainties of the money market and the disposition to await the consummation of the new national loan. It is expected that the latter will be heavily oversubscribed, in which event the effect upon business and confidence will be very salutary.

At present, however, the mercantile body is extremely sensitive to the varying moods of the money market and to the chaotic state of politics, not only in this country but throughout the world. Money here is tight, of that there is no question. Greenbacks are scarce and there is a virtual premium on gold. It is thought that intending subscribers to the new government bonds are accumulating these forms of money.

But while money rates are high, the transactions, that is, loans, are not large. With mercantile operations limited and chilled by prevailing uncertainties, it is natural that regular borrowers of funds should not be in the market. And they are not, which renders the tightness of money less burdensome. Banks are taking care of their regular customers, but note brokers find business extremely dull. Even speculation is so dull that brokerage houses are not borrowing their usual amounts on demand.

The favorable features in the mercantile situation are a revival in iron and steel and large exports of grain. Prices for iron products have advanced and the trade professes to believe that better times are approaching. On the other hand, traveling men report orders for spring goods irregular and collections of bills due are more than ordinarily slow. In printed cottons and ginghams the movement is quiet, while the woolen manufacturing industry is reported as very unsatisfactory.

Wool has taken a firmer turn, but although hides remain steady leather has been more freely offered, with the result that there has been some shading of prices. Bank clearings reflect the decrease in the volume of trade, which has been on the down grade now for about a month. Clearings for last week aggregated $1,060,000,000, which was nearly 4 per cent. less than last week, and 8 5 per cent. less than in the third week of January, 1895, but 15 per cent more than in the corresponding week of 1894, and 27 per cent less than in the same week of 1893, when the volume of trade was exceptionally heavy.

IRRITATION OF THE THROAT AND HOARSENESS are immediately relieved by "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Have them always ready.

OTHER CHRISTIAN WORK.

During the last nine months the American Tract Society supported for a part or all of their time 190 colporters in thirty-seven States and Territories. They made 116,046 visits, carrying the message of salvation by verbal announcement and the printed page. In these homes they left by sale and gift 76,-184 volumes. Among these families 16,639 were Roman Catholic, a considerable number Mormon, 17,-224 had no religious books but the Bible, and 7,305 Protestant families were not attendants upon the services of God's house. The colporters addressed 5,523 religious meetings. Their reports indicate a cordial welcome, a readiness of the people to hear what they had to say and a desire to secure and read the publications of the society.

That indefatigable and conscientious evangelist, Kingsley A. Burnell, born in Massachusetts, but a soldier of the cross in almost every State of the Union, is now devoting himself largely to house to house visitation and public gatherings in the interest of planting and sustaining Sunday schools. Last year he called upon not less than 5,000 families, to whom he brought the message of the gospel through the distribution of literature and through unflinching personal testimony. During the present month he is carrying on a campaign in Wisconsin, visiting a dozen of the leading centers of the State and supplementing effectively the agencies now at work.

Religious Notices.

BOSTON AUXILIARY OF THE AM. McALL ASSOC.—Treasurer, Miss Edith Stearns, The Charlesgate, Boston.

GORDON MISSIONARY TRAINING SCHOOL, Clarendon Street Baptist Church, Boston, opens Oct. 2. Evening classes Oct. 10.

THE GENERAL THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY, at its new building, 53 Mt. Vernon Street, Boston. Founded for the benefit of clergymen, theological students, Sunday school teachers, authors, and readers of a Christian literature of all denominations. It contains 17,000 volumes and 100 periodicals in the reading-room. Its books have circulated in more than 500 towns and villages in 32 different States of our country. It is supported by donations, bequests and fees from life and annual members, who have the full use of the library, and by the perpetual membership of churches, whose pastors have the use of the library, including the drawing of books, forever gratis. Donations and fees should be sent to Rev. Luther Farnham, secretary, at the library.

THE AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION has been at work seventy-one years for the retired rural districts. Its union methods specially commend it to communities of sparse populations divided in religious sentiments. Its missionaries visit families, distribute religious literature, hold evangelistic meetings and organize Sunday Schools. Probably no evangelizing agency has larger results for the amount expended. 11,000,000 children are yet out of Sunday School. Will you help to save them? Send to Rev. Addison P. Foster, D. D., New England Secretary, 1 Beacon St., Room 40, Boston.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the Society at New York.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING.

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, JAN. 17.

The large company that gathered, filling every nook and corner, showed the increasing appreciation of this weekly opportunity to meet missionaries, to hear from the various fields and to extend sympathy. Mrs. H. H. Bartlett presided and read the 100th Psalm and other passages of thanksgiving.

Bulgaria claimed attention from having been on the calendar all the week, and especially because of the welcome presence of Miss Ellen M. Stone of Philippopolis, who went out in 1878, leaving a position upon the editorial staff of The Congregationalist, and has now returned to see once more her aged mother, after a continued absence of ten years. She spoke warmly of the assurance and comfort which this meeting gives the missionaries, and illustrated the oft-repeated conviction, "I am sure somebody is praying for me," by a story of one of her Bible women. In her account of her work in superintending the Bible women and in touring she emphatically answered the calendar query for the day, quoted from Miss Havergal:

> Have you lifted the lamp for others,
> That has guided your own glad feet?
> Have you echoed the loving message
> That seemed to you so sweet?

A letter had been received that morning from Miss Child written at Calcutta. She and her sister and Mrs. Edward Hume were making a trip through Northern India, visiting places of interest and making the acquaintance of missionaries of other boards, Presbyterian, Woman's Union Missionary Society and English. Miss Gilson, recently appointed to Gazaland, told of her former work in South Africa in the school for girls at Stellenbosch, whither she went in response to an appeal for American teachers, and where she had pupils of various nationalities. Having found it difficult to interest them in mission work, she gained their attention and aroused their desire to help by reading them the tenth annual report of the Woman's Board. They began to ask if they might form a society and so organize it that it might be a link to connect them with the school after leaving it. This was done, and now for seventeen years the girls of that school have been promoting the cause of foreign missions. Miss Gilson gave an amusing inventory of one native missionary's outfit—an ox, gun, cloth and beads. She also gave in a few minutes a clear and very interesting outline of affairs in the Transvaal.

Miss Lamson spoke of the appeal just sent out by the Board to C. E. Societies, soliciting their continued support of Miss Chapin, Miss Harlow and Miss Stockbridge, contributions for Capron Hall, Madura, which must be begun speedily, now that the land is purchased, and for the general fund which cares for the work everywhere.

South Dakota.

REDFIELD.—Special union revival meetings of great interest are being held by President Patch of the college and by the pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church.——The college has completed its "missionary barn," which will accommodate fourteen head of cattle, besides giving room for carriages, hay, etc. It was dedicated Jan. 15.

Miss F. K. Henry held a series of stirring meetings last month at De Smet.——The special services at Turton, continued by Rev. D. R. Tomlin, strongly affected the community and there were several conversions. His meetings in Fort Pierre open with more than usual interest.——While the Huron church has been depleted in its membership above the additions, yet it has never had a better year financially.——Rev. B. H. Burtt of Huron is assisting in evangelistic meetings at Highmore.——Evangelist Merrill is conducting special services in Yankton.——A good number of Sunday schools and Endeavor Societies throughout the State are forming Bible clubs for systematic study.

Colorado.

DENVER.—Plymouth. Few churches close the year with a better showing than this one, which reports a balance of $318 in the treasury, as against a deficit of $166 last year. The weekly pledges have grown from $56 to $93, and $500 have been added to the salary of the pastor, Rev. F. T. Bayley. Large credit is due the Ladies' Aid Society for financial help. Fifty-seven members have been added to the church and 107 to the Sunday school. A new orchestra adds to the attractiveness of the sessions of the latter.

Montana.

BILLINGS.—Rev. P. B. Jackson will close the second year of his pastorate Feb. 1. Both years were marked by progress. In spite of financial depression, the grant from the C. H. M. S. has been materially reduced, and all parts of the work are thriving. The congregations are larger than ever before and in the evening are composed mostly of young men. The Sunday school is doing effective work and the Y. P. S. C. E. as well. Many indications point to a widespread spiritual awakening.

GREAT FALLS.—As the result of the earnest efforts of Rev. O. C. Clark of Missoula the Congregational work here, which was suspended for nearly two years, is again in a vigorous condition. The gift of a desirable lot was secured, upon which, through aid granted by the C. C. B. S., a neat chapel has been erected. Rev. J. A. Williamson, late of Belpre, O., began supplying the church Oct. 26, and has just been called to the regular pastorate.

HELENA.—The church is gathering new life and vigor under the pastorate of Rev. Carl Kelsey. The inspiration of his enthusiastic work is felt in all departments.

Successful Sunday school institutes have been held at Billings and Red Lodge by Superintendent Bell of the C. S. S. and P. S.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

OAKLAND.—Plymouth Avenue. An interesting feature of the first evening service of the new year was the installation of twelve young men and young women as officers and chairmen of committees of the C. E. Society. Dr. J. K. McLean, the pastor, gave them a fitting charge, and in the address to the people following spoke heartily in favor of some characteristic features of the movement.

SAN FRANCISCO.—Third. The Influence of Commerce on Character was the subject upon which Rev. William Rader preached ably to traveling men. The attendance was large and the interest great.——Chaplain Drahms read an able paper before the Monday Club on the Venezuelan Question, which aroused considerable discussion.

BERKELEY.—This church is about to adopt the free pew system, the pledges already amounting to more than the rentals heretofore. This people joined with the Methodists and the Presbyterians during the Week of Prayer, to the interest and profit of large congregations.

STOCKTON.—All the principal churches except the Episcopal are uniting in a month of prayer.

Washington.

SEATTLE.—Taylor has been enlarging its building by an addition twenty-six feet long and full width and hight. This change became absolutely necessary to meet the needs of its growing Sunday school, which now has an enrollment of about 240 with an average attendance of 175. This is, perhaps, the largest school in the State in proportion to the church membership. The most significant fact, however, is that for the past year and more the accessions to the church have been parents of the children in the primary department, which comprises nearly half the school. Rev. George H. Lee is pastor, and Mrs. Lee has a reputation for primary work throughout the State. A kindergarten was opened Jan. 15, in her care.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

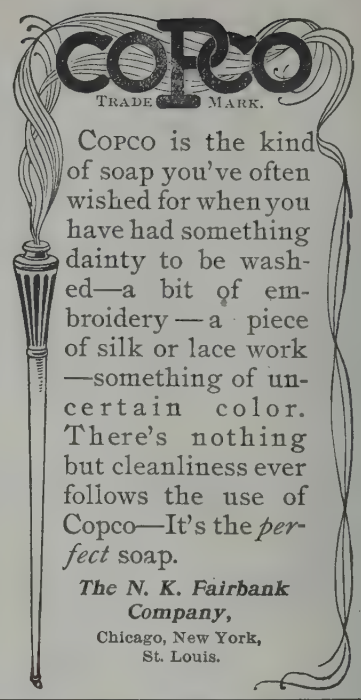
Of New Mexico's twenty-four societies six are Mexican.——Baltimore Endeavorers will take steps to replace some of the advertising in their street cars by texts from the Bible.

On a visit to a Maine village, an Endeavorer from Somerville, Mass., was the means of forming a society of forty-six members. This, it is hoped, will lead to the reopening of the two churches of the village, which have been closed.

As a result of Dr. Clark's European trip societies have been formed at Prague and Pilsen in Bohemia, and others are soon to be organized. That at Gratz was the first society in Austria to receive official examination and approval by the government.

Of the 17,000 members reported at Victoria's annual convention 1,450 are following a systematic course of Bible study.——A weeding committee is to be found in an Australian junior society, and its work is to keep the church grounds free of weeds.

Weekly meetings for the study of the Sunday school lesson at the houses of the members are arranged by a Rhode Island Sunday school committee.——The Juniors of Prohibition Park, N. Y., have secured $100 to have a fountain erected near the car station, specially for the benefit of the men employed on the railroad.



Copco is the kind of soap you've often wished for when you have had something dainty to be washed—a bit of embroidery—a piece of silk or lace work—something of uncertain color. There's nothing but cleanliness ever follows the use of Copco—It's the perfect soap.

Going to school

Do the children go to school? And are they joyous and happy? Is school-life a pleasure? And is progress being made? Or is the opposite true? Does the close of each day bring a headache? There is no appetite and sleep is imperfect. The color gradually leaves the cheeks and only a little effort is followed by exhaustion. To continue school means to come to the end of the year with broken health. What is the best thing to do? Take of Cod-liver Oil, with hypophosphites. The cod-liver oil nourishes the body and makes red corpuscles for the blood. The hypophosphites are tonics to the nervous system, giving mental activity during the day and refreshing sleep at night. Don't let your child get thin and worry along. Give Scott's Emulsion; insist on a generous amount of out-door exercise; and the vigor of youth will return.

SCOTT'S EMULSION has been endorsed by the medical profession for twenty years. (Ask your doctor.) This is because it is always palatable—always uniform—always contains the purest Norwegian Cod-liver Oil and Hypophosphites.

Put up in 50-cent and $1.00 sizes. The small size may be enough to cure your cough or help your baby.

Hyomei is a purely vegetable antiseptic, and destroys the germs and microbes which cause diseases of the respiratory organs.

The air, thoroughly charged with Hyomei, is inhaled through the Pocket Inhaler at the mouth, and, after permeating the minutest air-cells, is slowly exhaled through the nose. It is aromatic, delightful to inhale, inexpensive, and gives immediate relief. It stops all spasmodic coughing instantly, clears the voice, expands the lungs, and increases the breathing capacity.

R. T. BOOTH, Esq., New York.

DEAR SIR: I sent you one dollar about ten days ago for one of your pocket inhaler outfits. It came to hand last Friday morning.

Mrs. Honey had been suffering severely for three weeks daily with asthma. As soon as the inhaler came she began using it, and after a few inhalations the asthma ceased, and now (Tuesday) it has not returned. She has had this trouble ever since she was seven years old, and is now forty, and we have spent hundreds of dollars in search of relief, purchasing everything we saw advertised. When you consider all this, I think it is the most remarkable thing that once using the inhaler should remove the trouble entirely.

Very truly yours,
(Rev.) GEORGE W. HONEY.

"I AM GLAD I AM ALIVE."

It Rings and Throbs from the Heart and Soul.

How Even a Great Scientist May Be Mistaken.

This Will Possibly Throw Some Light on the Subject.

Dr. William James, writing on the question, "Is life worth living," in the Journal of Ethics, says:

"Suffering and hardship, as a rule, do not abate the love of life. The sovereign source of melancholy is repletion."

This is not true.

Suffering does abate the love of life, and the sovereign source of melancholy is nervous weakness and disease.

How many thousands of people there are today who can sadly bear out these facts! How many of earth's scattered millions can truly say that life is worth living! How many are there in whom the touch of melancholy is not the outgrowth of nerve or physical weakness!

Did you ever greet a man whose whole-souled smile, ruddy, beaming face and warm, pulsing hand grasp thrilled you as he cried, joyously, in answer to your salutation, "I feel first rate, I am glad I am alive!"

Did you ever greet a pale, nervous, weak individual and mark the dull, haggard eyes, the lined face, the slow-responding, wan smile, which scarcely came ere it disappeared, the cold, clammy hand lying like a dead thing in your grasp, while the feeble, quavering voice answers, echoing the hollow depths of melancholy within his soul, "I am feeling about the same—no use to myself or any one else."

The first is the personification of good health, perfect digestion and sound sleep, the system aglow with buoyant spirits, the bounding pulse, the throbbing energies, the keen zest of living and of being alive.

The second is the incarnation of ill health, brain tired, nerve weary, weak of body and enervated of mind, melancholy and dispirited, with power, energies and ambition all gone.

Ill health, from whatever cause, is the breeder of weakness, melancholy and despair. Good health means love of life and enjoyment of its every pleasure. If you are a sufferer, if you are not in perfect health, if you do not thoroughly enjoy life, the first thing for you to do is to recover your health by using that great strengthener and restorative, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. By its use you can be put in sound condition, with strong nerves, vigorous muscles, restored energies, and learn again that to the person in health life is indeed worth living.

Mr. Andrew H. Olney, of Gibson, N. Y., speaking on this subject, says:

"I was broken down with nervous and physical prostration before using Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and life was a burden. Now life is a joy and sleep is a luxury compared to it before taking Nervura. I relish my food, my nervousness has left me and so has the numbness. I wish I could shout loud enough so all the world could hear and tell them the good this wonderful medicine has done for me.

"It has made me from a weak, trembling, nervous, irritable man to one who feels he is on the highway to long years of health and happiness through Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy and the blessing of God."

Do not fail to use Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy and get back your health. This is not a so called patent medicine, but the prescription of the most successful specialist in nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who can be consulted without charge, personally or by letter.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. M. K. WHITTLESEY, D.D.

In the death of Dr. Whittlesey, at Ottawa, Ill., Jan. 15, the Congregational body of Illinois has lost a conspicuous and useful member. He was seventy-four. He was born in Stockbridge, Mass., graduated at Yale in 1844 and at Andover Theological Seminary three years later. In 1848 he supplied the First Church in Burlington, Io., but the same year became pastor of a church at Ottawa at the request of the A. M. A., where he remained twenty-one years. Accepting a call to Alton, Ill., he remained here three years, resigning to become superintendent of home missions for central and southern Illinois, with headquarters at Jacksonville. Six years later he returned to Ottawa, where he resided till his death. He was chosen registrar of the churches of the State in 1852 and has retained the office ever since. A familiar figure at State gatherings, intensely interested in all that pertains to the welfare of the denomination, yet with broad sympathies for all Christians, he will be greatly missed by those who have had the privilege of his acquaintance. He was a wide reader, a fine writer, a careful student, an accomplished gentleman and a friend whom one could always trust. His last words were "O the angels!" a fitting close of the life of trust which he led. He leaves a widow, a son and a married daughter. The funeral was attended in the First Church, Ottawa, Rev. L. O. Baird, pastor, assisted by Dr. G. S. F. Savage, one of Dr. Whittlesey's oldest friends and an almost lifelong associate.

REV. GEORGE H. C. VINEY,

Assistant pastor of the First Church, Pittsfield, died in that city Jan. 19, after a few days' illness, at the age of 52 years, 6 months. He had a most romantic career, having run away from a harsh overseer in England when a mere lad, and for many years knocked about as a sailor, and later as a business man, in several South American states. He became a Christian about ten years ago out in the Argentine wildernesses through the influence of a lady from Westfield, who became his second wife, the first having died several years before. At the age of forty-five he entered the Lay College at Revere, and his devotion to religious enterprises since then and his success as a Christian worker have been remarkable. He had been assistant pastor with Rev. W. V. W. Davis only a few months, but in that time had won many friends, especially among the poor and neglected.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

In the use of lithograph pictures for illustrating lessons in the primary classes Pennsylvania is reported to rank first in the number used and to be followed by New York and Massachusetts.

The receipts of the Massachusetts S. S. Association were $239.56 for December and double the amount for the corresponding month of 1894. The total receipts for the first quarter of their convention year were $1,571.56 against $545.77 for the same quarter of the previous year.

Arrangements have been made to publish, at Beirut, 1,000 copies of Angel's Christmas, translated into Arabic, the necessary permission having been granted by the censor at Constantinople. This will enable the Sunday school children of Syria to read the story in their native language.

New York State has 810 home departments with upwards of 27,000 members, 4,450 visitors and for the last year report 350 conversions. One district comprising only ten towns reports 194 departments with a membership of 8,796, visitors 991, and ninety-three of these departments have been organized five years.

Kentucky has a well-organized work, fifty of the fifty-eight counties being organized with fifteen precinct organizations. Louisville reports 17,700 scholars and 1,929 officers and teachers, a total of 19,629, out of a school population of 62,191 white children, or thirty-one per cent.

The Middleboro (Mass.) district held the first district meeting in this State for 1896 Jan. 22, in the Central Church at Middleboro. Twenty of the twenty-two schools in the five towns comprising this district reported. The address of the evening on The Heart of Sunday School Work was by Rev. F. S. Hunnewell.

A normal class and an enlargement of the home department result from a New Year's meeting of the Congregational Sunday school at Grafton, Mass. The service was arranged for a week night and combined addresses, reports, selections by the pupils and election of officers. The latter had been nominated two weeks previous by a committee appointed a month in advance.

STEPHEN ABBOTT HOLT.

This prominent citizen of Winchester died suddenly Boston, Dec. 14, 1895, and was buried at Winchester, ass., where he resided, Dec. 18. His life deserves ore than a passing notice. He was born at Norway, e., in 1820, and there passed his early years. Descended om a stock well known for its high aspiration and obility of achievement, he pursued unswervingly in e face of obstacles a studious career, graduating in rn from Phillips Academy, Andover, Bowdoin Colge and Andover Theological Seminary. He was ordained and installed over the Congregational church Milton, Vt., Jan. 1, 1850.

But destiny marked for Mr. Holt a business rather an a professional vocation. Long continued overork had told upon a constitution not robust. Very on in his ministry his health gave way, and he learned ith deep sorrow that he must relinquish the path of s choice. After a partial restoration of strength he tered into partnership with his father-in-law, Mr. eury Cutter, the head of a lumber firm of long standg in Boston. On the death of the latter Mr. Holt beme the principal, and so continued until about one ear ago, the firm for many years bearing the name of olt & Bugbee.

Business, however, although requiring close attenon, did not deprive Mr. Holt of the enjoyments of an tellectual life. Chosen hours daily, or rather nightly, ere devoted to books and to a correspondence in relaon to themes philosophical. His favorite subject was hat of Biblical theology. For fifty years he was a ible teacher, and his activity as a student enabled im to produce the ripe thought of past and present ith that varied illustration which is the result of exnded research. He was not afraid of advanced ideas theories, and was quite ready to adopt the newer ew if it appealed to his unprejudiced judgment.

It is worthy of note that Mr. Holt's Christianity was the most approved type He looked the man of faith, love and of refined rectitude which a long and thorugh acquaintance proved him to be. That his heart as true all his relationships evinced. Having allied mself with the infinite Friend, it became his chief m to observe a strict fidelity to those interests which old the regard of the mighty Leader. Accordingly we nd the church the object of his love and care. The ongregational church of Winchester has reason to be rateful for Mr. Holt's constant attention to every deartment of its life and work. The extensive repairs nd ornamentation of ten years ago give token of his aste and sacrifice. But his labors and gifts were not nfined to one field, except as we may say the field is e world. He had the spirit of the missionary and was leader in that grand endeavor to bring into one comehensive view the whole of humanity, by which Chrisans of the day are enabled to toil and pray for the orld with the mind of the Master.

The rare quality of this man's friendship, as known y personal attachment, as felt by his family and the ider circle of acquaintance, may not be described. ords are inadequate and silence is preferred. Let is much be said. To know Mr. Holt, to counsel and work with him, was to love him. His memory is essed. Thus, whether we consider the business man roughout a long and successful career, or the student ho, mentally, at least, never relinquished his first ve, or the friend holding to his heart the near or dist brother, we are in the presence of an example of gnity, of purity and of power, and are constrained to y of the life that it was both noble and complete.

Mr. Holt was married in 1850 to Nancy W., daughter the late Henry Cutter of Winchester. Seven chilen were born to them, four of whom are living—Mrs. illiam Wheelwright Northend, William W., connected ith the firm of Holt & Bugbee, Henry C. of the firm of ales & Holt, architects, and Edwin B., Class of '96, arvard.

DELIGHTFUL OLD WORLD TRIPS.—Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb have planned a magnificent series of European trips for the coming spring and summer, and many quaint and interesting spots will be visited that are but little known to the average tourist. Two parties will depart from our shores March 21. One of these will make a comprehensive tour of Spain and Portugal. The other will make a more extended round of travel visiting Italy, Greece, the Levant, Turkey, Servia, Bosnia, Herzegovina, Austria-Hungary and other countries of southern and central Europe. Bosnia and Herzegovina contain some of the most picturesque scenery in all Europe, and it has been quite recently that its points of interest have been made accessible. A circular giving full details of these and other tours may be obtained of Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb, 296 Washington Street, opposite School Street.

CURE WITHOUT MEDICINE.
A SIMPLE HOME TREATMENT OF UNEQUALED VALUE.
Administered by attaching an instrument to the flesh, which aids the system to take on Oxygen from the Atmosphere, to the utmost amount the system can use.

IT IS A TREATMENT OF THE BLOOD, and by purifying, revitalizing, and loading it with Nature's Nerve Food, ejects DISEASE, by removing its causes. It applies of necessity to all diseases as no other treatment ever has.

THE OXYGEN COSTS NOTHING, the price of the instrument being all the expense necessary for years. It can be used by the entire family.

"I sought the aid of a dozen of the best physicians I could find, but they helped me very little. I also tried Compound Oxygen thoroughly, and the Electric battery, but they helped me very little. On Dec. 17, 1891, I commenced using the Electropoise, and continued it about four months. During this time my disabilities were greatly removed. In the course of a year from the time I commenced using it I enjoyed almost perfect health, which has continued to this date. I have great faith in it." REV. J. H. MANSFIELD, Athol, Mass.

BEAUTIFUL BURNS SOUVENIR.

Pictorial Card Commemorative of the Scottish Bard's Birth.

The closing day of the present week is the 137th anniversary of the birth of Robert Burns, and the present year is the 100th since his death.

Wherever the hearts of men have throbbed at the touch of Scotland's poet, wherever kindly memories have been kindled by the strains of "Auld Lang Syne," wherever mirth, or love, or human pity have been awakened by the untaught song of the great peasant bard, these anniversary occasions will turn the thoughts of women and men to the face and form of Burns and to his favorite haunts, and to those memorials which, in his own and other lands, a grateful world has reared as tributes to his genius.

The firm of Gilchrist & Co., 5 and 7 Winter Street, has very happily seized this fitting opportunity to present to its customers a memorial of the great poet of Scotland, and of all other countries as well, which is worthy of the man and the occasion.

From Naismith's celebrated portrait of Robert Burns, and from photographs recently taken, a beautiful group of pictures has been produced upon a card 10½ x 12½ inches in size. In the center is the picture of the poet, and in the corners are the Burns cottage at Ayr, Alloway Kirk, Ayr, the Burns monument at Kilmarnock and the Burns monument at Albany, N. Y.

A verse from the poet's writings is inscribed above the portrait, and beneath it are the dates "Born January 25, 1759; died July 21, 1796."

The reproduction of these valuable pictures is admirably done, and the result is a memorial of Burns which is well worth framing and being preserved in any home where the poet is read and loved.

Beginning today, and continuing until the close of business on Saturday, January 25, Gilchrist & Co. will present to every customer whose purchase amounts to 25 cents or over a copy of this beautiful picture, which has been specially prepared for them by an artist of ability. It is only necessary to see it in order to be impressed with its value.

Remember Saturday is the last day for Souvenirs.

The House of Obed-Edom.

By Margaret E. Sangster.

The house of Obed-Edom
Where safe the ark abode,
What time were wars and fightings
On every mountain road,
What time was pitched the battle
In every valley fair,
The house of Obed-Edom
Had peace beyond compare.

With famine on the border
And fury in the camp,
With the starving children huddled
In the black tent's shivering damp,
With the mothers crying sadly
And every moan a prayer—
In the house of Obed-Edom
Was neither want nor care.

The fields of Obed-Edom
No foeman trod them down,
The towers of Obed-Edom
Were like a fortressed town,
And only grace and gladness
Came speeding on the road,
To the house of Obed-Edom,
Wherein the ark abode.

And far and near they told it,
The men who passed that way,
How fell Jehovah's blessing
On that home by night and day;
How the smallest to the greatest
Had joy and hope and love,
While the roof of Obed-Edom
Was watched by God above.

The line of Obed-Edom
Is on the earth today;
In the house of Obed-Edom
Still he may safely stay
Who, dearer than all treasure
For which men toil and plod,
Shall prize the covenant-blessing,
The hallowed ark of God.

And never strife nor clamor
Shall break the tranquil spell
In which our Lord's beloved
Forever safely dwell.
In the house of Obed-Edom,
In sunlight or in dark,
Abides the ceaseless blessing
That rests within the ark.

"I have read with interest your itinerary. Your plans are so well made I cannot think of any suggestion which we could make that would add. I wish for you a most prosperous trip and one that I am sure will be of great profit to missionary enterprise."

In appropriate succession to our late Church Music Tour to the world's center of church music, and our delightful pilgrimage to the places memorable in the Church's history, we have arranged for a tour to the great centers of missionary work, on the occasion of the centennial of the sailing of the first missionaries to the South Sea Islands. The same care in all details as to comfort, and similar rare facilities for pleasure and profit, which marked the other tours, will render this a very unusual opportunity for visiting these beautiful and romantic portions of the world. ## THE CHRIST OF TODAY.

By GEORGE A. GORDON, D. D., Minister of the Old South Church, Boston, and author of "The Witness to Immortality in Literature, Philosophy, and Life." Crown 8vo, $1.50.

The New England Magazine for January had a long and profoundly interesting review of this book. After mentioning Mr. Fiske's "Idea of God" and "Destiny of Man," and Mr. Drummond's "Ascent of Man" as specially significant volumes, the writer (Mr. Mead) remarks: "Mr. Gordon's 'The Christ of Today' seems to us destined to prove another of these epoch-making books for the American churches. . . . The distance between the point of view of any other book emanating from the Old South pulpit and this book is almost immeasurable. . . . We do not know of any other recent work where the issue between a philosophical Trinitarianism and philosophical Unitarianism has been so clearly defined as in this book."

Heredity and Christian Problems.

BY

The Rev. AMORY H. BRADFORD, D. D.

12mo, cloth, $1.50.

"We think this the best study of heredity from the Christian standpoint that has been issued."—Zion's Herald.

"There is many a chapter for reflection in 'Heredity and Christian Problems,' by Amory H. Bradford. . . . Its style is clear, its arguments often brilliant, and his deductions worthy of respect." — Boston Traveller.

"In this field Dr. Bradford has been a student for many years, and has found it fruitful for his work as a Christian, pastor, and teacher. What he has gathered he has here given to parents, educators, reformers, as a help in the grave problems of the home, the school, the common life of men." —The Outlook.

"The really fine and characteristic feature in all these chapters and in the scheme of reform presented by Dr. Bradford is his faith in Christianity as a divine and spiritual power in the world, set to operate along the lines of certain intelligent methods. Repeatedly in this volume we are warned off the ground of exclusive reliance on any one method of reform, and called back to the broader principles of divine Christianity."—Independent.

THE report of the deputation to Japan, the summary of which is printed in this number, recommends an important new departure for missions, which has already begun to be realized. Visits of our ablest Christian leaders to mission fields to preach and lecture would command the attention of large classes in those fields, would strengthen the work of missionaries and greatly increase the interest in that work among American churches. We recall such visits, although not official, by Dr. Ladd to Japan, Joseph Cook and Dr. Pentecost to India, and others with excellent results. Facilities of travel, with greatly increased knowledge of the English tongue in Eastern nations, open the way for this new movement. It would be well that it should be under the direction and with the support of all our mission boards, provided of course that the work is undenominational. Such a missionary effort, wisely supplemented by the use of the best Christian literature both in the languages of the people to whom it is addressed and in English, may mark a new era in the work of foreign missions, which we hope to see fully inaugurated with the beginning of the new century.

Few of the contributors to foreign missions, we fear, have given much time to considering what the reduction of work means which is made necessary by the continued diminished receipts. Their sympathies are often stirred to generosity by an account of the opportunity to rescue some child from ignorance and heathenism. Is that a more worthy object than to keep a half-rescued soul from lapsing into degradation? Secretary Judson Smith's statement in another column is vividly illustrated by some comparisons of Rev. Dr. Chamberlain in the Christian Intelligencer. He shows specifically what is to be the result of the order to reduce the appropriations of the Arcot Mission eleven and one-half per cent. He says it means, "Back out of twelve Christian village congregations"; "Bid 207 persons now under instruction for membership in the church to go back to heathenism"; "Disband thirteen schools and send 332 pupils back to darkness"; "Close one girls' school, and shut out the single ray of light from 169 Hindu homes"; "Shut up one training school and count on forty less trained native assistants." We cannot continue the recital further. The question is not concerning the opening of new work. Can the churches afford to close the doors to so many who have begun to be interested in following Christ?

Study of the Bible, apart from the regular Sunday school lessons, is a distinct feature in many churches, and we think the number is increasing. We hear of one, two or more classes in a church, led by competent teachers, selecting their own subjects, which usually include the survey of one or more of the books of the Bible. These classes are especially numerous in the neighborhood of colleges, whose professors render important service in increasing popular knowledge of the Bible. The interest in many cases is great, and persons are attracted who have not been habitual church-goers. There are scores of cities in which one or more of these classes have gained considerable local reputation. New Haven is more than usually fortunate in this respect, a number of the professors giving their services in several churches. The First Church, Dr. Newman Smyth's, has issued a series of Sunday school lesson papers on the Gospel of Luke which, though not following the International Lessons, would prove very suggestive to teachers using those lessons. Several other outlines for class study are before us, and in all these things we see signs of a deepening interest in the Bible whose spiritual fruits, we are confident, will be gathered by the churches in coming years.

In order to make the position of The Congregationalist plain upon the question of the Manitoba schools, which is exercising our Canadian neighbors and causing our contemporary, the Sacred Heart Review, to say unpleasant things of us, we would say that we believe in law, but we believe in a change of law—by revolution, if necessary—when laws made for us by others are found to be hostile to the convictions and experience of the people. We do not believe that any American state can permanently prosper without acceptance of the American principle of a total separation between church and state, and, if the vast majority of the people of Manitoba have convinced themselves of this—as the recent elections seem to show—they will have their way, the constitution of the Dominion to the contrary, notwithstanding. In spite of its bitterness our contemporary really believes in this principle, as witness its quotation with full approval of a sermon by Archbishop Kain, which glorifies "the reality, embodied in the words of a well-known statesman, who never dreamed of, and never in his heart wished for such a realization—a free church in a free state." The trouble is that our contemporary is invincibly ignorant of the fact that state schools are neither of necessity irreligious nor Protestant.

An aristocrat—what is he? Can he exist with propriety in the midst of democracy? A Wisconsin superintendent of schools recently charged Pres. C. K. Adams of the University of Wisconsin with "propagating aristocratic tendencies at the university." The special investigating committee appointed to ascertain the truth or falsity of this awful charge has just reported. It says that much depends upon what is meant by the word aristocracy:

> If we mean by it the elevation of intellectual and moral ideas so that, in university circles, those students are held in highest esteem whose intellectual attainments and moral standards are highest, then your committee would be inclined to find President Adams guilty of the charge. If, on the other hand, the term aristocratic is applied to a standard which regards wealth and social position as the most desirable objects to be attained in life, then your committee must say that they have been unable to find the slightest evidence that such a standard is held by the authorities of the university.

Calling to remembrance the Professor Ely case, it would seem in order to remark that some of Wisconsin's subordinate public officials have great facility in firing weapons whose recoil is more dangerous than their thrust.

A Jewish rabbi, lecturing upon the relation of the Jews to the crucifixion of our Lord, calls the picture of his life which is found in the gospels the idealization and celestialization of the religious opinions of men who wrote a century or more after his death. Having gone so far we fail to see how he could stop just at this point. The stream does not rise above its source, and the theory that there was a body of religious opinion which was capable of producing in the decadent Roman world such a character as that of Jesus seems to us to involve a far greater miracle than any asserted by the Church of Christ. Elements which are crystallized must exist already in solution, and, if it were true that much of the gospel story was of later invention, the glory of its purity and righteousness could only have been learned, we believe, from him who called himself the Truth.

At a recent installing council a motion was made to invite certain clergymen present to sit as corresponding members. The inquiry comes to us, Was the motion in order? No. It certainly is not according to Congregational principles for a council to invite persons into any kind of membership. A council is composed of representatives of churches invited to form it, and if individuals are also invited it is by the church calling the council, which furnishes to every church invited a list of all the churches and individuals included. Nor do we know what is meant by a "corresponding" member. There is nothing for him to correspond with or to. We have known of a few instances where such invitations have been extended, but every such instance was a violation of Congregational principles. If the persons thus invited should take part in the private session of a council, or even be present, the gross impropriety of the whole proceeding would appear in a still stronger light, and any participation whatever in the proceedings of the council might invalidate, in some cases, its entire result.

THE UNITED STATES AND ENGLAND.

It is easy to arouse hostile feelings in this nation toward our mother country. It is worse than useless to blind ourselves to this fact. The press of this month has been emblazoned with it. If England had heaped on the United States a tithe of the indignity we are enduring from Turkey, we should now be engaged in war. If England had refused to recognize United States consuls or to permit them to enter British territory to which our Government had sent them, if American citizens had been robbed, their houses burned and the property of which they had been despoiled had been found in the possession of British officials, while demands for satisfaction had met with no response, would peaceful relations continue between these two countries? The unutterable atrocities which Turkey is inflicting on her Christian subjects stir our detestation of the one and our pity for the other. But no such disposition to fight is felt in America because of these things as springs up when England appears likely to trespass on territory claimed by Venezuela.

It is not difficult to explain this feeling toward England. She is our closest rival in power over the world, in trade, in literature, in everything that makes for supremacy among nations. The two countries are alike in the character of their people, their principles of government, their religion—alike in all their aims and disposition. Such close intimacy provokes opposition, and makes the two peoples keenly sensitive to each other's criticism. They are almost as near to one another as Conservatives and Liberals in England, Democrats and Republicans in the United States. The discussion of points at issue between the two countries has quite fallen short in its belligerent tone of the strife of party politics, even when differences of party policy have been too slight in themselves to awaken great popular interest.

But the danger of actual war between England and the United States can never be great unless it should be suddenly precipitated. Sober second thoughts are sure to forbid it. Such a war would strike the worst possible blow at the Christianity which is the object of dearest interest to the majority in both nations. It would tend to destroy the principles of free government which are the pride of Englishmen and Americans alike. It would annihilate for multitudes the business on which they subsist and would cripple the prosperity of millions more. It would humiliate and weaken the two foremost nations of the world, whose interest in humanity is making this century illustrious over all its predecessors for its recognition of the solidarity of the human race. It would break, if that be possible, thousands of personal ties of friendship which exalt the pure ambition and sweeten the lives of an ever increasing number of men and women who have forgotten that there is any dividing line between Americans and Englishmen whom they honor and love.

What would be gained by such a war? Absolutely nothing. But the threats of it have discovered to many how fatal and shameful would be the folly of it, and now that the people in both countries have been set to thinking about it, they will compel their leaders to settle the difficulties which must arise between them as Christian gentlemen, to whom the prosperity and honor of both lands is dear for their own sakes and for the sake of the world. So much we have gained by the blaze of passion which is now dying away.

A MINISTERS' BLIND POOL.

We have received a copy of a printed circular which has been sent to Presbyterian ministers, at least in the Synod of New York, by Rev. R. S. Green, D. D., to whose resignation of the presidency of Elmira College and connection with a speculative investment association we referred in our issue of Jan. 16. It is headed "A personal word to my friends," and begins with an explanation of his failure to raise the endowment which the college needs, followed by a statement that he retains the editorial charge of the Assembly Herald, the newspaper organ of the missionary boards, ("for ten cents," "should be in every Presbyterian family,") after which it turns to business. "I feel that I can be of great service to my friends," he says. "As a rule, their income is none too large. If I can increase it for them I shall feel that I have done a praiseworthy act, for which I shall have their gratitude." Then—in a spirit of self-confidence which perhaps it would be invidious to compare with that in which he seems to have undertaken the endowment of the college—he proceeds to narrate his financial triumphs and expectations. He has gained by purchase of stocks "in the Venezuelan war panic," profits of nine per cent. on the stock of the association, sixteeen and one-fourth and fifty-three per cent. on two closed up "syndicates," and over fifty per cent, at present market rates, on five others in which the securities are yet unsold; and he offers the stock of the association, including its profits, in ten dollar shares at par.

We should have no concern with this scheme of Wall Street speculation by means of a clerical "blind pool" if it were not that a prominent clergyman offers thus to lead his brethren into paths that have too often ended in disaster. What Dr. Green has done, having been so fortunate as to have ready money on hand, is to buy securities in a time of panic and hold them for a time of partial recovery, and where he has taken his profits they at least are secure. But panics, we may hope, will not recur, and they never blow a trumpet to forewarn speculators of their coming, and if they should recur there would be a loss on every share the association holds for its clients. Profits in panic times are only for those who come with hands empty of stocks and full of cash. The Wall Street pendulum notoriously swings both ways. In a falling market what is Dr. Green to do? The profits then are in betting that stocks will fall still farther, that is, in "selling short."

Is the editor of the Assembly Herald ready to match his wits against those of the keen speculators who have made a lifelong study of calculation and manipulation? Adopting the worst form of speculation—that of the "blind pool"—he has made himself the bell wether of a flock of lambs who, we fear, will go where "lambs" are always shorn. There will be anxious watchings of the stock lists and long waitings for a recovery which alone can retrieve losses, we fear, and sleepless nights in dread of poverty—none of them favorable conditions for sermon writing or pastoral visitation—among the clients of the association of which Dr. Green is president.

The Presbytery of Chemung, of which Dr. Green is a member, cannot, in our judgment, too speedily declare its attitude with respect to a member who is at once a doctor of divinity, the editor of a missionary newspaper and the solicitor of funds from his brother ministers for purposes of speculation in Wall Street.

THE CHURCH AS THE CONSCIENCE OF THE COMMUNITY.

Though theories differ as to the nature and polity of the church, all admit that it stands for high moral ideals. If it sometimes insists on certain limited doctrinal phases of truth, and hedges admission to its privileges with prescribed forms, it nevertheless defends truth in the large sense, and, in theory at least, insists upon purity of character and righteous conduct on the part of its members. In its beliefs and in its official action it professes to embody the principles of the gospels, to represent the spirit of Christ in its attitude toward the world without.

The church cannot, therefore, be indifferent to any existent evil. Nor can it commission anybody outside itself to rebuke that evil and itself remain silent in its presence. Nor may it close its eyes to prevailing laxity of moral sentiment, to any disregard of fundamental truths, to errors hidden or open. It is the duty of the church to watch for evils against which to lift up a warning voice, to detect the signs of error before it becomes widespread and dangerous, to see that the moral sense of the community in which it exists is never blunted, that the standards which Christ sets up in his words are never lowered.

Whatever the social evils which at any given time afflict a community, the church has no right to overlook them or fail to lift its protest against them. Its leaders are under a sacred obligation to Christ to study their nature and the best and wisest methods with which to meet them. With reference to intemperance, unchastity, open violation of the Sabbath, dishonest dealing, transgression of any of the Commandments, this is admitted. Many insist also that the church ought to take part in the discussions between capital and labor, and, in general, decide in favor of labor as the oppressed party, but while there may be doubt as to the wisdom of direct interference by the church as an organized body with the differences which arise between classes in the community, there can be no doubt that the principles underlying these differences ought to be set forth clearly and calmly and emphasis put upon the right so decisively that no one can fail to understand as to the course of conduct to be pursued. In other words, by its constitution the church is bound to look upon itself as the conscience of the community, as the standard by which people may safely determine their conduct, and so far as a body of persons may think for others regulate their opinions.

We by no means advocate any undue authority for the church, but we insist that, recognizing the place it fills in the community, as we believe by the appointment of God, its teachers and officers keep in mind the tremendous responsibility they are under for the prevalence of right opinions and a correct standard of conduct. For opinions admittedly open to question the church cannot stand; but simply for those undeniable truths, for those principles of action, which no one who accepts the gospels at all can fail to see are there inculcated. Then in times of social unrest, of injustice from man to man, of high-handed proceedings on the part of corporations, the voice of the church will be welcome. The principles which find utterance in its pulpits will carry the weight which accompanies sincerity, uprightness and unselfishness. Few men will then enter upon a course of action which they know the church must necessarily rebuke, or even disapprove. No large body of men will defy its opinions, simply because it has taken its proper place as the conscience of the community. That this is its proper place cannot be denied. As little can it be denied that its ideals of truth and duty ought to be so made manifest in the lives of its members that the mere passing of the house where they worship, or the meeting with one of them on the street, will serve as a rebuke to impure thoughts or unholy deeds.

That the church has often been silent when it ought to have spoken, that persons have been reckoned among her members whose lives bore no resemblance to the character and life of its founder, that methods to secure popularity have been made use of which belong more properly to the theater than to a religious organization, must be sadly admitted. It ought to be borne in mind that it is not the size of the audiences which gather to hear what the pulpit may say which attests its usefulness, but the clear, honest, emphatic presentation of the principles which Christ taught, principles which, having been manifested in his person and life, are to be realized in the persons and lives of all who bear his name.

When the church awakes to a sense of its real position in a community as the conscience of that community, when its members seek earnestly and faithfully to be right on all questions which occupy thought, or about which opinions are more or less confused, there will be less justification than some think now exists for the employment of other agencies than that which Christ has chosen through which to reach and bless men. But the public conscience must be kept pure and be enlightened or it will become worthless. The church must not forget that spiritual power, even if unseen, is far greater than that which is visible and material, and that failure to employ the methods by which alone this spiritual power is obtained is, and forever must be, without excuse. It is the privilege of the church to create right sentiment. But this sentiment can be created only as the church fulfills her mission in the world as the representative of whatsoever things are pure, true, lovely and of good report, as the body in which the Spirit of Christ continually dwells.

The Independent reports a new invention in the line of Sunday games put upon the market by an Austrian firm for the use of pious Roman Catholics. A pack of cards, each containing a printed prayer for the dead, is shuffled and distributed, and each player concentrates his attention upon some departed friend and repeats the prayer for the benefit of his soul. Perhaps this is as near as our Austrian Roman Catholic brethren are likely to get at present to the freedom of a prayer meeting, and we are not at all disposed to make fun of it, but, if this is a game, where does the play come in?

WITNESSING FOR CHRIST.

We do not mean merely declaring one's self a servant of Christ in a prayer meeting or elsewhere. True witness bearing means much more than words. It means the testimony of plain distress when sin has been committed, of self-evident longing to learn and do God's will, of loving helpfulness towards those in need of sympathy and aid, of self-sacrifice instead of resolute insistence upon one's rights, of self-control and gentleness under provocation, of patience in pain and grief, of forgiveness of injuries, of unmistakable confidence in the goodness of God and the coming of his kingdom.

But why should we bear witness for Christ? If for no other reason, because he has bidden us do so. We are under orders. But it is not a matter of obligation only. We witness for him because of gratitude and affection for him. We rejoice to tell others what he has done and is doing for us. We hope to persuade them to accept him as their Redeemer and Guide. We bear witness to them for him because we love them as truly as him, and can show our love for either in no other manner so well. That all may become his sincere followers is our desire and hope, as it is his.

And we have his authority behind us. We are not testifying of what we of ourselves know only. We are intrusted with a message from him. We are his agents, his heralds, and, not content with simple appeal, we testify out of our own experience. They only touch the heart effectively, as the rule, who speak out of the history of their own lives. He who can say, "Give your heart to Christ for he can save and help and bless you as he has me, when my need and my sin were as grievous as yours," speaks tellingly and will be heeded.

Let it not be forgotten that the witness which we bear for Christ is not only, nor always chiefly, that of our most spiritually conscious, purposeful hours, but that of the periods when we are intent upon business, study or pleasure. If those who watch us see that our purpose of loyalty to Christ pervades and controls us then, almost unconsciously, so to speak, and because it is interwoven with the very warp and woof of our lives, they will believe in it.

THE WEEK IN REVIEW.

Congress Condemns Turkey.

At last the United States has expressed in an official way the abhorrence which its citizens as individuals have felt for the atrocities in Armenia and the supineness of the European Powers bound by treaty obligations to prevent or suppress them. The Senate, after listening to eloquent and forcible speeches by Senators Cullom of Illinois and Frye of Maine—the speech of the latter senator being especially impassioned and eloquent—has passed the following resolutions, the preamble reciting the treaty obligations of the European Powers being omitted by us:

Resolved, By the Senate of the United States, the House of Representatives concurring, that it is an imperative duty in the interest of humanity to express the earnest hope that the European concert, brought about by the treaty referred to, may speedily be given its just effect in such decisive measures as shall stay the hand of fanaticism and lawless violence, and as shall secure to the unoffending Christians of the Turkish empire all the rights belonging to them both as men and Christians and as beneficiaries of the explicit provisions of the treaty above recited;

Resolved, That the President furnish a copy of the foregoing resolution to Great Britain, Germany, Austria, France, Italy and Russia;

Resolved, Further, That the Senate of the United States, the House of Representatives concurring, will support the President in the most vigorous action he may deem fit to take for the protection and security of American citizens in Turkey and to obtain redress for injuries committed upon the persons or property of such citizens.

On the 27th the House of Representatives, by a vote of 143 to 26, indorsed the Senate resolutions. Some of the congressmen were in favor of an amendment directing the President to terminate diplomatic relations with Turkey, and others opposed any utterance save that of abhorrence, fearing the precedent to be established in interfering with European politics. The resolution does not need the indorsement of the President to become effective.

Senator Frye, in his speech supporting the Senate resolutions, went farther than his colleagues in denunciation of Great Britain and expressions of willingness to appeal at once to Russia to assume control of the provinces which Turkey has been and still is pillaging. But it seems now as if Russia had intervened already, and by so doing made anything we may say or do useless save as it preserves our own reputation as a nation full of sympathy and indignation, even though tardily expressed. It was an interesting, and if voiced two months ago it would have been a pregnant, utterance that Mr. Joseph Chamberlain made last Saturday at Birmingham, when he said: "Would it were possible that instead of wasting breath in a petty South American boundary dispute we could count on the powerful support of the United States in enforcing the representations, which hitherto we have fruitlessly made in behalf of those who are suffering by Turkish tyranny and Turkish fanaticism."

The Appeal of Manufacturers.

The annual convention of the manufacturers of the country at Chicago, Jan. 22–25, in some respects was one of the most important gatherings of the year. Those taking part in it were men who are contributing by capital and energy to the prosperity of this generation. A great many matters of prime importance to industry were discussed, and always intelligently. Of course the purpose of the manufacturer is to win profit, and the discussion always bore on the question, What changes are desirable in order to increase profits? As the result of the interchange of views resolutions were adopted embodying the following recommendations: the speedy passage by Congress of an emergency revenue bill to meet the expenses of the national government; the reform of the currency system of the country; the establishment of a merchant marine by subsidies if necessary; the restoration of protection and reciprocity; the speedy construction of the Nicaragua canal, under the protection of the government and with such government aid as may be called for; the recognition of the industrial class as being as important as the agricultural class to the welfare of the nation. A proposition favoring the pooling of railroad earnings under the direction of the interstate commerce commission was withdrawn, although a good deal was said in its behalf. A convention representing all sections of the country, unbiased by political prejudice, is of value as reflecting the feeling which prevails in business circles in regard to the questions of financial and industrial policy now engaging the attention of thoughtful men in every party.

Great Britain and the United States.

Everything done during the past week bearing upon the present and future relations of the two great nations charged with the responsibility of preserving political liberty for the individual and Christian civilization for the race has been pacific in its import. The English newspapers and people who have seen the text of the first letter issued by the Venezuela commission have been impressed by its candor and fraternal and judicial spirit. Great Britain's decision to proceed with the arbitration of the dispute with the United States over the award of damages growing out of the decision of the Bering Sea tribunal has proved that the spirit of arbitration like a dove still hovers around the British Foreign Office. Speeches made by Mr. Goschen and Mr. Joseph Chamberlain on British foreign affairs have contained such allusions to the Monroe Doctrine and the Venezuela affair as to demonstrate that the Salisbury ministry is most anxious for an amicable, honorable settlement of the controversy and knitting closer than ever before the most fraternal relations between the mother and the daughter. Mr. Chamberlain's speech was especially explicit in its language and friendly in its tone.

At home the best sentiment of the country has decided that, however important the Monroe Doctrine may be, the present is not a time for defining it in a hard and fast way and bumptious manner. Hence resolutions indorsing the Monroe Doctrine have been suppressed in the legislature of Massachusetts and the resolution reported by the United States Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, which we printed last week, not only has not passed the Senate but it has called forth the opposition of the President and Secretary of State, received the editorial condemnation of the leading newspapers of the country irrespective of party and led up to a protest by the people, made known to their representatives in Washington by letter and telegram. Senator Wolcott of Colorado, in a trenchant and fine-spirited speech, has attacked the resolution in the Senate and others senators intend to follow his example. If it can be kept before the Senate and the people a few weeks longer without being brought to a vote, the resolution will receive so many negative votes as to deprive its passage by the Senate of much weight, and when it goes to the House for approval it is said that there it will be side-tracked, the House Foreign Relations Committee considering the resolution to be most inopportune and impolitic. Public sentiment has not authorized the national legislature to declare a protectorate over South and Central America, and yet that is what the passage of the resolution would imply. How vexing and dangerous such a declaration might be may be reasonably inferred from the crop of renewed controversies between European and South American Powers that has sprung up since we seemed to make Venezuela's cause our own. The majority of our citizens have yet to be convinced that the Latin type of civilization dominant in the territory south of us, though nominally republican in its political form, is therefore to be protected by us solely because of this nominal similarity in political structure. Senator Wolcott, in addressing the Senate, was not far from the truth when he said:

> These people, although alien in race, language and religion, are entitled to our friendly and affectionate regard; as citizens of a sister republic we owe them protection whenever the interests of free government or the cause of civilization is attacked by assaults upon their autonomy. Beyond that point our obligation ceases. . . .
> Whatever of advancement and of progress for the human race the centuries shall bring us must largely come, in my opinion, through the spread of the religion of Christ and the dominance of the English-speaking peoples, and wherever you find both you find communities where freedom exists and law is obeyed. Blood is thicker than water, and until some just quarrel divides us, which heaven forbid, may these two great nations of the same speech and lineage and traditions stand as brothers, shoulder to shouldor, in the interest of humanity, by their union compelling peace, and awaiting the coming of the day when "nation shall not lift sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

Armenia Prostrate. The Red Cross Debarred.

As late as Dec. 28, 29 the Turks massacred 1,500 Armenians at Oorfa, devoting especial attention to those who, having nominally accepted the Moslem faith, were not entering upon its rites and duties with enthusiasm. The evidence accumulates that Turkish officials are directly responsible for all that has been done; that the payment of tribute money no longer saves as it used to—it is death or change of faith now; that large numbers of the Armenians have become Moslems, but quite as many have died rather than be disloyal to Christ; that Armenian women and girls are being sold as chattels, and payment for them taken in donkeys and other brutes; that the winter is unusually severe, making the mortality from starvation greater and the work of relief more difficult; that not only is the Red Cross Society debarred, but the Porte has denied missionaries of the American Board the privilege of extending the range of their relief work on the ground that they are dangerous, "disturbers of the peace."

The statement sent forth from Constantinople last week that Miss Barton and her assistants, who sailed from New York on the 23d, will be permitted to distribute relief as inviduals—if so named as competent by the United States Minister Terrell—but not as members of the Red Cross, is not easily interpreted, unless as a trick of the sultan to satisfy the appeals of Mr. Terrell for an answer of some sort. Turkey stands to lose as much by any such settlement of the case as if she permitted the Red Cross to work, and besides she incurs the charge of disregarding treaty pledges. Miss Barton can scarcely agree to work in any other capacity than as a Red Cross adherent and official.

Is the Sultan a Vassal of the Czar?

Europe is intensely interested in the report, first cabled from Constantinople to The Pall Mall Gazette in London, that an offensive and defensive alliance between Russia and Turkey has been cemented, the basis of the treaty being in substantial agreement with that formulated July 8, 1833, and known as the treaty of Unkiar-Skelessi, a treaty which, with its consequent events, compelled England, France, Austria and Prussia in 1839 to feel that they must interfere, check Russia and control the policy of Turkey. This report is denied officially by the grand vizier in Constantinople, and other sources of information likely to know of its truth or falsity profess ignorance, but the report gains credence in most of the capitals of Europe and is substantiated somewhat by circumstantial evidence. France, of course, is asserted to be a party to the compact, and stands ready to profit by its consummation as well as lend its support in diplomacy or war. A few years ago such a coup on the part of Russia would have aroused such a burst of indignation in Great Britain as would have made a sundering of the agreement or war inevitable. Strange to say the London correspondents of the American press report that the British press and public are showing but little concern, even though elsewhere in the world the fact is taken for granted and is being interpreted as a humiliating defeat for English diplomacy and an event threatening British supremacy in the East. If one is prepared to believe that the British Foreign Office, responding to a growing public sentiment, has determined to reverse its policy, accept Russia as a friendly rival and not a bitter foe, and permit her to have free egress between the Black Sea and the Mediterranean, then, of course, Europe and Asia have entered upon a new epoch of their history. Or, on the other hand, if, after confirmation of the truth of the report, Great Britain files its protest and prepares to back it in her customary way, of course an equally dramatic epoch opens, for Russia is in a position today to stand by any such agreement with much more tenacity than she exhibited in 1839, but Great Britain lacks the allies that she had then. Conceding, for sake of discussion, the truth of the report it would be impossible to overestimate the significance of the fact. Though it means the cessation of Moslem massacres of Armenian Christians it would usher in the authority in Asia Minor—partial or complete—of a civil power wedded inseparably to the Greek Church, a power that has persecuted Stundists and Jews with a persistency and malignancy proving that Christians as well as Moslems are past masters in cruelty. That which Russia has done to Stundists it could do and might do to the A. B. F. C. M. missionaries and their converts. Russian dominance in Turkish affairs would solve some of the problems that the American Board missionaries and home officials now face, but also instantly call into life others, more vital and perplexing. On the whole, of course, Russian authority, Russian methods of taxation and collection, Russian industrial and commercial enterprise would benefit Asia Minor and the country to the east of it.

NOTES.

If the captain of the American liner, the St. Paul, was racing with the Campania in the fog when he ran his splendid new vessel on the beach at Long Branch, N. J., then he deserves discipline of the sternest kind.

South Carolina's legislature has passed a law making operative the constitutional provision respecting lynching and the pecuniary responsibility of counties in which lynchings occur, and a bill forbidding pistols as articles of wearing apparel also has been introduced and it is thought will pass.

Solicitude for the welfare of the Americans under arrest in the Transvaal has brought pressure upon the Department of State to do all it can to secure for them a fair trial. Most of the Americans are out on parole but Mr. Hammond of California is refused release on bail, owing to his participation in the call for aid sent to Dr. Jameson, who is now en route to England.

Just as Germany, with seeming if not actual joy, has emerged from a season of ceremony consequent upon a quarter of a century of nationality, Bismarck lets it be known that he has a very contemptuous opinion of the foreign and domestic policy of the young emperor.

"We must enlarge our navy," said Great Britain and Germany and Russia last week. "We refuse to authorize it," said the Reichstag in an informal but decisive way to Emperor William. Great Britain is committed to such a policy and fortunately has a surplus revenue to rejoice in now, while in Russia the people have nothing to say about it.

France and the Roman Catholic Church seem likely to repeal the concordat that retained a certain degree of union of church and state. The state is willing to act thus for causes based both on principle and prejudice. The church has altered its attitude chiefly because the ecclesiastics have become convinced that a greater revenue accrues when, as in the United States, the church is free from all entangling alliances.

Governor Griggs of New Jersey, the first Republican governor in thirty years, says he will use his influence and authority to prevent all legislation that is not absolutely necessary. Bills before they can become laws by his consent must have positive worth and not the negative virtue of being tolerable. Apparently Governor Griggs has felt the ground swell of popular distrust of legislatures that is moving Massachusetts to work for biennial elections, shorter sessions and more experienced legislators. Governor Morton of New York State has informed the legislators of that State that they are appropriating money at a rate which means much heavier taxation.

The death of Prince Henry of Battenberg, who contracted African fever while serving on the Ashanti expedition to West Africa, removes the husband of Beatrice, the favorite daughter of Queen Victoria, and brings much sorrow in her old age to the head of the British Empire. Lord Leighton, only recently elevated to that rank and better known as Sir Frederick Leighton, the president of the British Academy, showed the ruling passion strong in death, his last words being, "My love to the academy." Hon. Theodore Runyon, United States ambassador to Germany, died suddenly in Berlin on the 26th. A jurist of high rank, a devout Methodist and an estimable man, his death causes mourning in Berlin, where he had won many friends as well as standing as a diplomat, and in New Jersey, where he long served the State as chancellor of her equity court. By the death of Alex. Macmillan, of the great firm of Macmillan Brothers, one who has done much for English authors and literature has passed on to his reward.

IN BRIEF.

Nearly one-fourth—15,000,000—of the population of the United States is enrolled in schools and colleges. Can any other country match that record?

Pope Leo two years ago urged faithful Roman Catholics to greater study of the Bible. Less than 100 copies of the Bible have been sold since then at the chief ecclesiastical bookstore in Milan. But several thousand copies of the Bible which the Pope forbids have been sold in Italy within the last two years. Perhaps the encyclical was not altogether in vain.

Ian Maclaren has no welcome for perverts, especially perverts for fashion's sake. "I consider it," he says, "a base thing for a man, unless under great constraint of conscience, to turn his back on the church at whose breast he was fed. If I were a clergyman whose church was recruited by persons who were leaving ancient communions, in which their fathers lived and died, simply because they wanted to follow the fashion, I should lift up my voice and implore such persons, for the sake of my own church and for the sake of their own souls which they are selling, to remain where they were."

A writer in one of the Sunday school magazines, inveighing against the higher criticism, cites a pathetic instance of a woman who said that now she could no longer read her Bible without thinking. Still, she might find comfort in the hope that this interest will subside, and that her children may come to read the Bible as thoughtlessly as did their ancestors.

The city of Hartford, Ct., the home of Harriet Beecher Stowe and many other friends of liberty and justice, would seem to lack humane landlords and boarding house keepers. Principal Frissell of Hampton Institute, with five graduates—Negroes—of that school, sought in vain for shelter in that city last week, and finally found it in the homes of some of the members of the Asylum Hill Church.

Rev. Dr. John Clifford, the eminent English Baptist, goes so far as to say:

To me the state is more sacred than any church—Anglican or Baptist, Romanist or Greek—for the state stands for the whole people in their manifold collective life, and any church is but a fragment of that life, though one of the most important fragments. Citizenship rightly interpreted is more than churchmanship, and to be a good citizen is more, and not less, than to be a "good churchman."

This is up-to-date Erastianism interpreted by a Collectivist.

Ohio temperance people seem to have cracked that hardest of all nuts in relation to the reform—that of unifying forces on a broad yet definite platform. The account elsewhere in this paper of what happened at their grand State convention ought to be both suggestive and stimulating to workers in this good cause all over the country. The one through whose eyes our readers see this gathering, and to whom more than to any other one man Cambridge owes its successive no-license victories, has, with characteristic humility, concealed the prominent and influential part which he personally had in the proceedings.

The National American Woman Suffrage Association, at its meeting in Washington last week, refused to accept the suggestion of its secretary that it disavow responsibility for the Woman's Bible, which, according to that official, "is a volume with a pretentious title, covering a jumble of comment without either scholarship or literary value, set forth in a spirit which is neither reverent nor inquiring." The somewhat acrimonious debate on this question revealed the fact that eight only of the more than one hundred delegates had read the book which the association was urged to repudiate—a fact which must make Susan B. Anthony grieve.

The attractive itinerary just at hand of The Evangelist's unique tour of missions will not only interest those who take the journey, but will add much to popular knowledge of missions through the published correspondence which must result from it. The program is a fascinating one, including Japan, China, Singapore, Java, New Guinea, New Zealand, the Friendly and Fiji Islands, Samoa and Hawaii. Mission boards of different denominations have been consulted, and the stations to be visited have been carefully selected. The price of the trip is remarkably reasonable. The party, which is to be limited to twenty-five, expects to start about April 8, and the journey will occupy about four months. With confidence we wish it success.

Hon. Chauncey Depew is to preside at a mass meeting to be held in New York city, where and when a message will be formulated expressing popular dissent from Gen. William Booth's exercise of authority in recalling the Ballington Booths, and asking for a rescinding of the order which summons them to England. A petition to this effect also will circulate among the members of the Auxiliary League and find many signers. While the public utterances of members of the army, like Major Brewer of Boston, are guarded in their tone it is evident that within the ranks also there is decided objection to the stringent order from London. Will the general relax?

The resolutions unanimously adopted by the New York and Brooklyn Association last week have the right ring:

We most strongly deplore and reprobate all utterances which present the idea of war between us and our mother country in any other light than that of an awful calamity, the work of very antichrist. We insist that in the Christian view of the world there are no international limits to moral obligations. We hold it at all times important, and specially important at this time, to inculcate in all schools and families the Christian principle that the bonds of human brotherhood are upon us toward the men across the sea the same as toward the man across the street. We deem it the duty of the hour to proclaim in no doubtful tone that this is a truth which professedly Christian men cannot ignore without infidelity to the principles of the gospel and the law of Christ.

An Ohio lady who was deeply touched by Mrs. C. L. Goodell's article in our issue of Jan. 2, entitled A Month with Jesus, has reprinted it in leaflet form for circulation primarily among her friends. She has already sent out from her sick room 2,000 copies of it and she will be glad to furnish others with the little leaflet without cost, though those seeking it from her will, of course, be willing and glad to pay the return postage. Her address is Mrs. S. M. Scott-Slauson, Piqua, O. It is interesting to both editors and contributors to learn that the helpfulness of articles that appear in this paper is not, in many cases, confined to the medium of their original circulation.

War pensions, it is claimed, lay an annual tax of more than two dollars a year on every person in this country. That is a large sum, but, if those who fought in that war saved the Union, it ought to be worth at least two dollars a year to every person who lives in it.

After the address at the Boston Ministers' Meeting last Monday morning upon the effect of mental states upon our physical conditions, Moderator Barnes, in introducing President Blanchard of Wheaton College, said that a certain class of Eastern-bred men who went West were in the habit of visiting the East with the intention of carrying back as much money as they could, and this class of men is called college presidents. President Blanchard's rejoinder caused a ripple of laughter. He said that he had been thinking how much more he would have enjoyed the address if the speaker had informed him what chemical qualities in the gastric juices would make men want to give money to colleges, while his debt of gratitude would have been still further increased by information as to how he might produce the state of mind necessary for the formation of such juices.

Ripe for the life beyond the gates was D. L. Moody's mother, who passed away at her home in Northfield last Sunday morning at the age of ninety. Visitors to the summer conferences were wont to give themselves the pleasure of a call on this good woman in her old-fashioned but beautifully located family homestead, and were always received by her with a graciousness and courtesy that are not outdone by any queen of society. Her earlier married life was a time of poverty and struggle and it is good that these later years have been free from anxiety and strain. She has lived to see her son honored throughout Christendom but none of the world's plaudits, we are confident, have been so dear to him as the quiet, approving smile with which his mother has met him on his return from his various evangelistic campaigns. One secret of D. L. Moody's marvelous career is the fact that behind him have been, all these years, the potent influence of a mother's love and the example of her godly life. Speaking of this beloved son one day, she remarked, with a twinkle in her eye: "I always thought D. L. would be either one thing or the other." Time has certainly justified her confidence in him.

The dear Lord's best interpreters
Are humble human souls,
The gospel of a life like hers
Is more than books or scrolls.

THE LITERARY EQUIPMENT OF THE MINISTER.

On Thursday and Friday of last week Prof. John F. Genung of Amherst College delivered two lectures before the Yale theological students in Marquand Chapel on the relation of the minister to literature. The speaker himself, in manner, expression and spirit, was strikingly illustrative of his own thoughts.

In the first lecture Professor Genung told what the true spirit of literature is and said that it is because of this spirit that it has lived. Literature has an antiseptic quality in its style, but literature is not preserved by style alone. It must have spirit and life. Literature moves man more than science or philosophy, because it influences the whole man, brain, emotion and intellect alike.

The minister's relation to literature is real and vital. His words must be living words, or they will not live. The subject presents itself in three practical aspects: that of dialect and idiom, the distinctive spirit of literature, and the literary sense and habitude. To reach every man is your desire. To do this you must translate your theology into a literary dialect and idiom—from the dialect of the divinity school, which is an unknown tongue to the lay hearer, into the dialect of universal man. You must put the idiom of the study into terms of universal life, out of the ecclesiastical tone into the idiom of the universal heart. In this universal idiom the heart, brain and all life is concerned. This is the idiom of literature. It is life translated into expression and it meets life. The natural is the basis of the literary idiom. "I do not mean by this," said the lecturer, "that you are to let yourselves down to the 'hail fellow well met' level. You are not to go down to men in such a way as to leave them where you find them."

There is also a distinctive literary spirit. The aim of the minister and that of literature are identical. It is the spiritual adjustment of truth. The preacher must color his message with the literary and not with the scientific and logical spirit. Literature survives science and dogma.

The ministers' culture should include that of the literary sense and habitude. This means broadness of view—looking at things in their right perspective. It includes a genial sense of humor. Such a sense sees that which is out of proportion. It is flexibility of life. The literary sense includes urbanity, graciousness and courtesy of tone which tempers personal feeling. It does not berate; it persuades. It avoids the provincial, hard-hitting tone. It can express contrary views without injuring the feelings. The literary sense gives graciousness to criticism. Literature does not argue; it persuades and leads. The literary habitude gives balance, poise, level-headedness. It avoids the use of the superlative. It is self-corrective in the direction of over-zealousness and intemperance. On the other hand it avoids pietism, the goody-goody, the maudlin.

Professor Genung's second lecture concerned itself with the kind of literature to which the minister is related. Human literature is the world's Bible now being made. To determine whether literature is truly inspired we must apply the spiritual test. Paper and ink are not immortal. It is the soul that lives.

In his attitude towards literature the minister must not be a wholesale denouncer nor a weak tolerator. But he cannot stem or stay its tide. He must, then, direct it. He must be the fellow, the critic and the interpreter of literature. Fiction and the periodical are powers today and whether for weal or woe he in considerable part must determine.

The Bible itself is literature. We now see that it must be regarded and responded to as such. Every phase of literature is represented in it. The element of literature most prevalent today is fiction. Some men have refused to admit this in the Bible, but we must realize that while the Bible is history and fact it is more than history and fact. It is truth, and there is truth that is truer than fact. The Bible contains the great truths and principles which underlie all fact and which are more valid than logic. We may get at all the facts and still be outside the truth. We are learning that the Bible must be read in the spirit of the Bible. We must accord its truths a spiritual response. This is the true literary spirit.

A single line of poetry may give rise to more thought than the knowledge of innumerable facts. The Bible has held men to one great ideal, suiting itself in its literary expression, its idiom and dialect to all ages and peoples. It is the architype of literature. It ministers to our needs of conduct and of beauty. It meets both the practical and the poetical temperament. It enlists all of man's wonderful and uplifting powers of imagination. It meets man thus because it is literature. It voices nature, the ways and thoughts of men and ever points to the ideal and away from the material to the spiritual, and this is the true spirit of literature. C. S. M.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

The Church Militant.

This organization, through its pastor, Rev. John Rusk, has invited Colonel Ingersoll to occupy its pulpit at an early date, in order to tell it just what he thinks the church should try to do. One would suppose that the opinion of the great Founder of the church would be more decisive than that of one of his openly avowed enemies. The Church Militant is the name of a new organization formed under the influence of the former pastor of one of our Presbyterian churches. Its work thus far has been quiet and unpretentious. Through its committees of lawyers and doctors it has been able to render the poor valuable assistance, and in various other ways has shown its sympathy with the more needy classes of our population. With its aims as a Christian society it would not seem possible that even an Ingersoll could disagree. How far the society will be able to carry its work, or how long it will be able to sustain itself as an independent organization and stand on a purely Christian basis, is a question which cannot be answered. It can hardly add to its chances for survival to have Colonel Ingersoll among its advocates, or one of its teachers.

No Cut in Teachers' Salaries.

The action of the Board of Education, in refusing to accept the recommendation to reduce the salary of the teachers in our public schools, especially in the high schools, was wholly due to public sentiment. The board had been made to understand that, on the whole, the people were satisfied that the teachers in our schools are not paid too much, that their work is very hard, that their opportunities for advancement are comparatively slight, and that therefore any reduction in salary would not only greatly discourage our present teaching force but tend to its rapid deterioration in character. The meeting, Wednesday evening, was one of intense interest. Both sides were patiently heard. It was openly stated on the one hand that teachers' wages were too high, as compared with what is paid engineers, clerks and other classes of working men, while on the other it was as clearly shown that no position is more important or difficult properly to fill than that of a teacher in a public school. The vote was reached shortly before midnight.

Several important changes have been adopted, few of which can be regarded as in the line of improvement. One relates to the grouping of teachers by which the possibility of promotion is seriously retarded. Another requires grade teachers, after 1897, to fit themselves to teach singing, drawing and physical culture in place of the special teachers now employed. But we are thankful for the victory already gained. It means that the standard of our schools is not to be lowered and that financial reform must be introduced into some other department of our public service than that of teachers' salaries. As one of our pastors has said, it seems strange that so much effort should be made to save a paltry $55,000 a year from what is paid teachers when it is nothing for our common council to steal $50,000 at one of its sessions. The agitation has done great good and ought to stimulate our teachers to better work than ever. It was altogether appropriate that in one of our churches, at least, the Wednesday evening prayer meeting was devoted to the interests of the public schools and that the teachers in these schools connected with that church were given the opportunity to speak of their difficulties as well as of the opportunities for usefulness which their position affords them. No one could help feeling at the close of the meeting that as a class our teachers fail to receive the sympathy and aid from the parents of their pupils which they ought to receive, and that they are rarely remembered in the prayers of the Christian people with whom they are most intimately associated.

Chicago Charities.

The Tribune is doing good service in calling attention to the amount of the charities of Chicago and the cost of their distribution. It makes the astonishing statement, which is true without doubt, that through at least two hundred organizations not less than $2,500,000 are annually distributed among those who are thought to be worthy objects of charity. Experts say that fully half the sum is unnecessary, that the present system of distribution is making paupers rather than helping them to self-support. Beginning with the universally trusted Aid and Relief Society, which has always been exceedingly careful in its use of funds, and which is the largest single charity we have, the Tribune critic affirms that it costs this society fully forty per cent. of all it receives to distribute the money put into its hands. This its friends deny and on the ground that the cost of investigation is a legitimate portion of its haritable work, and that what is paid out or service in its wood yard is also to be eckoned as a charity. According to its nanager, Rev. Mr. Truesdale, the expense f administration is only sixteen per cent. nstead of forty. Doubtless the criticisms vill do good and will lead to the refusal of nany to give through doubtful channels nd thus put an end to solicitations for nany unworthy organizations. A meeting ast Sunday evening, in which such men as Dr. J. G. Johnson of the New England Church and Dr. T. C. Hall of the Fourth Presbyterian Church took part, was given up to the discussion of the methods employed in our charitable work. These were unanimously disapproved and those of the charity organization, or of the personal visitation system followed in Berlin and that introduced by Dr. Chalmers in Edinburgh recommended.

Outcome of the Week of Prayer.

From nearly all our churches come reports of a most excellent spirit among their members. The extra meetings were well attended. Some of them were very large. But with the exception of some of our smaller churches extra meetings were not held a second week. There has been nothing like a revival anywhere. Undoubtedly the reason for this is the multiplicity of engagements into which our church members allow themselves to be drawn. It hardly admits of a question that a series of protracted services faithfully attended by professing Christians would be accompanied by a manifestation of spiritual power over which all who love our Lord would greatly rejoice.

The Haskell Lectures.

Dr. J. H. Barrows is now giving the second series of lectures on the Haskell Foundation in the University of Chicago. These lectures are on Comparative Religion and are as eloquent and instructive, and, if possible, even more decidedly favorable to Christianity, in comparison with the so-called world religions, than those given last year. The three lectures already delivered are entitled, Christianity and Hinduism, Christianity and Buddhism, Christianity and Confucianism. They show careful and extensive research, as well as the eminent fitness of their author for the honorable service he is to perform as lecturer on these and kindred subjects in India. No one need fear lest Dr. Barrows fail to emphasize Christianity at its proper value. While eminently fair and judicious he will be true to the religion of Christ which he represents.

Dr. Gladden on the Labor Question.

The late Dr. W. H. Ryder, pastor of St. Paul's Church (Universalist), who had accumulated large wealth, left $10,000 for a course of annual lectures on such moral and social subjects as would be of benefit to the people of Chicago. Among the directors of the fund were the pastors of St. Paul's, the First Presbyterian and the First Congregational Churches. Dr. Gladden was the unanimous choice of the directors of the fund as the first speaker in what will undoubtedly prove to be an important lectureship. The lectures began Tuesday evening, Jan. 21, and will close next week. They will be six in all and will treat of the social changes introduced within the last half-century, and of the duties which these changed relations are now making clear and imperative.

The subject of the first lecture was The Factory, with special reference to the principle of invention and combination of labor upon which its success depends. Dr. Gladden believes that the factory is here to stay, that the frequently strained relations between the employer of labor and his employés and the employment of married women and children are no part of the system, and that Christian principle on the part of the owners and managers of the factories and a properly educated public sentiment, toward the making of which all can contribute, will remove its evils. Dr. Gladden is not quite sure that its existence has been on the whole productive of more good than evil, but is confident that, if the examples of certain well-known manufacturing establishments in this country — as those of the Cheney Brothers, Manchester, Ct., and the Fairbankses at St. Johnsbury, Vt.—were followed, it would become one of the greatest industrial blessings of the age.

In his second lecture the subject of Labor Unions was discussed. Dr. Gladden believes in their necessity, but deprecates strikes and lockouts although he admits that the former have sometimes secured advantages for their members, and that their maintenance is wise inasmuch as their existence makes their employers feel that wages cannot be lowered without a good reason for doing so. The trades unions are the standing army of labor. They are kept up for purposes of defense. For working men they are what an army and fortifications are for a nation, which, while living in the midst of predatory tribes, desires to protect its frontiers. Friday evening the subject was Corporations. Both the advantages and the disadvantages or the dangers of these institutions were carefully analyzed and discussed. Dr. Gladden is no partisan. He strives to treat all parties with perfect fairness, to discover facts and state them without prejudice to any one. His lectures, therefore, will be completely acceptable neither to capital nor labor, but to students desirous of finding out just what ought to be done to bring capital and labor into the close relations which should exist between them they are of great value.

CURRENT THOUGHT.

AT HOME.

Zion's Herald challenges The Christian Register to support its allegation that the majority of Methodists attend the theater and thus disregard the denominational prohibition or restrictive rule.

Newspaperdom reprints Mr. Kimball's article on British versus American Journalism, which we published Jan. 16, and the New York Tribune of Jan. 26 makes it the text of an editorial. Commenting on it, Newspaperdom says: "Our [American] editorials, speaking with regard to the greater proportion, are weak, insincere and frivolous; theirs [the British] are able, thorough, carefully worded, lucidly written, sincere and generally fair and candid. Our editorials are flippant in tone, scoffing, negative, and too much given to lingual and grammatic vagaries and fantastic devices; theirs are generally models of language-construction, of grammar and forceful employment of pure English—as it should be, but is not, spoken." The same journal also says, with truth, respecting the credit which Mr. Henry Norman's recent work has reflected upon the profession: "Mr. Norman has given us an object lesson in the very highest development of the profession of journalism. He has exemplified the truth of a principle we all recognize the importance and value of, but often find it difficult to apply—that the truth, candidly and fairly dealt with, is the very greatest element in the power of the press."

What shall the United States do for Armenia? The Interior is in favor of action. "Let Congress direct the President to dispatch a fleet manned with our Decaturs and open fire upon the most accessible of the Turkish ports." But Dr. J. M. Buckley in The Christian Advocate well says in reply to this suggestion: "Before the sound of the first explosion had ceased to reverberate the signal for the massacre of every American within reach would be given."

The Davis expansion of the Monroe Doctrine is not welcomed by the best secular papers of the country nor by our religious contemporaries. The Interior says: "The American people will never adopt it until they go stark mad with the virus of Jingoism."

ABROAD.

Henry M. Stanley, in the February Century, giving The Story of the Development of Africa, says, "Talk about the emancipation of the American Negroes and the Russian serfs! They were mere commonplaces compared to the emancipation of Africa from herself that dates from 1885." He speaks in the highest terms of the Christian missionaries. "They are not all reputed to be first-class men, but it is wonderful what earnestness and perseverance will do. . . . Mission houses do not grow of themselves, gospels are not translated into African tongues, nor are converts spontaneous products of human nature. . . . To me these things represent immense labor, patience and self-denial."

The British religious press may be said to be unanimous in appealing to the Foreign Office to accede to our demand for arbitration of the dispute with Venezuela. And most of them concede the force of the Monroe Doctrine, if not the Cleveland doctrine "It originated in Westminster," says The Christian World, "not in Washington. As originally taught, and down to Mr. Cleveland's perversion of it, there is nothing in it to which we really object." The Methodist Times says that Mr. Norman's letters to The Chronicle have placed Lord Salisbury in a position that humiliates every intelligently patriotic Englishman, and it holds that Great Britain is bound "by every consideration of honor and justice to refer the entire issue to arbitration." The Christian Leader, Glasgow, says that if Mr. Norman's revelations are unimpeachable "then the position assumed by our Foreign Office is one deeply to be regretted, and the error which has been committed ought to be manfully confessed and immediately repaired."

Honest confession is as wholesome for the nation as for the individual. Why are we so isolated, so lacking in friends? ask the British newspapers. "It is proper to ask whether our spirit of aggression and our consuming desire for commercial prosperity may not have put us in the wrong," the British Weekly admits. The Christian World confesses that "the average Englishman's sense of superiority is so deep as to be dumb. It never occurs to him that any such competition for admiration can affect his country, because that stands in a category by itself." The Methodist Times hopes that the people of England will at last open their eyes to the folly and wickedness of boasting and domineering and trampling on the feelings of other races and talking blasphemous nonsense about the omnipotence of England." It hopes that the English people are not so eaten up with the blundering insanity of Jingoism that they will continue to cultivate the antipathy of the human race, but it says that so long as they place in power "the representatives of the liquor trade, the sporting league, the anti-purity fanatics and the fire-eating Jingoes they must expect God and man to smite them. All these troubles have been brought upon us by greed and militarism."

Seen Where Boston Art Lovers Resort.

By O. M. E. Rowe.

The fifty-third annual exhibition of the Boston Art Club is now in progress. The number of pictures offered last year was over 600, but this year only 200 were presented. The great dissatisfaction at the award of prizes last winter found popular expression in a subscription to buy the strong marine of Charles Herbert Woodbury, in which he pictured the sea wake of an Atlantic steamship. Another depleting influence is an exhibition at Philadelphia, where the golden bait of a $5,000 prize proves alluring. Less than 100 paintings occupy the wall space on which 250 were crowded last year, and every artist is limited to one canvas. This relieves each picture from the unpleasant air of thrusting its elbows into its neighbor's face and gives a decorous individuality. To have the paintings one on a line, or, at most, only two deep, is a rare pleasure in this gallery. Three prizes, of $2,500, $1,500, and $1,000, have been awarded, and the result is astonishing to art lovers.

The Old Rock, by J. Alden Weir of New York city, won the first prize. Imagine a small picture showing two country boys sheltered by a big boulder, over which mounts an impossible stone wall, with an old gray barn in the background, the whole suffused with the soft blues and hazy grays of August heat. The suggestion of homeliness and poetic insight into country life give the picture a certain charm, but it is neither great nor strong, neither vital nor original. When the jury of admission was inspecting the pictures this received only one vote, but, on being recalled, it finally won admission. The action of the jury of awards is an enigma. Mr. Weir, who is an artist of reputation, confesses that it is far from being his best work, and the prize is harmful in making conspicuous an inferior picture.

Mr. Childe Hassam, who has found many poetic studies in the streets of Boston, but who now lives in New York, obtained the second prize for Summer Sunlight. A young girl in a sprigged muslin frock and yellow hat is lolling, book in hand, on the rock-bound shore of a sparkling sea. The intense sunlight bleaches the rocks, beats fiercely on the maiden and illumines the sea, bringing out even details into the high, vivid scheme of color. It is undeniably clever in execution, but despite the gayety and radiance of nature's midsummer glow the picture is not altogether pleasing. Only a salamander could bask in such a glare. Cleverness is not strength, and striving for effect does not produce great art.

The third prize was given to Frank W. Benson of Salem for a life-size portrait of his little daughter. She is cleverly posed on a low stool, her feet hidden by a soft, white gown, and by her side a cat broadly sketched. This maiden in her frank simplicity has so charming a personality and the effect is so wholesome and sane that it seems ungracious to find a flaw. The impressionistic sway is revealed in the other prize winners, but here it is only an influence. My Little Girl is likely to be a favorite.

Modern American art does not gravitate towards the religious pictures which absorbed the painters of the sixteenth century, for the keynote of our era is not spiritual, and, above all, "the artist is the child of his times." Only two religious pictures are shown at the Art Club. Miss Macomber has a characteristic one called, Hail! Thou That Art Highly Favored, representing the angel bringing the wonderful message to Mary. It is full of tender, devout sentiment, but not equal to her former rendering of the Annunciation. No subject demands more spirituality in the concept than the Pietà, but in the large canvas of I. A. Caliga neither the prostrate form of the dead Christ, nor the black-robed mother crouching over it, can stir sympathy or reverence in the spectator. A ghastly sacrilege of holy things outrages the finer sensibilities.

Perhaps the strongest painting in the gallery is by Mr. Woodbury. The sand-dunes, beloved by the Dutch, roll back from the foreground in rich waves of color to the edge of the forest. The forceful but harmonious coloring approaches the decorative in its sweep, yet strength and simplicity, vigor of imagination and the challenge to fathom its meaning give it commanding power. W. S. Halsall contributes an interesting marine, "The Sea Is His," showing an old salt erect in his dory swayed by dark purple waves. Below this in striking contrast is Picknell's fisherman, whose boat casts a shadow on the calm water of a wide cove. Walter Dean's fishermen are enveloped in a treacherous fog, hinting at the tragedy of the Grand Banks. Among the pictures of children is a naked infant lying on a white fur rug, by W. B. Closson, and another of two little mischiefs, fresh from the bath, playing in a sumptuous room, by J. H. Hatfield.

Theodore Wendell is represented by a village street in the dark blue of night, Marcus Waterman by a Rebekah in a glowing Oriental environment, and J. J. Enneking by a New England thunderstorm which lowers in an over-large canvas. Mending Old Embroidery by E. W. D. Hamilton and Ending of Music by Philip Hale are groups of women consciously posing for the effect of their exquisitely colored gowns. Elizabeth Strong's well-painted Irish setter and Brackett's cats curiously eyeing a lighted cigar will appeal to those who love "tell-a-story art."

The single piece of sculpture is a bust of Linda, strongly modeled, delicately tinted, with a waxy surface not unlike the Lille maiden long attributed to Raphael. It is, in a way, the gem of the gallery. Instead of giving tickets somewhat indiscriminately as in former years, a small admission fee is charged and an orchestra gives two concerts daily. Although the Art Club gallery contains much that is commonplace, as a whole it marks an advance.

All the admirable qualities of Ross Turner are shown in the twenty-four water-color sketches now gathered at Doll & Richard's. He loves the tender but luminous phases of nature's coloring and even in the more brilliant scenes of Southern isles he never forgets the supreme grace of restraint. The dark bulk of a locomotive in a railway yard, with a background of factory walls, on a winter morning, is not a picturesque scene of itself, but the artist, by the poesy of his imagination, has transfused it with snowy haziness and subtle feeling. This is a good illustration of the sublimation of plebeian facts by ideality.

The art shops have nothing more fascinating than the fine large photographs of famous buildings. Too much cannot be said in favor of these for homes where limited means shut out really good paintings. They have great value towards educating the perceptions in splendid massings, good proportions and elegance of detail. The eye never wearies of the infinite variety brought into harmony on the façades of the cathedrals of Paris, Amiens or Rouen and historic memories gather about the superb towers of Lincoln, the Bell Harry of Canterbury, the spires of Lichfield and the massive grandeur of Durham Cathedral. To grow up in the companionship of one of the supreme examples of architecture is indeed a boon to the child.

The question of improved architecture is agitating American cities, and Boston's new mayor, the third Josiah Quincy, has appointed Prof. Francis W. Chandler of the Institute of Technology as advisory architect. This will bring to the erection of new city buildings a wide experience and sound æsthetic principles. But public sentiment must demand a revision of our building laws or the monstrosities of sky-scraping, money-making blocks will continue to ruin the perspective of our streets.

Military paintings give a scope not found in other subjects. Men, horses, action, the strain and stress of great moments, call for masterly delineation. Happily, ghastly details and revolting carnage are absent from "1815," the large painting now to be seen at Williams & Everett's. The artist, R. Caton Woodville, shows the wide Belgian plain in the late afternoon, when victory hung in the balance. The smoke of Waterloo rises in the distance. In the foreground on the left is a group of shattered cavalry with a Highland prisoner. On the right are gathered the French generals, and just in advance of them is Napoleon, his stern face seen in profile. He sits motionless on his white horse, awaiting the result of that death-grapple when the Imperial Guard hurled itself against the English and Prussians, to win — only a grave. The strong drawing, the subordination of the brilliant uniforms, the suppression of everything theatrical, the skillful grouping and unifying of diverse elements combine to make an impressive picture. The costumes and details are said to be absolutely accurate. The picture involved many years of study and is a worthy illumination of a crisis in history.

Mr. Woodville, though British born, is the son of an American painter from Baltimore, and his great great-grandfather, John Carroll, signed the Declaration of Independence. His aunts, the three Caton sisters, once famous as "the American graces," married into the English nobility. "1815" is making a tour of the United States and halts in Boston for a month.

Many artists are devoting themselves to the remunerative field of book illustrations and cover designs. Bertram Grosvenor Goodhue works quite in the mediæval spirit, and is especially happy in the rich, foliated borders and illuminated initials which adorn the exquisite typography of Copeland & Day, many of whose books have a distinct art value. Poster designs have a fascinating scope for our artists not a few, and the Japanese motif holds its sway. Posters, though directly intended for advertising, really bring art in touch with the masses and are not without ethical value. The magazine, Modern Art, now published in Boston, wins golden opinions for the artistic character of its "make-up" and its literary excellence.

The Art Museum is the proud possessor of a fine example of Moroni, a Venetian painter of the sixteenth century. It has also recently hung the portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Lee of old Marblehead, the lady's portrait in yellow satin showing the best qualities of Copley's art. But the Art Museum has lost the president of the corporation and the chief promoter of its interests in the death of Hon. Martin Brimmer. Born to wealth and leisure, fond of travel and research, public-spirited and broad minded, philanthropic and liberal-handed, and withal dignified and gentle, he had grown into a quiet leadership of "whatsoever things are lovely and of good report."

AWAKE, O KING.

BY HETTA LORD HAYES WARD.

O wild east wind, with rain of tears, blow, blow
Adown the island valley Avalon
And call the king. Arise, great Arthur, don
Thine armor, rouse thy knights and face the foe;
Call Percival, call good Sir Bors, and go
Wake Galahad and Launcelot. Gird on Thy brand Excalibur, which bravely won
Christ's war 'gainst Paynims bold. Behold a woe
To break the heart of kings. Yet lags the czar,
And England halts, while Slaughter sates her maw.
Thy wound is healed, O king, forsake the far
Fair meadowed valley Avalon. Swift draw
Thy sword and smite, and shame false kings who bar
The way and serve not Justice, God and Law.

FILBERTS.

BY REV. A. H. QUINT, D. D.

I was a decidedly small boy when this happened. I had a few cents to spend and, being eager to share with the boy who was my next neighbor and usual intimate, I said, "What shall we buy?" "Filberts," he promptly said. So we bought filberts and took them home and made ready to crack. "Let me see," said my friend, "whether they are sound. Filberts that rattle are not good." So he took them into his possession and threw away all that rattled, which left us about one-quarter of the original purchase. The apparently bad ones went over the fence into his own yard.

Not long afterward I discovered that rattling filberts were good. But it was quite a while before I chanced to suspect that my playmate, who was a year older than myself, knew that fact. My painful suspicions were increased when it came to my mind that all the rattling filberts had gone over the fence into his premises. Could it be that he had afterwards picked up the nuts for his own enjoyment?

Perhaps this was the first occasion on which I was led into distrust. I remember nothing earlier in that direction. I regret to say that I have thought of filberts a good many times since. It is often a serious question whether the ostensible reason advanced for some particular course is the real reason. An experienced legislator once told me that the apparent object of some proposed measure rarely disclosed the real object. In fact, he declared that most bills had their rise in some private object which was kept out of sight. This man had had both State and national experience and had served his country bravely in the field. Perhaps he was justified so far as this, that some private experience suggested the need of some remedy which might be of more general application. A disclosure, however, of the original object might have excited opposition. Perhaps, sometimes, there were filberts in the case. I have sometimes thought that the warm advocacy of measures by some politicians meant filberts.

How far to distrust people, or how far to consider what may be their object, is a very difficult thing about which to establish a rule. What is one aiming at? What is his object? I know what he says and it sounds plausible, but what is he saying it for? Has he some advantage to gain which does not appear in the proposal, but which is its real basis? Frequently I read editorials which, from experience of their kindred, I know perfectly well open with apparently candid and reasonable statements which are far off from the real point intended to be assumed at the end. There are men who make it their rule, they say, to meet every man with a felt possibility that the man is a rogue. Watch every man, they say, as if the man might be trying to cheat you. They declare this to be the only safe method. It must have been a sad experience which has led any man to such an unhappy conviction. It is well enough to bear in mind that one whom you must meet may have projects which he does not reveal. It is proper to ask, in one's own thought, what the projector wants. It would have been proper for me to have ascertained whether rattling filberts were really bad. It would not have been wicked in me to have wondered why all the filberts which he declared to be unsound were thrown over into his domain. I suppose that business men cannot act upon the in genuous innocence of my early boyhood.

But while, as it is seen, I have never forgotten the nuts, and while I was greatly distressed when suspicion crept into my guileless soul, the subsequent years have not made me feel that that transaction is the rule of human nature. I believe the contrary. I have found friends who were disinterested, or unselfishly interested rather, in their intercourse with me and mine. Most of those with whom I have been brought in close contact have proved themselves frank, honest, kind-hearted.

A presumption that one is to meet with deception will certainly tend to secure it. It will throw one out of connection with honorable people by breaking the subtle nerve between the two; and it will throw one into connection with the untrustworthy who feel the equally sensitive nerve which repels while it unites. Like finds like. Trust a man and you give him a reason for justifying your trust. Trust a child. Do not suspect the child of wrongdoing. Do not suggest to the child that you are doubting him. If you make him feel that you think he is deceiving you, you break the strongest reason he has for not deceiving you. If he perceives that you lack faith in him you have lost your hold on him.

I knew a father who had no great means but who sent his son to college. He advised the son to keep an account of his expenses, told him the necessity of economy, and then said to him: "I shall never look at your account of your expenses. I do not wish to know what you do with the money." I think that that father was right. More than thirty years ago I was one of an examining committee of the old college. Two of us were one afternoon delegated to the examination of a class section in Greek. The professor, in view of experience with another section, said to us that he wished we would warn this section against the use of books. I was asked to give the warning and the expected threat. My statement was this: "Gentlemen, you are aware that the use of translations in examinations is contrary to propriety. The committee, however, will make no attempt to prevent it. We shall trust your honor, and will never after allow the question to be raised." My colleague was surprised, but the trust was substantially justified. In fact, boys whom you cannot trust, you cannot control.

I would not consider my filbert experience to be a good model. But I would rather take it as a model than to live a life of constant suspicion and distrust of my fellowmen. Indeed, even that early extreme would bring better results. I do pity some men who have been so deceived that they have lost their faith in humanity.

Especially will I suggest to young ministers that they trust their people, in the full expectation that they will find kindness and support. People who are trusted will repay the confidence.

THE CHRISTIAN LEAGUE OF PHILADELPHIA.

BY CLINTON ROGERS WOODRUFF.

"As Christians and good citizens, what ought we to do to aid in the reformation of the morally dark sections of our city?" It was to the discussion of this question that the Presbyterian Social Union of Philadelphia devoted one of its regular meetings about a year ago, and out of which has grown a movement that already has wrought worthily, and which gives promise of still greater usefulness.

The report of an outlook committee, prepared and read by Mr. George Griffith, an earnest member of the old First Presbyterian Church, formed the basis of discussion. It was at once startling and inspiring, describing as it did with graphic details the dark spots of the slums; and after favoring addresses from representatives of different denominations steps were at once taken to establish the Christian League of Philadelphia for the following purposes:

To confer and act in concert with the civil authorities in all the matters which may promote the moral and physical welfare of the people, especially in the suppression of vice and immorality, in public and in private.

To provide increased facilities, and to secure Christian workers for carrying on the work of the league in those parts of the city where the need is the greatest and the laborers are few.

To provide proper homes, especially in the country, for children surrounded in the city by the most depraving influences.

To devise ways and means to assist in the preservation and observance of the Sabbath or the Lord's Day; to discourage the liquor traffic; to prevent the publication and sale of impure literature, and the exhibition of demoralizing pictures; and generally to promote such measures as will make and keep Philadelphia a Christian city in name and in fact.

Clergymen and members identified with the evangelical churches of the city are eligible to membership, and the various evangelical denominations have representatives on the board of directors.

What has the Christian League done in its year of existence? First and foremost, it has reclaimed that portion of the city known as "the coast," for nearly a century abandoned to the worst elements, the resort of seamen of the lowest type, of thieves, murderers and abandoned women. At times, especially Saturday nights, it was not safe for respectable persons to venture within its confines. Fourth, Bainbridge, Third and Barrow Streets were given over without a word to the lawless and degraded.

Notwithstanding the apparent hopelessness of the case, Mr. George Griffith, the indefatigable chairman of the executive committee, devoted his days and nights to securing legal evidence as to the character of the inhabitants of the houses in these streets. It took him a number of months to secure all that he desired, but once he was armed with the facts he instituted a crusade that resulted in the reclamation and reformation of the district. After assuring himself as to the nefarious purposes for which the houses were used, he ascertained the names and addresses of the owners, many of whom were members of prominent churches, who were entirely willing, however, to collect unduly large rents through agents and ask no questions.

Mr. Griffith in each case wrote a polite note to the owner, or his or her agent, calling attention to the act of assembly providing that any one who knowingly lets a house or a part thereof for immoral purposes shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction sentenced to pay a fine of $1,000 and to undergo an imprisonment not exceeding two years. He stated further that he had evidence in his possession and that he would proceed to have the law enforced unless the nuisance was abated. He also had posted on the fences and walls in the vicinity posters calling attention to the work of the league, with the significant ending—that owners, agents, tenants and neighbors would find it to their advantage "to act in harmony with the Christian league."

The letters and posters had the desired effect. One by one the objectionable tenants were ordered out, the properties renovated and let to a respectable class of Russian Jews. Not a single arrest was made and several of the unfortunate women were sent to good homes in the country at their own request.

Now all is changed. A law-abiding class has moved in, and haunts notorious in the annals of crime no longer harbor the criminal and vicious. If the league does nothing else its work in the annihilation of this social pest center will entitle it to deserved praise. It has not by any means ceased its efforts, however; it has directed them to another district, equally as bad. It is pursuing a somewhat similar course, and is succeeding in having the houses vacated. It has called in the Board of Health and has had a number of the houses condemned as nuisances. The building inspectors have also been called upon to condemn some of the houses as unsafe. This district, in the western end of the Fifth Ward, but a few squares south of Independence Square, has not only been a breeding place of crime but the center of gross election frauds. Forty and fifty voters are registered from many of the houses which could not possibly accommodate one-half that number, and the bosses who control the ward can easily overcome the wishes of the honest voters by manipulating the vote of this district.

The Christian League not only seeks to tear down the bad and eradicate the evil, it works to build up the good. Hand in hand with its effort to eliminate has gone the endeavor to rescue the unfortunate victims and lead them into a better life. It has held frequent gospel meetings, and sought by kindly aid and advice to win the confidence of the inhabitants of the proscribed district. In this they have succeeded in a measurable degree. They have not as yet been molested and have introduced a number to respectable ways of earning a livelihood.

Another important piece of work accomplished by the league were efforts made by its president and chairman of the executive committee to bring about arbitration between the Union Traction Co. and its employés in the late street railway strike. Dr. Baker and Mr. Griffith were indefatigable in proposing peace measures, suggesting bases of settlement and acting as mediators, and they contributed a very substantial share to the settlement finally agreed upon.

The Christian League has a large field of usefulness before it and, under its present wise and conservative management, will undoubtedly accomplish substantial results in these dark places which have been only too frequently regarded as hopeless. At first the league had but few supporters and was regarded askance, but, as it has gone forward with its work, quietly but persistently, it has won supporters and friends. Its policy has thus far been co-operative with, rather than criticism of, the public authorities, and Director of Public Safety Beitler has given his aid and encourgement to its every effort. He has furnished from time to time police protection to the league's workers and has shown a sincere desire to help.

SHALL IT STAND?

BY REV. JUDSON SMITH, D. D., FOREIGN SECRETARY A. B. C. F. M.

The Prudential Committee has voted the appropriations for the work of our several missions for the current year, and official notification of the result is now on its way to the various fields. Since the constituency of the Board at home, churches and individuals, contribute the means for these appropriations, and thus have it in their power to remedy any deficiencies therein, it is of almost equal importance that they should be promptly and fully apprised of what has been done. This is the more appropriate because of what was done at the last annual meeting in Brooklyn. The Board there took specific action, instructing the committee to keep the expenditures of the present year within probable receipts and laying the responsibility for any suffering that might result therefrom upon the churches alone.

This action created no new situation and altered no facts; it simply gave clear expression to the obvious relations in the case. The missions can expend only what is appropriated by the committee. The committee is authorized to appropriate only what is contributed for the missions. What shall be contributed the churches and individual donors determine; and the responsibility for ample or scant appropriations rests with them alone.

This year the committee, after careful consideration, decided that the total amount placed at the disposal of the missions must be at least $50,000 less than had been appropriated in each of the three previous years. And this reduction was placed first upon the salaries of the missionaries, and secondly upon the general work of the mission, with this important exception, that the Woman's Boards pledge themselves to provide for their usual work without reduction. The salaries of the men in all the missions of the Board, except the three in Asiatic Turkey, were cut down ten per cent., the first time this has been done in the history of the Board. The grants for the general work of the missions, including the support of the native agency, of evangelistic work and of mission schools, are twenty-six per cent. less than last year, and thirty-seven per cent. less than the amount the missions reported as necessary for the support of the work.

Such a reduction of the volume of missionary work, more than one-fourth of the whole amount, is little short of a calamity, and the missions will learn of its necessity with astonishment and distress. Nothing could well be more disheartening and painful than the measures to which this action will compel them. The growth of the work and its present condition call for increased force and enlargement of the field. But instead of this they must at once dismiss tried and successful preachers and teachers. They must close chapels and schools well established and the only centers of evangelistic influence in all their region. And they must in every way reduce the area, volume and efficiency of the missionary work. The reduction of the salaries, in itself discouraging, will in truth prove a still further reduction of the volume of the work, for it is the custom of our missionaries to deny themselves and live closely in order that out of their own resources they may maintain important parts of the work which are not otherwise provided for. With diminished salaries this will no longer be possible.

Words can scarcely describe the disastrous effects on the spirits of the missionaries and on the work itself that will come from this unprecedented demand for retrenchment. It seems to call for withdrawal and retreat, when everything in the field demands enlargement and advance. It seems to turn the face of the Board backward, whereas, for fourscore years she has marched in the van of this missionary work.

Is this necessary? Shall this reduction in salaries remain through the year? Shall all the missions suffer this threatened contraction? Will the churches consent to this? The remedy is in their hands. It can be applied without delay, and it will be effective. Let the contributions to this work be promptly taken and generously increased in every church from one end of the land to the other. The committee cannot give relief. The secretaries are powerless to help. The churches and individual donors, and they alone, can restore those salaries and revive that crippled work. The reduction has been made. Shall it stand?

Mr. Moody is glad that salvation is by grace, through faith and that not of ourselves. He has heard so much about self-made men here that he believes heaven would be weary of the boasts of those who made their own way there if such efforts could succeed.

THE KING'S SHIPS.

God hath so many ships upon the sea!
His are the merchantmen that carry treasure,
The men of war all bannered gallantly;
The little fisher-boats and barques of pleasure,
On all this sea of time there is not one
That sailed without the glorious name thereon.

The winds go up and down upon the sea,
And some they lightly clasp entreating kindly
And waft them to the port where they would be.
And other ships they buffet long and blindly;
The cloud comes down on the great sinking deep,
And on the shore the watchers stand and weep.

And God hath many wrecks within the sea.
O, it is deep! I look in fear and wonder;
The wisdom throned above is dark to me,
Yet it is sweet to think God's care is under,
And yet the sunken treasures may be drawn
Into his storehouse when the sea is gone.

So I that sail in peril on the sea
With my beloved whom yet the waves may cover,
Say, God hath more than angels' care of me,
And larger share than I in friend and lover.
Why weep you so, ye watchers on the land?
This deep is but the hollow of his hand!

—Carl Spencer.

In one of his inimitable essays in Harper's Bazar Col. T. W. Higginson claims that fiction will not always hold a supreme place in literature because "truth is greater and profounder than any fiction, however ideal or however realistic." He believes that there is a realm for the pure play of the imagination, and he would not eliminate from a child's reading the stories of Robin Hood and King Arthur. Yet, he has known school boys to turn from Oliver Optic to The Boys of '76 or Baron Trenck's Memoirs, and it is more than probable that for our descendants history and biography will be written with so much skill as to be more fascinating than a romance. In this connection it is worth noting that in the best clubs of women this winter remarkable interest is shown in historical study. One in Dorchester is making a specialty of the colonial period, and has made itself practically useful in careful research to substantiate the claim that the first public school in America was organized in Dorchester. Current history, too, is an uncommonly popular field of study nowadays among both men and women.

"Come, let us live with our children." This familiar sentiment of Froebel's furnished a fitting text for several addresses in Huntington Hall, Boston, last week in the interests of a kindergarten settlement, similar in plan to the college settlements, to be opened next month at 156 Chambers Street. Among the speakers were President Tucker of Dartmouth, Edward Everett Hale and Prof. Paul Hanus of Harvard, each of whom emphasized the idea that the root of social reform lies within the home and must begin with little children. Miss Lucy Wheelock, the famous kindergarten teacher, has been active in starting this enterprise, which is the first of the kind in America, with the exception of the Gertrude House in Chicago, although kindergarten methods and ideas have been engrafted upon social settlements in several cities and are a common adjunct in church work nowadays. A group of kindergartners and normal students will reside in the house, which is named in honor of Elizabeth Peabody, and a school will be opened for the children who cannot gain admission to the public schools on account of their crowded condition. "This is the Christianest thing yet," remarked a lady as she came from the meeting. The house will depend chiefly for its support on voluntary contributions.

Do we half appreciate the value of a definite, earnest, personal invitation to become a Christian? The question is awakened by reading a little incident in a private letter just received, showing how the word of truth may lie dormant in a human soul for years and at length blossom and fructify into righteous living. About twenty years ago a pastor, when on exchange duty, noticed a boy in the Sunday school class which he taught that day whom he thought ought to be a Christian. Not satisfied, however, with a general presentation of Christ's claims in the class, the minister took pains, the following day, to walk a long distance to the boy's house, but did not find him. Nevertheless, he talked with the mother, a poor widow, and left a tender, earnest message for the son, asking him to write the stranger preacher, who left his card and address, whenever he surrendered himself to the Saviour. The man moved to another parish, and the seed sown by the wayside was nearly forgotten. After the long lapse of years a letter in an unfamiliar hand, as of a working man, was forwarded from the minister's former place of residence, telling the glad news of the man's conversion last summer and his union with the church. Probably the thought that somebody expected him to become a Christian remained in the boy's heart, followed him into manhood and influenced him to yield his life to God.

BROKEN HOMES.*

BY IAN MACLAREN.

The providence of God never presses more sorely upon the heart, or raises harder questions in the mind, than when His servant death knocks at the door of some unconscious, contented home and summons an unlikely member across the threshold. We have no quarrel with the kindly office of the dark angel, and would not desire that he should delay his coming beyond the time, since many years without strength are only sorrow and humiliation. It is better that the ripe fruit should be plucked before it begins to decay upon the tree, and the golden corn reaped before it runs to waste. Nothing can be more fitting and seemly than the departure of one whose work has been well finished, and who has reached the evening of his day. What appears utter unreason and cruelty—a mere caprice or blunder of Providence—is the removal of the head of a family in the midst of his days, or a house-mother whose deserted children follow her to the door, or a young child in the fresh promise of spring. Is not this the willful wrecking of love's long labor? For a home is a beautiful work which is slowly created; it is a perfect unity whose injury cannot be repaired. Why should two people be moved of the Divine Spirit to love, only to be separated after a few years? Why should children be given only to be taken? Why should a home be enriched with a wealth of tender associations, and in a little while the inhabitants sit lonely in its desolation, listening for a footstep that will never be heard on the stair again, wearying for a voice that is still?

When a person in such straits is concerned about the goodness of God, his anxious questions are not to be condemned as a sign of unbelief, but are rather to be welcomed as a fruit of faith. If one does not believe in his heart that there is any God, or at least quite despairs of knowing him, then he is not likely to vex himself about the divine character. No circumstances can either make God better or worse, any more than if he were an idea in a book. If, however, one has learned to put all his trust in God, and God has become the portion of his soul, then he cannot help being very jealous about the divine character. Any act which suggests carelessness or cruelty on the part of God is an unspeakable and irredeemable calamity. Leave God, untouched in his wisdom and love, and the pious soul can bear many afflictions, for at the worst it can hide itself in him, who is the soul's refuge and help in time of trouble. Without God—and if God be unworthy of trust there is no God—tribulation is another name for destruction. The vindication of God is the first thought of faith in face of trial, and we are never inclined to judge our Father more harshly than when standing amid the ruins of a home.

Before trying to find reasons for the divine action, it is always well to remind ourselves how little we know about anything, and how very unlikely it is that we shall know much more till we get the after look. We are the victims of the present and the imperfect, seeing only processes, not ends, understanding only a part, not the whole. We should never have imagined this fair earth had it been given us to see fire and water laboring like blind and chaotic forces at its making, and it is at least as impossible to anticipate what gracious products of human character may result from what seems, in our day, the confused and senseless agonies of life. What we are alone able to see is the carving of the stone, with the dust and broken splinters, the wrong side of the web, with its tangle of threads, the molten metal poured from crucible to crucible. Each generation lives amid the machinery which is making souls, and the individual must be patient when he fails to understand its whirling wheels and sharp-edged tools. The past, with its golden record of conspicuous successes, corrects our hasty judgments; the future, with its incalculable possibilities, bids us hope. When the day is over and the work is done, it will be soon enough to judge the government of the Eternal.

Meanwhile, one must be very unobservant of life and very unintelligent about its meaning if he cannot see some spiritual ends and some kindly alleviations even in these sudden and crushing blows that shatter happy homes. It does certainly seem wanton to call away a father who is not only the bread-winner but also the counselor of a family at the very time when his example and influence will mostly tell, or a mother while her children are still young and chiefly need her sympathy, her care, her love. The loss is so irreparable that we do not reckon the compensations. Is there any relationship so fond on the one side, so chivalrous on the other, as that between a widowed mother and her loyal sons? Can there be found any more thoughtful, more protecting, more tender-hearted than a man who has to be both father and mother to his children? If marriage be the normal state for the vast majority of men and women, its sad eclipse has often called into exercise the most gentle and winsome virtues, has afforded the opportunity for the most affectionate and thoughtful services.

When one comes to the loss of young children—a sad perplexity—let it not be forgotten that they were given. If, in the hour of bitterest grief, it were asked of a bereaved mother whether she would prefer never to have possessed in order that she might never have lost, her heart would be very indignant. No little child has ever come from God and stayed a brief while in some human home—to return again to the Father—without making glad that home and leaving behind some trace of heaven. A family had counted themselves poorer without those quaint sayings, those cunning caresses, that soft touch, that sudden smile. This short visit was not an incident, it was a benediction. The child departs, the remembrances, the influence, the associations remain. If one should allow us to have Sarto's Annunciation for a month we should thank him; when he resumed it for his home he would not take everything, for its loveliness of maid and angel is now ours for ever. And if God recalls the child he lent, then let us thank him for the loan and consider that what made that child the messenger of God—its purity, modesty, trustfulness, gladness—has passed into our soul.

Is it not the case also in many instances that death has been a merciful escape for children grievously smitten in body or mind? No child calls forth so much tender solicitude, none is so fondly loved, as one afflicted; none is held more firmly, for none are more prayers offered. If it lay in the will of the parents they would never consent to its removal, so wonderfully do helplessness and suffering appeal to the heart. With a just parent there is only one ground of partiality—weakness; only one child that has more than its share of love—the invalid. Yet is it not an unconscious and pardonable selfishness of love that would wish for that child a prolonged hospital life? Is it not a merciful release when the prisoner escapes from the bondage of this body and enters on the fullness of life, where there is no more pain?

There are worse evils than pain of body from which death gives immunity, and no one can look at the innocent face of a little child that has fallen on sleep without thanking God for victory before the battle. One at least of God's children has been spared the risk of temptation, the bitterness of defeat, the sore struggle after perfection. What an uncertainty is the life before an infant in its mother's arms. What sin and shame may be its experience ere all be over. Has no father ever declared, with a heart broken by some Absalom, "Would that he had died in his childhood?" Is it not good that some of our race should have but one chapter in their short lives here, and is it to be desired that all should have page upon page that none but God must see, that nothing but Christ's blood can cleanse?

Death must always be a dreaded visitor to any house, and it is hard to forgive his robberies, but he leaves behind many peaceable fruits. For instance, a certain seriousness of thought and feeling that are not easily learned. People who are strong and busy and successful and glad, who have never been chastened in their hearts, are apt to take shallow and trifling views of life. They do not see clearly because of the glare of sunshine in the room, so that they might pass a crucifixion without notice. Life is but a pleasant play—a pastoral, with song and dancing. By and by one blind after another is drawn down till the light grows gray and somber and the Christ upon his cross looks out from the shadow. The deeps of life are opened with their solemnities, their realities, their tragedies. The character loses its light grace, its gay delight in the comedy of existence, but it gains instead an understanding of the inwardness of things and the responsibilities of the soul.

Family bereavement also works a singular and beautiful gentleness that can be detected almost without fail in the expression of the eye, in the tone of the voice. Some of the best wine is harsh and unpalatable till it goes a long sea voyage. After it has been tossed on the high seas and gone round the cape it becomes mellow and soft. There are strong natures which were once intolerable, they were so self-confident, so masterful, so inhuman. But death visited their house, and they came forth from his school other men, and now the strength is touched with sympathy and humility. Such men become the saviours of the world with Christ, for it is doubtful whether any man has ever helped his fellows in the high affairs of life who has not tasted sorrow.

And death is a very successful teacher of that faith we all long to possess—the conviction of the unseen. We may play with the arguments against another life when our affections are neutral, and may even pretend that the case is not proven. Let one of our flesh and blood bid us good-by and pass within the veil, and reason surrenders the place to love. A young child with Christ does more to illuminate the other world than all the books that ever have been written, and it has often come to pass that, at the touch of this unseen hand, hard and skeptical men have arisen and set their faces towards God, for the hope of seeing again a golden head on which the sun was ever shining.

A SUGGESTIVE MISSIONARY RECEPTION.

BY NATHALIE LORD.

Now that the season for receptions in our various homes is upon us, why not make them serve a double purpose—that of increasing our interest in missionary work at home and abroad and of promoting social and friendly relations between the members of our own churches. One such reception was given early in the fall in a suburban town. The house of meeting was a small one, almost too small it seemed to entertain such a gathering, but the hearts of its inmates were warm with love for missions, and with a boldness and courage born of the Pine Tree State they planned for a home missionary reception. The day chosen followed hard upon the election of the new president in the auxiliary to the Woman's Home Missionary Association, and each member of the auxiliary received a personal invitation to meet her, together with the assistant treasurer.

The day was bright and sunny and many friends testified by their presence to their interest in missionary work. All the pictures bearing upon the subject that could be collected were judiciously distribute in different parts of the rooms—a sod hou in Nebraska, a home missionary horse fro South Dakota, Utah schoolhouses, grou of Indians as they looked on entering Ham ton and Carlisle and pictures of the same few months later, photographs of indivi ual workers, whose names only had bee hitherto familiar, all served to turn the co versation into a missionary channel. Th picture of the little girls in "our home mi sionary family" had a prominent place o the music rack of the piano. There w also a letter from the missionary's wife reply to one from the secretary of the au iliary, asking what garments and oth articles the ladies could send them. Th proved of interest and many valuable gif were brought in for the box when it w packed some weeks later.

The invited guest from the rooms ha brought with her some very interesting pi tures of the opening up of the Cheroke Strip. As she talked with one and anoth she handled a genuine pipe of peace an showed us how it was used by the Indian or exhibited "a native chief and his squaw, which the girls of the Santee school ha dressed. Each one present was so desirou of hearing directly from headquarters th after light refreshments had been served b some of the young ladies of the church th assistant treasurer of the Woman's Hom Missionary Association talked for half a hour. Whether she explained the work that association through the five nation societies for home work, illustrating h words by a map on the wall, or told touch ing incidents of home missionary life, h words were listened to intently and as th company separated later they felt that th afternoon had been one of pleasure an profit.

"It is the only kind of a reception wort attending," one enthusiastic lady was hear to say, "I mean to have one myself." was indeed a delightful occasion and quick ened our hearts in love for our home mi sionary workers. Now some of us ar planning for an afternoon in the interest foreign missions.

THREE BABY LIONS.

BY ERNEST L. THURSTON.

Three babies, three fat, reddish brow balls, speckled here and there with darke spots, rule the Washington Zoo just now and about them all the machinery of th park seems to revolve. The keepers sto to watch and pet them, and as for th visitors they spend more time before th home of the babies than before all othe cages combined. Yet these youngsters ar plain to look upon. When they came int the world they were about the size of half grown cats, but already they have out grown the largest cat to be found and ar showing a decided intention of attaining t the stature of their parents, who are a handsome a pair of African lions as one i likely to see. The little lions' ten days o blindness have long since passed, and the are now striving to learn everything tha lionets should know.

Except for their coloring and markin one might almost take them now for New foundland puppies. Though so fat tha their skins almost burst, their tiny limb are still weak and they roll about and crawl in preference to walking. Whe they do muster courage to try a few regu ar steps, they give a laughable example of extreme bow-leggedness. Their lungs, however, are neither weak nor lacking in capacity, and the little creatures are continually heard arguing matters among themselves. When they were only a few days old an unfeeling visitor likened their melodious tones to those of a very small child in tears, or a young puppy with its head in a bag and sand in its mouth. Later, when their tones had gained yet more in richness and depth, he could liken them only to the sound of a man shoveling oyster shells into a cart.

Rose, the great lioness, is a fond mother, jealous and suspicious of all members of the human race. She does not encourage the visits of a keeper, and as for the people who throng before the cage, if they become too noisy she promptly catches up her cubs by the nape of the neck like a cat and deposits them, one by one, in the dark, walled-in room that has been built along one end of her large cage, where the youngsters are entirely hid from curious eyes. The babies thus summarily disposed of, Mrs. Lion returns and lies down in the center of her cage and gazes with half-shut eyes at the crowds whom she has thus purposely disappointed. But let the crowd thin out, or become entirely quiet, and soon she will begin to purr like a giant cat, and in a moment out pop three little heads, and three awkward figures sprawl out onto the floor and clamber onto her fore-paws, where she alternately sings them to sleep and licks them all over with her great tongue.

Young as they are she has already begun to teach them how to conduct themselves in order that they may grow up as young lions should, and the little creatures have learned to watch her every motion and to copy it as best they can. She encourages their wrestling and playing with each other in order that they may develop their muscles, and only interferes when play gives way to anger. Then a sharp, sudden blow from her forepaw scatters them in various directions. The blow seems a rough one at first, until one sees that her long, sharp nails are completely hidden.

When not having friendly squabbles among themselves she lets them pommel her head and claw and bite at it, and even stirs them and cuffs them to arouse the proper spirit. It is curious to see how she controls the cubs by that paw. She cuffs them to stir them up, she cuffs them to stop their snarling at each other, she cuffs them to prevent rough play, and they always understand just what is expected of them and obey instantly.

Rose trains her children largely by example. If she gets up and stretches herself, the babies watch her closely and then get up on their own shaky legs and try to do likewise. If she strikes her paw at a fly that alights on her face, each little cub dabs his tiny paw at an imaginary fly on his own face. If she curls up for a nap, they curl up in the same position, and if she starts to sharpen her claws on the side of the cage nothing will do but for them to attempt to sharpen their own claws that have not, as yet, really appeared.

The most important lessons, however, are given at feeding time. While Rose is making her meal off a great chunk of meat and bone the babies are shut up, but as soon as she has satisfied her fast they are let out, and then the fun begins. The cubs are called to the chunk of meat and are taught by her example to lick it and even to chew it. After a few minutes of this she orders them off and begins to show them the next step. Going to the end of her cage, she turns and begins to creep on the meat as if it were something alive until, when near at hand, she pounces upon it with a growl. Again and again she does this, while the little lions gaze at her with staring eyes. Then the cubs take their turn and creep up on the chunk that is as big as they are and make weak attempts to leap upon it and utter diminutive growls, while the fond mother stands over them, caressing them with her tongue, and showing most openly her pride in them.

Beyond this step, and that of clasping the paws properly over the meat, the lessons have not gone, but for their age the youngsters are certainly advanced, and seem determined to do honor to their mother and to their father, Frank, who occupies a neighboring cage. Father Lion, even more than Rose, objected so strongly to the visits of the keepers that he was banished to the next division, where he struts pompously about and roars out, many times a day, his pride in the triplets.

ABOUT PEOPLE.

Hall Caine has an ideal home in Peel on the Isle of Man in the midst of his family—his aged parents, the pretty young wife and two bonny sons—and his life here is characterized by its noble simplicity and high thinking, in spite of the many temptations to worldliness which naturally beset a man wn has achieved his success and personal popula ty.

One of the most successful statues of the good Emperor Frederick of Germany in existence recalls an incident that occurred in connection with the opening of a new ward in the great institution for crippled children at Dusseldorf. One of the little sufferers had been attracted by the insignia of the orders that glittered on the emperor's breast. Noticing this, the kind-hearted ruler took the little cripple tenderly up in his arms that he might see and handle the orders. It is this little scene that has been reproduced so happily by the sculptor.

While the queen of Portugal is the first woman of royal birth to obtain a physician's diploma, two other women of sovereign rank are devoted to the work of relieving the sick and suffering. Both Queen Olga of Greece and the Empress Frederick of Germany have founded and continue to maintain and personally supervise various hospitals and charitable institutions. The great Evangelisinos Hospital in Athens, which she created, is managed by the Grecian queen in person, and not a day passes that she does not spend at least a couple of hours among the sick. The German empress devetes special attention to the hospitals for sick children in memory of her husband.

As an example of literary indefatigableness, as well as for energy and persistency in accomplishing tremendous tasks at an advanced age, Barthélemy Saint-Hilaire, who died recently in Paris, has few equals. His greatest work, the translation of Aristotle into French, cost him from 80,000 to 90,000 hours of labor during a period extending from 1832 to 1892. He was thus sixty years on this task and was eighty-seven years old when it was completed. Yet this was not the only extraordinary feat of this wonderful old man, as he spent twenty-two years on a rhymed metrical translation of the Iliad, while his Life of Cousin is a work of nearly 700 pages. When these three large volumes were issued last spring their author was nearly ninety years old.

Closet and Altar

Prayer, which we deem so easy, is, when it is real prayer, the passion of an effort, the wrestling of a life.

The knowledge of the historical Christ is the soil out of which the revelation of the mystery of the divine indwelling grows. When in the Christ of history the Christ of the inner life is discovered, when the one already found in the heart is found in the Word, when men have learned to call him by the name of Christ, when they have come into conscious relation and personal acquaintanceship with him, he is more to them than he ever was before.—James M. Campbell.

Do not allow public worship to degenerate into a mere saying of your private prayers in church. Set yourselves against this selfish and narrowing tendency. Think of the many others who are around you at public worship, of their sins, trials, wants, wishes, mercies, trying to throw yourself into their case. Too many Christians go to church with this idea working in their minds, "I go to ask for what I myself want and to give thanks for what I myself have received, and I do not busy myself with other people." Then you might as well stay at home. The closet is the place for pouring out the heart to God and laying down the secret burdens at the throne of grace. The church is the place for the intercommunion of saints with one another and of all with God.—E. M. Goulburn.

Lord, what a change within us one short hour
Spent in thy presence will avail to make—
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take,
What parchèd ground refresh as with a shower!
We kneel, and all around us seems to lower;
We rise, and all, the distant and the near,
Stands forth in sunny outline, brave and clear;
We kneel, how weak! We rise, how full of power!
Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong,
Or others, that we are not always strong,
That we are ever overborne with care,
That we should ever weak or heartless be,
Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,
And joy and strength and courage are with thee?

—Trench.

Almighty God, what is our life? It is thy gift; it is thy mystery. Out of it thou wilt bring thine own purposes, sacred and good and complete. Bring us to a clear understanding of thy purpose in our existence. Show us that we are meant to be accepted in the Beloved; that our completeness is in Christ, and in him alone. The Lord come to us day by day, like a new glory, yet a familiar morning, surprising us always, yet always touching some sacred memory of love; thus shall we grow in grace and knowledge and pureness and manhood and our whole life shall lie towards heaven. May thy word dwell in us richly—an answer to every temptation, a shield, a buckler and a sword in the day of war. O that we might live in God as revealed to us by Jesus Christ his son! The Lord hear the prayers we cannot speak, the uprisings and motionings of our dumb hearts; multiply our few words into a great intercession, and let all our desires be expressed for us by our Priest in heaven. Amen.

9. NUMERICAL.

Half as wide as the room, how it lighted the gloom!
How the breath of the forest was mixed with its fume
When you gave it a poke, and the sweet birch and oak,
And the balsamy 1-2-3, startled and woke
With a snap and a roar, as in hot 2-3-4,
While the shadows raced over the ceiling and floor.
Now we heard the winds brawl, as we curled next the wall,
In the coziest 5-6-7-8-9 of all,
Where old Towser lay blinking, and pussy sat prinking,
With the rest of the folks eating apples and thinking.
Ah, how many a heart into rapture would start,
Could 2 3-4-5-6-7-8-9 that lost art
Which our forefathers knew — how the home comfort true
Round the 1-2-3-4-5-6-7-8-9 grew!
But our wise men today have a far better way,
And "sic gloria transit" is all we can say.

10. RIDDLE.

(This riddle, whose authorship is unknown, is printed in Tangles by request of a reader.)

There is a strange and wonderful prophet whose generation was before the creation of Adam. He is not the Wandering Jew, nor the son of Noah, nor the old Levite, nor John the Baptist, for he was before them all. The Scriptures make mention of him, particularly in Mark, Luke and John, so we may believe he was no impostor. His beard is such as no man ever wore. He goes barefooted like a gray friar, wears no hat winter or summer, but often appears with a crown on his head. His coat is neither lint nor woven silk, hair nor linen. He is a teetotaler. He prefers a humble dwelling to a palace. He is very watchful, sleeps not in a bed, but sits in a singular chair with his clothes on. He was with Noah in the ark, and was at the crucifixion. All the world heard him at one time. He once preached a short sermon which convinced a man of his sins. Though he never rode on horseback, he is sometimes equipped as horsemen are. He is an advocate of early rising, though he never retires to bed. His prophecies are so true that the moment you hear his voice you may know what is approaching. Now who is this wonderful prophet?

11. LINKADE.

(Example: Pillow, pill—low.)

"Who gave to thee thy PRIMAL TWO,
O lovely rose?" a songbird said;
"My coat is of a sober hue,
No brilliant ONE adorns my head."

"God TOTAL me," replied the rose,
"Gave thee thy voice so sweet and clear;
Each bird and flower his goodness shows;
I please the eye, thou charm'st the ear."

A lawyer's solution gives the widow one-third of the net total estate ($8,800), and divides the remainder among seven children. The share of one son goes to the widow, making her total $3,771.41, and each of the six other children receives $838.09. The oversight in this solution is the fact that the share canceled or paid by the $1,300 note is not counted as part of the total amount realized.

Another solution, in which the process is not quite clear, gives the widow $3,980.95 cash, with notes from the second and third sons for $154.44 and $696.83 respectively; the first son, $303.17 and the second son's note for $44.03; the second son, nothing; the third son, the second son's note for $44.03; and each daughter, $803.17 cash and the second son's note for $44.03.

Mr. Barry's solution is a very complete analysis, agreeing with the answer already published.

The two royal ladies of Portugal, Queen Marie Amélie and her mother-in-law, Queen Pia, are striking contrasts in the matter of economy. While the queen dowager is the most lavish of all the customers of Worth, Doucet, Felix and Virot at Paris, the queen regnant prides herself on making her own bonnets, although, unlike Pia, who is forever in debt, Marie Amélie is very rich in her own right. She can therefore afford to be independent, and has won much popularity by declining on several occasions to receive a cent of the large annuity allotted to her by the government while the country is suffering from financial burdens.

MY BED IS A BOAT.

My bed is like a little boat;
Nurse helps me in when I embark,
She girds me in my sailor's coat,
And starts me in the dark.

At night I go on board, and say
Good-night to all my friends on shore,
I shut my eyes and sail away,
And see and hear no more.

And sometimes things to bed I take,
As prudent sailors have to do,
Perhaps a slice of wedding cake,
Perhaps a toy or two.

All night across the dark we steer,
But when the day returns at last,
Safe in my room, beside the pier,
I find my vessel fast.

O woman! You are entering and so nobly filling the many new fields now open to you, do not ignore one humble path that has ever invited you. It will lead you into the presence of grief and self-sacrifice, close to the beating, burdened heart of humanity; it will bring you face to face with the crying need of this present age, need of the gracious ministry of consecrated human sympathy. The world has toilers; it needs comforters. The world has strength; it needs inspiration. "Blessed is the woman who exalts." Blessed, thrice "blessed is the woman who consoles."—Interior.

The Conversation Corner.

TWICE now our Despotic Foreman has left out this boy's letter — although he met me in the corridor and gravely assured me that he had made a New Year's resolution to do better for 1896! But the letter is going in this week, and at the head of the column:

SOUTH BILLERICA, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I thought I would like to be a Cornerer some time and I thought I would write a letter to you. I found out the fifth puzzle today. I would like the picture of your room and I will send a stamp. I had a nice time at Christmas at home. Wilson G. is my brother; he wrote to you once and told you he lived on a farm near the Brothers' Rocks. I have two other brothers. My father found a silver coin as large as a half-dollar, with 1791 on it, one day when they were plowing. The Indians used to be here a good while ago. I am seven years old and my name is OLIVER G.

Of course he got his certificate. Glad to have all those brothers in the Corner, including the Rocks!

MORE ABOUT D. F.

A lady in a Western State writes:

. . . You may perhaps remember sending me about a year ago some Japanese stamps and suggesting that the Despot might possibly be my cousin, especially if my father or grandfather came from Maine! I am very sorry indeed not to be able to claim relationship to D. F., for he seems to be an important personage and it is a human weakness to be glad to claim kinship with persons of note. But my father was a Green Mountain boy and his father a "wooden nutmeg." However, in the midst of these desolate ruins of supposed relationship, one comfort can be found. D. F., as well as I, is Cornerly related to many people who have been "heard from" lately, including Pomiuk, the Japanese Orphans, the Turkish Twins and Sarah Noah, and not excluding Kitty Clover. EMILY W.

Another lady from the interior of Massachusetts writes on the same subject:

Please tell me what is D. F.'s name? I ought to remember but am so "forgetty"! I used to see him when Mr. Todd was doing printing for me, and have somewhere his name in his own writing. Can any Cornerer tell me, too, the first line of a poem which tells of a little girl whose mother had occasion to punish her and who called up the chimney to Santa Claus to "come down and make my mother 'have herself'"? or where the poem can be found?

And here is still another kindly remembrance:

WORCESTER, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: My turtle lived over last winter, but I was zealous in my care of him and the first warm day of spring I put him out of doors, and, not thinking to take him in at night, I found him frozen stiff in the morning, owing to a sudden change in the weather. As he did not prove to be of the snapping kind, I did not send him to D. F. I like to have the Cornerers ask questions and I always try to find the answers. I would like to ask one. I was very much interested in listening to a talk on habits and instincts of birds given by a professor in Clark University. We know that migratory birds like to cross over the land, then why do they, in their flight from Southern Europe into Africa, cross the Mediterranean Sea? Can any of the Cornerers tell why? Yours truly, ROBERT P.

If they can, let them tell.

ABOUT THE "YOUTHFUL CORNERER."

NEW JERSEY.

Dear Mr. Martin: I think it would be a pleasure to many of your readers to know something of the "Youthful Cornerer," whose article appeared in The Congregationalist of Dec. 19. Is she a bona fide tenement house child? What is her age? And by what training has she learned to write so delightfully? Yours truly, QUERIST.

Can any one answer this lady's query?

MASSACHUSETTS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I felt real sorry for that boarding house girl, for she does not have as good a home as I do in the country and can't ride a bicycle. But she knows how to write a good letter, and I felt real glad she could go to your house. When I saw your picture I knew I had seen you in Boston. I saw you once with a lot of boys. I rode into your town once last summer, but it grew dark before we reached your house, so we stopped at the big farmhouse where they keep boarders, the first house on the right hand after you pass the turn of the road. I send a piece of ore for the Corner Cabinet. It came from the Davis Mine, Charlemont, where I spent my vacation last summer, on the road to the Hoosac Tunnel. They grind the ore up into sulphur and vitriol. MAY B.

This Cornerer, maybe, was near my home when she stopped. Why did not she and her companions persevere? I would certainly have cared for them as well as D. F. did for Charles S., the broken down bicyclist, on the South Shore last summer.

ABOUT POMIUK.

SHUTESBURY, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: Lucy and I inclose —— for Pomiuk. Am glad he has got where he will be treated kindly. We are much interested in hearing about him. We were glad to see the picture of your library, but we wish you instead of the books had been reflected in the mirror! We are glad they are giving you more room for the Corner. NATHAN H.

RHODE ISLAND.

Dear Mr. Martin: We have all been very much interested in Pomiuk. When we first read of him, Nov. 28, we took up a family subscription of ——, which should have been sent to you before. JOHN T.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Mr. Martin; Dear Sir: I was very much interested in the story of the Eskimo boy, Pomiuk, in the Conversation Corner, and my little boy has also become much interested in him. Yesterday was his seventh birthday, and as he would like to do something for a boy less favored than himself he sends —— to be spent for him. A FRIEND.

NORTHFIELD, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I read the Corner every Sunday. I am very happy to send this for Pomiuk. I hope Pomiuk will receive all the help he needs, for I am interested in Pomiuk. I hope he will visit the United States again. From your little friend, GLADYS M.

If Senator Lodge should persuade Uncle Sam to buy of Denmark the Greenland coast Pomiuk might, if he gets well, run over to that State!

GLOBE VILLAGE, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am very glad to see the picture of Pomiuk. Please write some more about him. I wish the Corner children could buy some pictures of Pomiuk and send him the money for them. Do you think I could have some? I am nine years old. I have a kitty. Her name is Kitty. ELIZABETH H.

A very appropriate name, I should say! Yes, you and all the children can have pictures. They are printed, with a verse from his Eskimo hymn, on the receipts which tell how much you pay. So that any one who gives for him, whether little or much, will get a picture. I have just heard that Dr. Grenfell of the Deep Sea Mission, who found and cared for the poor boy, is to spend next week in the vicinity of Boston. If you have the opportunity, be sure and hear him and see his fine views of Pomiuk's land. Other gifts credited later.

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

What Will Happen in 1896? This question is subdivided into others below, and boys and girls who read this column can answer them during the year as they watch the papers, perhaps preserving notes of remarkable events in their diaries or scrap-books:

Will there be a great European war?
Will the Turkish Government be swept off the face of the earth?
Will Spain lose her Cuban possessions?
Will Japan become a rival of the United States as a manufacturing nation?
Will this country establish a Pacific cable?
Will it secure any island station in the Caribbean Sea?
Will electricity take the place of steam on main railway lines?
Will horseless carriages come into use?
Will the bicycle sustain its popularity?
Who will be elected President of the United States?

1896 Will Be a Long Year — one day longer than 1895 or any year in the future until 1904. There will be a Feb. 29 this year for our diaries, for our work and — as it falls on Saturday — for a holiday. By the readjustment of the Julian calendar established by Pope Gregory XIII. in 1582, century years, although divisible by four, are not leap years. (But let children who expect to live in three centuries — I think there have been such instances — make note that the year 2000, being divisible by 400, will be a bissextile year.)

It will be remembered that England did not adopt the Gregorian calendar until 1752, for the reason that the Pope was a zealous persecutor of Protestants. That occasioned the necessity of adding eleven days to all previous dates, to make "Old Style" and "New Style" agree. One curious mistake was continued for many years in adding eleven days to the date of the Landing of the Pilgrims, obtaining Dec. 22, until some bright mind discerned that for a date so far back as 1620 only ten days should be added, making Dec. 21 the true anniversary. The New York descendants of the Pilgrims still observe the later day. Russia still uses the Julian calendar.

Two Full Moons in One Month. The newspapers have had considerable to say about the fact that there were two full moons in December, one on Dec. 2, the other on Dec. 31. It was even stated that the phenomenon had not occurred before for many centuries, perhaps not since the Christian era! On application to Miss Bardwell, the teacher of astronomy in Mount Holyoke College, she kindly sends to the Scrap-Book a tabular list of seven instances of the same phenomenon within fifteen years, as also a similar recurrence of other phases of the moon—two new moons, two first quarters, etc. She says that there will be two last quarter moons in August, 1896, two new quarter moons in May, 1897, two first quarter moons in November, 1897, and two full moons in August, 1898. It is good to have the wise man's word confirmed, that "there is nothing new under the sun"— not even two new moons! She adds:

I am happy to assure you that there is not the slightest evidence of lunacy on the part of the fair orb. The last previous double full moon was in March, 1893, and it is one of the cases where the same phenomenon occurred in the preceding January. There were three double moons in that year, which happens when the first one occurs in January.

The Metonic Cycle. The same writer explains the Metonic Cycle—discovered about 433 B. C., by Meton—approximately equal to nineteen years. At the end of that time the new and full moon recur on the same days of the year, and within about two hours of the same time of the day. "The calendar of the phases of the moon, for instance, for 1889 is the same as for 1870 and 1908, except that intervening leap years may change the dates by one day." (Reference to Young's General Astronomy.)

What the Children Say in Physiology. A little girl in Vermont said, "The cerebrum is situated in the northern part of the head."

A boy, being asked to describe the skin, said, "The skin is very important—it is much missed when it is gone."

The olfactory nerves were described by a pupil as "in all parts of the body, but specially in the ends of the fingers."

LESSON FOR FEB. 9. Luke 6: 41-49.

THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D.D.

Our lesson presents specimen sayings of the discourse which has been fitly called "the great charter of Christ." To understand them we must understand the occasion, the place and the character of the entire sermon.

This discourse is placed by Luke just after the appointment by Jesus of twelve apostles from the company of his disciples. This is the first step in the organization of the church of Christ, and it is natural to expect at that epoch in its history a statement of its great principles. To the west of Capernaum, where Jesus was living, the land rises into a broken country of treeless hills. Most conspicuous among them are twin peaks, standing out abruptly, forming toward the East almost a precipice. At their feet the moorland is comparatively level. A village once stood there called Hattin, which gave to the double hill its name, Horns of Hattin. Farther to the north are lonely mountains where Jesus would naturally retire for prayer, where, probably, he spent the night before choosing the apostles. The Crusaders were impressed by the striking situation of the Horns of Hattin, and located the place as the scene of the Sermon on the Mount. The summits are sixty feet above the level place where Luke says Jesus stood while he spoke to the multitude. One might select a dozen places within the radius of a mile as suitable as this for the gathering of a multitude.

"These sayings of mine," as Jesus called this discourse, are the substance of the principles of righteousness as taught in the Old Testament. But they are expressed with a terseness, force and spiritual meaning which fitly make them the basis of a new dispensation. They disclose ideal human character reflecting the image of God and drawing those who aspire to this character and have begun to possess it into an ideal community consciously united to God. They are not, strictly speaking, the gospel, but they are the preparation for the gospel and describe its fruits. Taking the selected passages now before us, we find described:

1. Self-culture for righteousness [vs. 41, 42]. One element of the power of Christ's words was that they presented ideas clothed in illustrations taken from the life of the common people which he shared. In the carpenters' shops at Nazareth one may see young men fashioning furniture for the house and utensils for the farm, the splinters flying from their tools as, just like Americans, they discuss the faults and weaknesses of one another and of their neighbors. In such a place, no doubt, Jesus saw in his trade the illustration he used when he would teach men that the first step in lifting the moral standard of a community is for each one to discern and remove his own faults. No one is fit to judge others till he has thoroughly done this.

The operation of removing a splinter from the eye of another is a delicate one. How can one expect to do this successfully while a big piece of wood is in his own eye? The application to religious life is simple. Those who hunt for heresies of belief or sins of conduct must have fair judgment, clear vision, and also the unselfish purpose to remove moral evils from their brethren. Is it uncommon to find men of censorious spirit, whose ignorance of their own condition and of the reasons for their blaming their brethren is as conspicuous as a piece of wood in their eyes would be? Are there not many such who make it their business to take out splinters, who care more for the splinter than for the man, who are more eager to convict a brother of sin in the eyes of others than to set him free from it? When we think of Christian ministers within the same denomination warning people against one another, of reformers seeking the same end denouncing one another, while the world laughs at their magnifying one another's faults while oblivious to their own folly, we can appreciate the humor of Jesus picturing men with beams in their eyes trying to pick splinters out of the eyes of their unwilling neighbors.

2. The fruits of self-culture [vs. 43-45]. We may know whether or not the beam has been taken from our own eyes by the results of our living. The man who finds a heresy in his brother's belief and antagonizes him, and makes him stronger in his heresy through his self-defense, has not plucked out the splinter. You may know such a man by his fruits. He makes his brother worse. Or, if by intemperate zeal he wins him to his own view, he makes him tenfold more a child of hell than himself. Men who hunt other men's sins with more satisfaction than they would find in lifting their brothers to more generous love and larger hope for others show their lives by their fruits. A man's tone, even in quoting Scripture, may interpret himself more clearly than his words interpret the saying. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." One needs to be a clear discerner of others' characters to call them hypocrites. Jesus used that word, but his disciples never. The loving heart may be strong in its condemnation of evil, but it is always generous in its attitude toward men.

3. The testing of self-culture [vs. 46-49]. Only creeds lived are really believed. Only prayers translated into action are really offered to God. "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another, even as I have loved you, that ye love one another." "Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" But self-deception is easy. The real condition is revealed only by a sure test.

Along the hillsides on which Nazareth stands are torrent beds and almost in their paths are houses. A building founded on the surface only would soon be carried down with the stream suddenly swollen by a storm. Doubtless houses have been so swept away. But those which stand on the hillside have been firmly planted on the limestone rock beneath the soil. When the flood arose, the storm beat upon those houses and could not shake them. Those who hear Christ's sayings and do them are fixed on the rock.

The test question to be applied to every one at the last is, How has he built? Years of untried life often pass by till old age comes and finds a man secure and undisturbed. The test comes, and too often the structure of a whole lifetime crumbles in an hour. But there are others, perhaps trembling and afraid, to whom the final test reveals the firmness with which they are built on the rock. Mistaken they have often been; sinful they are. But, repentant, they ever seek forgiveness through Christ. They yearn to help men to know him. An instructive illustration is before me as I write. It is in two letters from two Congregational ministers. One of them criticises an article written by the other. The spirit of his criticism is indicated by these sentences: "The main part of Dr. ——'s article in this week's Congregationalist is a falsehood." "Every period is a lie." "Great swelling words of vanity [2 Pet. 2:18]." The spirit of the minister criticised is made plain by these sentences from his reply: "It is impossible to avoid misunderstandings. Would that I could convince all these good souls that I have only one supreme aim, and that is to have the gospel of Christ recognized in its integrity. Humanity, through Christ, is the inheritor of a priceless faith. It is the joy of my days to hope to make this infinite faith more real, significant and vital to the men of my own generation."

Can both these ministers be building their characters on the solid foundation? "If any man hath not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

MADAGASCAR OF TODAY.

Parallel with The Congregationalist's March Topic for Missionary Meetings.

In order to gain an intelligent idea of the present situation in Madagascar, and to appreciate the social, political and religious condition of the island today, it is necessary to review briefly the past history of the Malagasy, and the introduction of Christianity by the London Missionary Society, followed by the awful persecutions, the story of which constitutes one of the most thrilling and marvelous chapters in missionary annals. The people of Madagascar, usually spoken of as the Malagasy, are not African in race and origin but, curiously enough, belong to the same family as the Malays and the Malayo-Polynesian. Although substantially the same language is spoken throughout the island, several distinct tribes exist, the Hovas, Sakalavas and Betsileos being among the most important. It has been estimated that the whole number of inhabitants does not exceed 4,000,000, of which probably about 1,000,000 may be Hovas, who are at present the ruling tribe. They are lighter in color and quicker in intellect than members of the other tribes and are characterized by a progressive spirit and keen commercial instinct.

The islanders dwelling in the interior were not savage when first visited by Europeans in the sixteenth century, but had attained to no small degree of civilization. They were decently clothed, though the climate is tropical, dwelt in settled communities, cultivated the soil and were by no means lacking in mechanical skill. The dominant religion partook of the nature of fetich worship. Superstition and idolatry prevailed among the people, the spirits of ancestors, the sun, moon and stars, as well as certain sacred mountains and cities, were appealed to in prayer, and belief in witchcraft and divination was common. Yet in some respects the religion of the Hova was not unfavorable to the entrance of Christianity, for there were no temples or priesthood or religious rites and no ancient religious literature appealing to the veneration and conservatism of the people; hence it had not the power of resistance possessed by the more ancient and elaborate religions of the East. But, more than this, Rev. W. E. Cousins of the London Missionary Society, one of the best authorities on Madagascar, tells us that there existed side by side with the heathen practices a tradition that a purer religion had once existed and that the ancient faith of the people had been a simple theism. The name of God was in constant use and occurs again and again in some of the ancient proverbs. This recognition of a Supreme Being, exalted far above all idols and spirits, formed a solid foundation on which the missionaries could build.

For many centuries before the visit of Europeans intercourse had been frequent between the Malagasy and the Arab merchants and slave dealers, who made a few settlements upon the coast. In the sixteenth century came the Portuguese, who attempted without success to establish themselves on the island and to convert the natives to the Roman Catholic faith. The French followed in the seventeenth century, occupying Fort Dauphine and forming some other settlements on the east coast. At the former point French Roman Catholic missionaries labored for nearly twenty years but with small results. The French were unable to maintain their positions, which eventually they all but abandoned.

Protestant missions in Madagascar date from 1818, when two resolute young Welshmen, David Jones and Thomas Bevan, with their families went out under the auspices of the London Missionary Society. This first missionary party, however, met with a sad fate, for they fell easy victims to the deadly climate of the coast and within two months out of six persons only Mr. Jones was left alive. Although obliged to seek a healthier country for a time, he refused to abandon the hope of evangelizing this great African island, and in 1820 once more took up his residence in Madagascar, not on the coast but in Antananarivo, the inland capital, situated on a high plateau. Through the efforts of Sir Robert Farquhar, British governor of Mauritius, Great Britain had entered into friendly negotiations with the reigning Malagasy king, Radama, who received the young missionary kindly, and more workers soon followed, prominent among whom were two other Welshmen, David Griffiths and David Johns.

Educational and industrial enterprises were important phases of the pioneer work in Madagascar. The direct spiritual results, however, were of slow growth, for it was not until eleven years after Mr. Jones's arrival in the capital that the first baptisms took place. From this time on growth was comparatively rapid and encouraging until at the end of fifteen years 200 had been received into the membership of the two churches, 10,000 or 15,000 children had been taught in the schools and altogether 30,000 people had learned to read. The language of the Hovas had been reduced to a written form, two printing presses established at the capital and the entire Scriptures translated and printed in the native tongue, as well as many tracts and elementary schoolbooks.

The terrible story of the persecutions which prevailed during the quarter of a century succeeding 1835, "when the land was dark," as the Malagasy Christians put it in speaking of this period of storm and suffering, is too well known to describe in detail here. An intensely conservative clinging to ancestral customs and idols and a suspicious and jealous fear of foreign influence finally culminated in an outbreak of violent opposition to Christianity, which compelled the missionaries to abandon the mission and to leave the Christians to suffer at the hands of the passionate, cruel, bloodthirsty Queen Ranavalona. It is very significant that the bitter persecution of the Malagasy converts was identical in its effects with that of the early Christians of apostolic times. Not only is it a remarkable fact that few converts fell away through fear of pain and death but, more than this, the number of believers actually increased twenty-fold under these tragical circumstances.

After the death of Ranavalona I. in 1861 a swift change took place, for the new monarch immediately proclaimed religious liberty and back flocked many who had been long banished or imprisoned or in hiding. Within a single month eleven places of worship were opened in Antananarivo alone. The king seconded the Christians' request for the return of the missionaries of the L. M. S., and a new party arrived in 1862, among whom was Rev. W. E. Cousins. To appreciate what these and other missionaries connected with the Norwegian Missionary Society, the Society of Friends and the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel have accomplished, one should take a comprehensive view of the present state of Christianity in the island. On the throne now sits a young, amiable and progressive queen, Ranavalona II., who has burnt the national idols, declared Christianity the state religion, and is herself a true and earnest Christian. An interesting incident is told of her in connection with the opening of a new L. M. S. girls' school building. She had herself been a pupil in the institution, and listened with deep attention to the exercises; but though her husband, the prime minister, had delivered for her a message of thanks and congratulation, she was not satisfied, and finally arose and herself spoke a few kind, womanly words of encouragement to teachers and scholars, urging the latter above all things to become true servants of Jesus Christ.

One of the most noticeable indications of the firm hold that the Christian religion has taken on the people is the number and prominence of the church buildings, especially in and around the capital. The needs of higher education, too, have required special buildings belonging both to the Protestant and Roman Catholic missions, conspicuous among which is the large college of the L. M. S. The inhabitants of the chief centers, such as Antananarivo and Fianarantsoa, are, generally speaking, Christian people, and the quiet and order that reign in them on Sunday are a surprise to strangers. Nor are church-going and Sunday observance the only signs of change. A new standard of morality has been introduced, and Christian ideas as to marriage, home life and the care of children are beginning to exert their influence. It cannot, however, be too strongly emphasized that nine-tenths of the Malagasy are still heathen and that of the 400,000 adherents many are Christians only in name. There are now 107 foreign Protestant missionaries in the island, with 2,004 congregations and 96,000 church members, while the Protestant schools contain 120,000. The Roman Catholic mission has about 100,000 adherents, under the care of 113 foreign missionary agents, and the children in their schools are said to number 15,000.

What will be the future of Protestant Christianity in Madagascar it is impossible to foretell, since France has by the recent war established a protectorate over the island. In his excellent little book, Madagascar of Today, which, by the way, contains a capital chapter on The Political Situation, Mr. Cousins has some hearty words for the Roman Catholic missionaries and "the self-sacrifice and patience with which their work is carried on." He declares that in the past there has been no deep bitterness existing between Roman Catholics and Protestants, and adds: "The fullest religious liberty is enjoyed in Madagascar today, and I do not think there is any prospect of either French or English missionaries enjoying under a French protectorate a fuller measure of freedom of action than under the present régime." This attitude of tolerance and absence of alarm has characterized the action of the missionaries and the utterances of the missionary press during the recent war. It is, however, an unquestionable fact that the French Government has been, and still is, practically, though perhaps not theoretically, hostile to Protestant missions, as the record of its rule in the South Seas and throughout all its colonies proves. And so it is not without apprehension that the friends of Christian missions look forward to a future in which French influence may become predominant in Madagascar.

MEN'S LITTLE WAYS.

Men's "little ways" are usually more interesting and often more instructive than their grand manners. When they are off their guard they frequently show to better advantage than when they are on parade. . . . The Little Flowers of St. Francis appear to me far more precious than the most learned German and French analysis of his character. There is a passage in Jonathan Edwards's Personal Narrative about a certain walk he took in the fields near his father's house and the blossoming of the flowers in the spring, which I would not exchange for the whole of his dissertation On the Freedom of the Will. As for Darwin, the best thing he ever wrote was a letter to his wife, in which he confesses that, having fallen asleep on the greensward and waked at dawn with the birds singing over him, "I did not care one penny how any of the birds or beasts had been formed."—Rev. Henry Van Dyke.

THE LITTLE MAGAZINES.

The bewildering variety of magazines which covers the bookstalls has recently taken on new forms and colors. The old favorites are still here, but with new claims because of bright and varied covers, and the little people—cheap in price, though not necessarily in quality—fill up the corners and bid for attention by their imitation of old forms dear to every book lover, or by bold and striking eccentricities of name or form or decoration. The Chap Book [Stone & Kimball: Chicago. $1.00 a year], The Bibelot, devoted to reprints of choice and rare prose and poetry for book lovers [Thomas B. Mosher: Portland, Me. 50 cents], The Pocket Magazine [Frederick A. Stokes Co. $1.00], Miss Blue Stocking [Miss Blue Stocking Co.: Boston. $1.00], The Black Cat, The Purple Cow, The Philistine—a Periodical of Protest—are examples of this new class of publications. Suggested, as they doubtless were, by English ventures of the same general order, they stand on both sides of the Atlantic for an interesting movement of the literary taste and development of the time, which the conservatism of the older magazines has failed to allow and provide for. If, on the one side, it cannot be denied that there is something of folly and absurdity—something even of pure commercial eagerness to make the most of a passing fashion—on the other it would hardly be unjust to say that among these new claimants for popular favor are to be found the only American periodicals, with the exception perhaps of The Atlantic, which devote themselves entirely to the publication of pure literature. They stand, therefore, as witness to an awakened literary interest, which may not always find expression in forms of enduring value, but which cannot be wholly overlooked in considering the literary history of the time. With many and great differences, students of American literature cannot help recalling the early days of the New England transcendental movement with its literary organs and outpourings, many of them as fantastic in matter, though not in manner, as the new periodicals of today. Because of a lack of moral earnestness—standing as they do rather for literary and artistic movements, protests and ideals which take no deep hold upon the serious problems of life—the influence of these newcomers is likely to be far less deep and permanent, but they stand, none the less, for witness of a broadening literary interest among the people and, we may hope, for promise of an era of fresh literary fruit-bearing.

BOOK REVIEWS.

DISSERTATIONS ON SUBJECTS CONNECTED WITH THE INCARNATION.

These essays by Charles Gore, Canon of Westminster, supplementary to the much discussed Bampton Lectures on the Incarnation, of 1891, take up more fully than the limits of the earlier work allowed the difficult and disputed questions connected with the incarnation of our Lord—his virgin birth, his human consciousness and the sacramental doctrine of transubstantiation. The book is interesting primarily to theologians, but the questions involved are so important, and they are so fairly and clearly presented, that it is sure to be helpful to all readers who are interested in the vital questions of the personality and authority of our Lord. As one of the leaders of the "catholic" party in the Church of England, the views of Canon Gore upon a subject which at once underlies and conditions all the teaching of the church are of special interest. But the book is entirely free from the narrow partisanship often associated with his school.

The discussion of the doctrine of the virgin birth against the critics who write in the interest of the suppression of supernaturalism is specially suggestive. The author points out the fact that the silence of Mark and John—precisely the two gospels which contain the first hand testimony of apostles—arises from the principle that "the original function of the apostles was mainly that of eye witnesses" and was "necessarily limited by the period . . . during which alone they had companied with" Christ. "To have gone outside that period of personal witness would have been to abandon a principle, and there can therefore be no question that the original 'teaching of the apostles' did not and could not include the virgin birth." With Luke and Matthew, who, according to Canon Gore's opinion, wrote later and were gatherers up of the knowledge of others, the insertion of all the attainable facts was natural and inevitable, while their testimony upon this point is entirely independent.

The discussion of the human consciousness is too metaphysical to be followed here, nor do we think the author has opened a clear way through, but we may quote a significant sentence from its consideration of the inherent difficulties of the subject. "Supposing that we can get no help toward the conceiving (or imagining) of this situation [i. e., that of our Lord's self-limitation in knowledge], the case is not by any means either desperate or unique. Nothing that is a fact can be irrational, but many things that are facts are beyond the power of human conception."

As against the doctrine of transubstantiation Canon Gore urges that "there is nothing to justify it in the original Christian tradition or in the New Testament," that "it is involved in tremendous metaphysical difficulties," as illustrated, for example, by the dictum of the Jesuit Lessius, who finds that it involves twelve special miracles, and that "it is contrary to the principle of the incarnation, that is, to the principle of Christian theology." In replying to the argument that it should be accepted as a necessary condition of that church unity which means so much to his own party in the English Church, he says that acceptance would only be possible by a non-natural minimizing of terms, which would, after all, leave the real meaning of the doctrine untouched, while "it can never be a satisfactory settlement to accept a phrase in a sense so unreal that you are not prepared to apply it anywhere else"; and, "finally, to accept the phrase in regard to the eucharist is to abandon a great principle which runs through all theology—the principle that the supernatural does not annihilate or supersede the natural."

In the contests of the time with a materializing science and with the claims of the "Roman obedience," the book will be helpful and stimulating to every student of the fundamental doctrines of the church. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50.]

EXEGETICAL.

Another instance of the catholicity of all devout and single-minded study of the Scriptures is found in Christ in Type and Prophecy, by Rev. A. J. Maas, S. J., professor of Oriental Languages in Woodstock College, Maryland. The second volume, which has come to hand at a considerable interval after the first, is a devout and learned discussion of the passages of the Old Testament which prefigured the offices, public life, sufferings, and glory of the Messiah. Except for little differences of English rendering of the Scripture text and a page or two in which the sacrificial theory of the Lord's Supper comes into view, only the slightly different horizon and order of critical authorities remind us that there is a division between Protestant and Roman in the Catholic Church of our Lord. There is, indeed, a certain freshness in this unusual point of view which might make the book very helpful to students. [Benziger Brothers. $2.00.]

A much more modern volume is Annotations on the Gospel According to St. Mark, by John A. W. Haas, B. D., which is Volume III. of the Lutheran Commentary issued by the Christian Literature Company. Without parade of critical apparatus, apt and suggestive notes have been brought together from a wide range of authorities and interwoven with the author's own store of thought in a comprehensive running commentary. Matter too technical for unlearned readers is relegated to foot-notes, and an occasional excursus condenses the discussion of important questions, while a careful essay is appended treating of the question of the date of the Last Supper. We have found the comments suggestive and devotional, but the total absence of any clew to the contents of the book is a serious hindrance to its usefulness. [$2.00.]

The Messages to the Seven Churches of Asia, by Thomas Murphy, D. D., LL. D., is a full and reverent study of the opening chapters of the Apocalypse. These seven epistles, which the church has always recognized as something more than local messages, valuable only for a limited time, must always be of extreme exegetical interest. Dr. Murphy has expounded them as the key to the whole book. "Here we have made known to us," he says, "the germs of all church life, good and bad, put forth under apostolic superintendence, which germs, fully developed, form the whole body of the Apocalypse." Under the running title of The Inaugural of the Enthroned King, he gives a full and suggestive study of the epistles, supplemented by a topical index and table of Scripture texts. [Presbyterian Board of Publication. $3.00.]

Another study of the Apocalypse, introduced under the somewhat confusing form of an allegory, is The Mystery of the Golden Cloth, by Jasper S. Hughes. The book greatly lacks the condensation which a trained literary worker would have given it, and the author also fails, we think, in that power of close and consecutive thinking which is hardly anywhere so needful as in the study and interpretation of the prophetic Scriptures. The author's description of himself is that of "an unordained evangel," and certainly he approaches his difficult subject with the reverent interest befitting a man who preaches the good news to others. [White Star, publisher, Chicago. $1.25.]

STORIES.

An Old Fogy, by Mrs. J. H. Walworth, is a wholesome and interesting story of the trials which befall a Southern planter of the old type who is driven from the quiet of his ancestral acres to the heated competition and unneighborly crowding of New York. The temptation and recovery of a son and the love story of a daughter give spice to the narrative, but the character of the Colonel, who in the old plantation life played chess every evening "because he loved it," while his practical wife "played because her husband loved it," and who prefers to become a street-car driver rather than accept charity from his relatives, is the most interesting part of the book; and the reader is glad — though hardly surprised — when a discovery of hidden papers restores him to the quiet dignity of his old life. [The Merriam Co. $1.50]. — From the same publishers comes A Man of Two Minds, by Francis Tillou Buck. Few of our readers, we hope, are capable of being seriously interested in the mental exercises of a man who for months keeps up a correspondence with a girl whom he has persuaded to try to love him, while he is all the time engaged in a desperate flirtation with a married woman. [$1.00.]

Two or three volumes of short stories are come to hand. One is Mrs. Burton Harrison's A Virginia Cousin and Bar Harbor Tales [Lamson Wolffe & Co. $1.25]. Mrs. Harrison's work is exceptionally artistic and graceful yet never lacking in firmness of touch. She is well known for her society sketches and stories, which are also much more than mere amusements for herself and her readers, and sound the depths of human nature and appeal to the nobler motives which shape character. This little book represents her in her lighter and sprightlier vein and is as attractive within as it is without.

Another little volume equally tempting to look at is one of the Carnation series and is The Sister of a Saint and Other Stories [Stone & Kimball. $1.00], by Grace Ellery Channing. These stories, too, which are Italian or Spanish in their atmosphere and setting, sometimes touch one's deeper feelings and also illustrate a picturesqueness of descriptive style which imparts to them a special attractiveness. It is our impression that some, if not all, of these have been printed already, but they are worthy of being reissued together thus.

Mrs. J. Gladwyn Jebb has put together a dozen of her stories in a little book called Some Unconventional People [Roberts Bros. $1.25]. They are light in quality but entertaining and will serve well for journeying or leisure time when one is not in a mood for serious work.

Any one who delights in rough adventure, and who is not too particular about the company he keeps or the language he listens to, will find much entertainment in the series of short stories by H. B. Marriott Watson, gathered under the title of Galloping Dick [Stone & Kimball: Chicago. $1.75]. Of all the adventures the strongest are those which open and close the book. The contrasted characters in the Quandary of the Bishop are worked out with admirable skill both of insight and expression, while in Of a Meeting at Fullham we have a vivid picture of the folly and wisdom, the moral cowardice and cool physical courage of King Charles II.

POETRY.

The essential value of the Bible as literature, upon which Matthew Arnold so often insisted and which is coming into fuller recognition everywhere, is well shown by the second volume of Lyrical Poetry from the Bible, which has just come to hand. In clear print, on good paper and with delicate and beautiful frontispiece and title-page, Ernest Rhys has gathered the lyric passages from Ecclesiastes, The Song of Songs, and the Prophets, together with the essentially Hebraic psalms of Mary, Zacharias and Simeon from the gospel of Luke. The text is that of the common version and well does its poetic rhythm reveal itself in these selections. For those who have been tempted and disposed to forget that God's medium for communicating the highest spiritual truth is poetry, as well as for all lovers of the highest and most beautiful literature which the world has yet seen, we can heartily commend this little volume. In the concluding words of the editor's preface: "Whether as the lyric flowering of that inspired people to which David and Isaiah and Jehuda ben Halevy, and Spinoza and Heine, belonged; or, as a part of our own poetry, which has affected indeed our whole spirit and mode of speech, it is the most moving and inspiring body of imaginative song which we possess. As Milton said: 'Of all the lyric kind — incomparable!'" [Macmillan & Co. $1.00.]

Here is a fresh book by Austin Dobson, the popular English poet, which illustrates certain characteristics of his verse, and they are more than pleasing in their way. The book is The Story of Rosina and Other Verses [Dodd, Mead & Co. $2.00], and its admirable illustrations are by Hugh Thomson. Mr. Dobson's lighter fancy has controlled the contributions to this work. They are gay and jaunty verses for the most part, dealing with society and with ordinary people and events in a very pleasant yet hardly more than a touch-and-go sort of manner. Once in a while a profounder sentiment is suggested, or a vein of thought is pursued to a deeper than common level, but on the whole it is light work admirably well done and hardly undertaking to be anything more than this. The illustrations are remarkably fine in both conception and execution.

Mary I. Lovejoy has gathered poems of outdoor life and the love of the growth and beauty of the world into a poetry reader for children, which she calls Nature in Verse. Appealing to the well-known love of poetry which usually characterizes little children, she has brought together several hundred poems divided into songs of the seasons. They are carefully selected and are almost entirely from American sources, so that the flavor and spirit is that of the world in which the children themselves live, and the life is that which they may observe about them in their daily walks. It is interesting to see how the rhythmic fervor of the Psalms makes two of them, as here employed, the most admirable introductions to the poems of spring and summer. [Silver, Burdett & Co. 72 cents.]

Yarmouth Fog, a broadside of verses by William Byron Forbush [Herald Press: Yarmouth, Nova Scotia], brings with it something of the charm of sea and shore in the Province. With a more fully trained ear and greater constructive skill Mr. Forbush might add his name to the lengthening roll of Canadian poets.

EDUCATIONAL.

GERMAN AND FRENCH.—Bilder aus der Deutschen Litteratur, by Prof. J. Keller of the New York Normal College, is an admirable compendium of the history of German literature in simple German with well-chosen examples from the classic writers and careful summaries of the more famous longer works. The Story of the Niebelungen Lied, for example, is told in a very interesting way, which will be sure to awaken a desire in the mind of the student to read the work itself when the opportunity comes. The book does not attempt completeness, but is, for the purpose which it sets before itself, admirably complete, and the literary selections are well chosen. Such a history of literature in easy German seems to us an admirable text-book. An index would have added to the value of the book and made it still more valuable for reference to those who have no larger history of German literature at hand. [American Book Co. 75 cents.]

Die Hochzeitsreise of Benedix, edited by Natalie Schiefferdecker, instructor in the Abbot Academy at Andover, is one of Heath's Modern Language series. The notes are adapted for young pupils, and the comedy itself is so witty and enjoyable that it is a real addition to our available texts for school use. [D. C. Heath & Co. 25 cents.]

We have also from the American Book Company two prose texts with notes and vocabulary, Herr Omnia by Heinrich Seidel and Traumereien an Französichen Kaminen by Richard von Volkmann-Leander, both beautifully printed on good paper and well adapted for school use. [25 and 35 cents.]

Akin to these is a book in English, Lessing, with Representative Selections, including Nathan the Wise, by Euretta A. Hoyles, which is one of the Studies in German Literature issued by Silver, Burdett & Co. Those who do not read German will find here a full historical and critical introduction to the life and work of Lessing, with the translation of Nathan by William Taylor. As Lessing's best known play is the work of a greater thinker than poet, it may perhaps be more completely rendered into and enjoyed in English than any other of the German classic plays. [48 cents.]

C. H. Grandgent, director of modern language instruction in the Boston public schools, has published, as one of Heath's Modern Language series, a book of Selections for French Composition, which attempts to lead the pupil through the experience of various styles to a familiarity with the written use of the language. There are full English and French vocabularies, and the grammatical helps are well adapted to meet the difficulties which the pupil encounters. [D. C. Heath & Co. 50 cents.]

MISCELLANEOUS.

Vikings of Today; or, Life and Medical Work among the Fishermen of Labrador, is by Wilfred T. Grenfell. The romantic and remarkable work of the "mission to deep sea fishermen" in Norwegian waters has for some years attracted wide attention. In 1892 the same (London) society began similar work among the seamen and shoremen of that wildest part of North America, the coast of Labrador. It has been from the first in charge of Dr. Grenfell, an Oxford athlete and London surgeon of piety, pluck and skill. With a small steamer, accompanied by a steam launch, and with like-minded associates, he finds his way among the icebergs and almost uncharted rocks from one settlement to another, healing the sick on ship and shore, performing surgical operations where necessary and gathering the people wherever he may be for simple religious services. Of course this can only be done in the short summer of that latitude. The book is the story, simply told, of his travels and experiences along that strange, unprivileged coast, of which so little is known. The way in which Dr. Grenfell was led — manifestly by the hand of God's providence — to the finding and rescue of Pomiuk, the Eskimo boy from the World's Fair, has been recently related in the "Conversation Corner" of this paper. The book is illustrated, and will be one of thrilling interest to all who sympathize with the arduous and adventurous missionary labors of such heroic men among a class of people, partly white and partly Eskimo, who live and suffer in those distant and desolate regions. [London: Marshall Brothers; sold at the Congregational Bookstore. $1.25.]

Rev. Dr. E. F. Burr needs no introduction to the public as a specialist in respect to astronomy and few have equaled him in the skill and success with which he has aided in popularizing knowledge of that branch of science and in rendering the subject interesting to the common reader. The Stars of God [Student Pub. Co. $1.25], his latest book, is an example of his ability and success in this line, and it deals with the heavenly bodies in a large, free manner, yet not without much attention to detail, and the occasional fervor of the style causes the book to glow like the orbs which it describes. A religious tone pervades the whole work and it is educational in different senses, as well as of profound and lasting interest.

The younger children, who are too young to care for the stars, except vaguely, have been remembered once more in Myths and Motherplays [Milton Bradley Co. $1.00], by Sara E. Wiltse, in which are gathered together a number of bright and spirited stories, short and entertaining, adapted from the old nature myths of which children have always been so fond. It is intended to promote the development of the children toward the appreciation of the poetic and artistic and, at the same time, solid instruction is imparted. Twenty-four full-page drawings, finely executed and very attractive, help the volume to accomplish its desired work.

Mr. T. J. Ellinwood, the reporter of Henry Ward Beecher's discourses, has compiled a volume of Metaphors, Similes and Other Characteristic Sayings of Henry Ward Beecher [A. J. Graham & Co. $1.00] to which Dr. Homer B. Sprague has furnished the introduction. They are short but choice examples of Beecher's remarkable power of condensing a truth into a sentence or driving home a thought with a force which could not be resisted or evaded because of the felicity of its expression. They are classified and adapted to be easily referred to.

The Annual Catalogues of Yale and Harvard Universities appear as elaborate and handsomely bound and printed volumes, embodying all the facts about the universities which any one is likely to desire to learn and which illustrate vividly the immense recent development of these institutions. It is at once delightful and a little bewildering to old graduates to turn over these pages and to perceive the many changes since their day, but these changes are for the better, and the thorough intellectual work which the institutions are doing and which is sometimes overlooked because of the modern prominence of athletics in the newspapers is here indicated very suggestively.

NOTES.

— The real name of "Stepniak," the revolutionist and author of English books upon Russia, who had escaped a thousand dangers to be killed by a passing train in London, is said to have been Kravchinsky.

— Whatever the effect upon the author or upon the fortunes of the book, it is gratifying to note that Thomas Hardy's latest book, Jude, the Obscure, is almost universally condemned for its debasing moral atmosphere.

— A new life of Agassiz is about to be published. It is written by Jules Marcou, the sole survivor of the band of naturalists who came to this country with Agassiz, and who, as his pupil, assistant and friend, had special opportunities of preparation for the work.

— In the death of Philip Reclam Germany has lost one of the great popularizers of its literature. The series of paper-covered German classics and translations sold everywhere for about five cents a number, and of such convenient size that they could be carried in the pocket, brought the best reading within the reach of every one who cared for it.

— The new poet laureate's first task, or opportunity, was that of celebrating the heroic blunder of Dr. Jameson and his companions in invading the territory of the South African republic. Of his success in voicing the English Conservative view of the affair there can be no question, but the verses can hardly be considered up to the standard of the earlier and greater Alfred, and the comments upon their form must make the poet feel a very genuine sympathy for the "baffled band" whose vain exploit he sings.

— The American Humane Education Society has just offered a prize of $200 "for the best practical plan of settling peacefully and honorably to both nations the difference between Great Britain and the United States of America in regard to the disputed Venezuela boundary." Ex-Governor Long is to be one of the judges who are to decide upon the manuscripts after March 1, by which time we hope the question may have become wholly academic through the agreement upon a plan by the real judges, President Cleveland and Lord Salisbury.

— When a man is accused of plagiarism because he has worked over some of the material of his immature and forgotten publications into books which are widely known, he surely has some reason to complain. Mr. Hall Caine, the novelist, seems to be having this experience through the enterprise of an American publisher, who has extracted an early story of his from the columns of a provincial English newspaper, and the consequent very natural discovery by the newspaper critics that it bore a great resemblance to The Deemster. It may come to be necessary under the searchlight of modern business and critical enterprise for an author to append to every new work a history of the processes through which it came into being.

— In the death of Col. Thomas W. Knox the American literary world loses a picturesque and interesting character. Born in New Hampshire, he went to the West as a fortune hunter in the Colorado mines, drifted into journalism, and entered the army as soldier and army correspondent. At the close of the war he undertook a journey round the world for the New York Tribune, in the course of which he joined an American expedition for telegraph building in Siberia, where he traveled 3,600 miles in sledges and half as far in wagons. He invented the system of topographical telegraphy by which the weather maps are sent out from Washington, and wrote, besides a description of his Siberian experiences and other works, a series of books of travel for boys, one of which brought him the Order of the White Elephant from the King of Siam. A more typical American life in its changes, adventures and readiness of resource it would be hard to find.

European Students in Missionary Convention.

International Conference, Liverpool, Jan. 1–5.

By Rev. Harlan P. Beach.

Dr. Ashmore's address delivered, nine years since, at the birth of the American missionary volunteer movement inspired our students to look upon the mission forces of the church not as a wrecking expedition, but rather as an army for conquest. Two of the American delegates were forcibly reminded of this when aroused at early dawn of Jan. 1 by the sudden crash of the Cephalonia upon the rocks of Holyhead. Happily, all passengers were safely landed at the base of the cliff and suffered nothing worse than temporary fright and the spoiling of their goods. The wrecking expedition was forgotten that evening, when the Lord Bishop of Liverpool, Dr. Ryle, welcomed with a hearty handshake —"and two for Americans"—915 delegates from twenty-four countries who are here attending the first European convention of missionary volunteers. It was prophesied at that meeting that the first five days of the new year would prove of inestimable importance to the Christian and unevangelized world, and that prophecy has been verified by the results already seen.

The Student Volunteer Missionary Union of Great Britain was formed in April, 1892, and by a wise combination of American experience and British coservatism and wisdom the union has spread and developed until it numbers 1,038 students, 206 of whom are women. Nearly half of this number are university students and 268 are in theological colleges. While the British enrollment is only about a third as large as that of the American, they have already more than twenty per cent. of their number in the field, and enough more have been accepted by missionary boards to make a total of sixty-one per cent. accepted. The spiritual power of the movement, in British universities especially, is very marked.

The continental contingent was an important one. Germany's delegation, twenty in number, Holland's thirteen representatives and Norway's twelve were strong men evidently, though from the conditions of continental student life they lacked the warmth and the missionary zeal of their brothers and sisters of Britain. It was interesting to note the change that was wrought upon them as the spiritual power of the meetings deepened, and delightful to hear in the polyglot prayer meetings the earnest and personal petitions of these students.

The situation which confronted the British volunteers was unique. Full of the fire of Henry Martyn and David Livingstone, they had on the one hand to overcome the criticism of the High Church party at home, and on the other to kindle a missionary flame in their continental neighbors' heart. Some of their own prominent men were fearful lest the attempt might result in the still greater widening of the breach between men who held with tenacity to the historic episcopate and yet widely differed in other points. As most of the volunteers are Churchmen, the failure wisely to conduct the meetings would have been fatal.

But the difficulty was accomplished, thanks to a prayerful executive committee. Strong speakers were on hand and the whole tone of the convention was made spiritual. The dramatic moment when Dr. Pierson, after enumerating the nations of this conference and contrasting them with those of Pentecost, stretched out his hands to still the applause which thundered through Philharmonic Hall was one not soon to be forgotten as he quietly called them to the life and witness of the Spirit. Again, the deeply devotional addresses given along spiritual lines by young MacGregor and F. B. Meyer, and the latter's marvelous quiet-hour prayers and heart questionings could not but unite students of every shade of belief. There were, of course, a multitude of topics discussed of a distinctively missionary character, but the battle was won through the exaltation of the Spirit of God and the large place given to prayer.

Notable missionary men were there. The secretaries and representatives of forty-six missionary societies could not but furnish abundant material for good speakers. Missionaries like the venerable Dr. Muirhead of China, the magnetic hero of English university men, Pilkington of Uganda, our own brilliant Egerton Young, with his touching Indian stories, the champion cricketer of Cambridge, Charlie Studd, now back from China, and many others were gladly heard. The editorial secretary of the Church Missionary Society, Eugene Stock, and their remarkably forceful lady speaker, Miss Gollock, Dr. Wardlaw Thompson of the London Missionary Society, Dr. George Smith of the Free Church of Scotland and others made the program very strong. Dr. Pierson's addresses were, as usual, worthy of the occasion and such as no American needed to be ashamed of.

Other meetings than those directly spiritual and missionary were held. One of the smallest of these was probably as significant as any. It was the group of twenty-one professors, deans, principals of colleges and others high in educational circles who met together for friendly conference as to what could be done to make the power of the instructor more distinctly forceful in British institutions. As these men, without reserve, unbosomed their hearts concerning the low or critical religious life of their institutions, it is manifestly improper that any full report of this meeting should be given. Suffice it to say that some feel that this gathering, prolonged far beyond its allotted time, will prove as helpful to the religious life of British universities as any meeting ever held.

One of the most enjoyable of irregular gatherings was the banquet given by Sir George Williams in Liverpool's well-known St. George's Hall, at which nearly 900 students sat down. The spectacle of so many young men and women going there at that hour aroused much curiosity and created a decided impression. Under the protecting ægis of the city's fabulous or extinct bird, the liver, all sat, and for once the Scotch student, "who goes up to the university with a bag of potatoes and a sack of oatmeal, hires an attic and lives on intellectual food after the oatmeal is gone," had enough and to spare. Though Sir George was not present, he had an admirable substitute in Lord Kinnaird, who was toastmaster of the occasion. Popular Donald Fraser of Glasgow, Anderson of Oxford, a member of Parliament and others furnished the feast of reason.

This was by no means the great occasion of the convention. Probably the hours of Saturday were as thrilling as any. The reception of the foreign delegates and the reading of the executive committee's report came in the evening. Aside from the enthusiasm evoked by the latter, the representatives of various nations speaking in broken English, with the exception of the Dutch, and ending with John 3: 16 in their own tongue, made a profound impression. Japan's delegate was received with very hearty cheers, which, strange to say, were terrific, when Hsiang of China spoke. Then came "All hail the power of Jesus' name," sung to Miles Lane. It was a song that must have delighted heaven, but as it proceeded it became less strong as one and another found his voice choking with emotion at the sight and in the thought of the significance of the hour.

That same afternoon students of these nationalities might have been seen translating into their own language the volunteer declaration. By night Germany and Norway had established volunteer unions, and France had extended her organization to include Switzerland. News came also from Australia that the movement had started there, beginning, strangely enough—shall we not say rather most naturally?—just at the time that British university men were in special prayer that Australian students might be moved concerning this great question. That evening was memorable for another reason. The financial burden of this great convention had been heavy and pleas for its removal were put in by Eugene Stock, Dr. George Smith and one of our own delegates, Sherwood Eddy. In great boldness they had asked the Lord, as they did the audience, for £900. When the collection was counted it was found to be £1,650! This makes it possible to put a traveling secretary into the field in three European countries and to send Mr. Mott, who is America's great college leader, now working in India, down into Australia to forward the movement there.

That happy day made the Sabbath one of great rest and thankfulness. It began with early communion at St. Luke's. It gave an American Congregationalist a decided thrill to receive the communion from the hands of the venerable Bishop Royston, one of the suffragans under the Lord Bishop of Liverpool. It proved the truth of a remark made a short time since by the Bishop of London: "Of this I am sure: that the recognition of a common task imposed upon every society of Christian belief will do more to bring us together than any other endeavors we may make." This was a foretaste of the unity which came at the "nugget meeting" for missionaries and leaders in the afternoon, and that due to Dr. Pierson's address in the evening, The Evangelization of the World in This Generation, the motto adopted after three years debate by the British volunteers. A plea for volunteers by Mr. Eddy and an impressive closing address by the convention's strong chairman, Donald Fraser, brought the first European students' missionary convention to a close. But the end is not yet.

THE OHIO ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE CONGRESS.

By Rev. D. N. Beach, Cambridge, Mass.

It would be difficult for any one not present to imagine the enthusiasm or significance of this great three days' convention at Columbus.

Ohio has a species of State prohibition. That is, its constitution forbids the granting of licenses to sell intoxicants. This requirement is, however, construed liberally, and, in a large proportion of the State, liquor is sold, a system of taxation on sellers taking the place, indirectly, of liquor licenses. It is thus left to local officers either (1) to resort to this indirect license or (2) not to, and thus, virtually, to prohibit selling, while (3), under this constructive prohibition, it is again left to them whether or not to enforce such prohibition.

Under such an anomalous condition of things it will readily be seen that, under exceptional circumstances, an ideal state of affairs might exist, but that the tendency would be to the greatest confusion and even to the greatest laxity. Such, in point of fact, is the case.

There are, for example, townships, cities (small ones, however), and even counties, where liquor selling is not taxed, where it is, therefore, constructively prohibited and where the law is enforced. Public sentiment, the agitations which it sets on foot, and resolute officers insure this state of affairs, and you would think yourself in Quincy or Melrose, Mass. But even here the legal standing of the whole matter is not satisfactory; a revolution in local politics might lose precious ground long held, and, at the best, occasional weak-kneed officials are a standing menace. It is as if one held a fine piece of property without a clear title or under mortgage.

Or, again, instances are not wanting where public opinion is all right, where every means available is used by the local body politic, but where wretched officers defeat the whole movement, and the more readily because of the nebulous state of the law. Here is where great confusion enters.

Once more, in large parts of the State liquor selling is freely taxed, multitudes of saloons are so taxed and are tolerated, and, under this loose construction of the law, the State has for such territory a very loose, free and unsatisfactory license system in fact though not in form.

This general condition of affairs is the more aggravating, because Ohio is in many respects a model State, with a population in large part intelligent, virtuous and earnest. Under a wise local option law, it is believed, such is the state of the public intelligence and conscience, that the saloon might be banished in fully as large a proportion of the State as is the case in Massachusetts.

Hence the great Anti-Saloon League, now of several years' standing, headed by that magnificent leader, Rev. Howard H. Russell, with headquarters at Columbus, with numerous branches scattered widely over the State, with capable field secretaries working within these branches, with affiliations in churches, Protestant and Catholic, in Y. M. C. Associations, in C. E. Societies, in temperance organizations, etc., and already so powerful that a National League (although still in its incipient stages) has been the outcome. As the Ohio League is now one of the most forceful factors in the whole temperance situation, so, ere long, will the National League become.

Nor could this be otherwise. For, aside from the men of extraordinary caliber and of great genius for organization and leadership, who head the movement and guarantee its success, its principles are irresistible. What we call in Massachusetts the "Cambridge principles," though not applied as yet so effectively in detail, are largely incorporated in the movement. Union, for example, of all creeds, politics, temperance theories (or lack of them), classes and sorts of men; "dividing the question," so that there is but one issue, the question of the existence of the saloon; the avoidance of the abstractions and appeal to the facts in the case (the application, in substance, of the inductive method to this problem); great reliance on prayer and religious fervor, but as cool and calculating a practical campaign as if God were only "on the side of the heaviest guns"—these are some of the simple, rational and profound principia of the movement. These get popular expression everywhere in such pithy watchwords as these: "The saloon must go." "Unity, persistency, victory." "County local option, or no county taxation."

At the instigation of this league Hon. J. T. Haskell of Wellington (a former parishioner, by the way, of our loved Dr. Barton of Shawmut Church) introduced in the last legislature a bill providing for county option, and, if not, for city, township, ward, or other option, according to the various civic divisions of the State. The functions of the county are somewhat more comprehensive in Ohio than in Massachusetts, and, as it is therefore more distinctively a political unit than with us, the first objective is the county; failing that, the next lesser divisions of counties are taken in their order.

The bill was defeated. So is the liquor power intrenched in the State that, until the league's organization, those on its black list of men in politics, who had taken aggressive positions against the saloon, were generally able through its machinations to be permanently retired from political life. In such circumstances, notwithstanding that the league pledged itself to return to the State House the men who stood for its bill, many good men weakened and the bill failed.

Somewhat modified for the legislature now in session and introduced by Mr. Harris (for Mr. Haskell declined renomination for this legislature), and therefore variously called the Haskell, the Harris, or the Haskell-Harris Bill, it is now before the House, and the great Anti-Saloon Congress was a demonstration from all over the State and from widely beyond it to impress the legislature in favor of passing it.

It had been planned for and its speakers engaged many months in advance. It was a delegated body from all over the State, churches, Y. M. C. A.'s, C. E., temperance and other societies sending representatives. It packed the great auditorium of the Board of Trade to the doors. At some sessions overflows or parallel meetings were needful. It began Tuesday night, Jan. 21, and closed Thursday night, Jan. 23. There were morning, afternoon and evening sessions. The management was superb. The speeches were in the main brief, pointed and inspiring. The foremost speakers of the State and many from beyond the State were scheduled. Tuesday night, at the Board of Trade, Dr. Watterson, Bishop of Columbus (Catholic), welcomed the league, and at Dr. Gladden's church Dr. Fishburn (Presbyterian) did the same. Father Endeavor Clark addressed both meetings. There were prayer services Wednesday and Thursday mornings at Dr. Gladden's church, and high mass at the cathedral Thursday morning. Singing by the Delaware College Glee Club and by soloists, an oratorical contest (on "The Harris Bill") by speakers chosen from eight Ohio colleges, addresses by Father Cleary of Minneapolis and by Dr. Elder, Archbishop of Cincinnati (Catholic), testimony from Arkansas, Indiana, Kentucky, Georgia, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts, and a grand finale in the form of a hearing before the legislative committee in the great Hall of Representatives at the capitol, Thursday night, were among the special features. All the sessions were well attended. The interest steadily grew. Applause was almost continuous. The moral and spiritual results were greater even than the practical ones.

Meantime the league's committee was at work at the State House. Its chairman was able to report on the last day that enough members of the Legislature had agreed to support the bill to insure its passage, if they kept their promise. Thus the league is in politics, and, according to the chairman's report, it had succeeded in fulfilling its promise to the previous legislature to return the men who stood by the bill, or to return other friends of the bill in their places. In fact, in Toledo two foremost politicians (rather of the machine type), who had opposed the bill in the previous legislature, were coolly retired from the State House by the combined work of the league. These are inspiring facts. Good men might far better make or unmake office holders than bad men. And they can do it if they choose, as these instances abundantly prove.

But there is great peril; $700,000 are credibly reported to be pledged by the liquor traffic of the State and country for the defeat of this bill. The politicians are trimming. The newspapers are largely noncommittal or critically favorable. One or two Democratic sheets are giving the movement favor, with, however, the apparent intent of using it for political effect, that the legislature (largely Republican) has passed a bill which will surely be unpopular with the multitudinous allies of the saloon. On the other hand, this is purely a nonpartisan measure.

Thus the capitol at Columbus is the present storm center of the temperance situation in America. For, if Ohio joins Massachusetts in efficient local option, the future of the American saloon is measurably and immensely abridged. And, whatever the immediate outcome, no one could have stood Thursday night in the great Representative chamber, packed to the doors and overflowing into the corridors, or in the thronged rotunda, steadily ringing with applause, without being sure that the heart of Ohio beats true, and that she and Massachusetts will soon be side by side in their great and glorious anti-saloon warfare.

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING.

Topic, Feb. 2–8. Witnessing for Christ. Ps. 51: 10–15; Acts 10: 36–43.

To what should we bear witness? For what object? By what authority?

(See prayer meeting editorial.)

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

A London Council of Christian Endeavor has been organized from the fifteen or more local unions of the city. Rev. F. B. Meyer is the president.

New Zealand now has a C. E. union. The Endeavorers at Christchurch have undertaken evangelistic work for the 2,000 Chinese along the west coast.

At Fort Reno, Okl., a society has been formed among the soldiers, and at Fort Clark, Tex., another has been started by some Endeavorers that had been transferred there from Fort Sam Houston.

At the convention of Kingfisher County, Okl., more than thirty expressed a purpose to lead a Christian life, and the revival service following the regular sessions resulted in nearly ninety conversions.

Since the Bermuda delegate to the Boston convention returned to his home, two new societies have been started on the island.——In spite of these times of persecution, a junior society has been formed at Mersine, Turkey, with twelve members.

It is suggested that during the month of February the members of the World's C. E. Prayer Chain pray especially for the young converts who have recently been brought to Christ, that they may be strong, unselfish, winsome Christians, and that they may begin at once to show their love to Christ by working for him.

While the members of the Junior Society of the Second Church, Attleboro, Mass., were unable to attend the meetings during the Week of Prayer, they observed the week by daily prayer for the pastor and the meetings. Nine members of this society and three former members were admitted to the church at the last communion.

A junior from a society in the District of Columbia formed a society two years ago in the country town where he spent the summer and has sent a message to it every week since then. An honorary member of this society started another, and a third was organized in an asylum for the blind to which one of the members went as a scholar.

At the first union C. E. meeting in India, held at Mussoorie, only three societies were represented by delegates, but many others sent reports, showing that they are doing excellent work, not a few of the members being engaged in evangelistic work. India has 119 societies, but the great distances and the many languages in use make it difficult to have such an organization as has been effected in China and Japan with a smaller number of societies.

The city union of Worcester, Mass., two years ago responded to a request to help a rescue mission and decided to adopt the work. All active members were invited to help raise $2,500 and to give five cents a week apiece to the object, besides helping in the mission work. In a place that was once a saloon meals are furnished for five cents and lodging also for five cents, while those unable to pay are given an opportunity to earn the amount in a wood yard. A gospel meeting is held every night. Many conversions have resulted.

The Report of the Deputation to Japan.

The Prudential Committee of the American Board received, Jan. 22, the report of the deputation to Japan. It is a document of sixty pages, typewritten. We summarize as follows: The deputation reached Yokohama Sept. 30, 1895, and left that port returning Dec. 7. From many native officials, native and foreign teachers in colleges, missionaries of different societies and other prominent men they received generous attention and service. They visited nearly all the mission stations of the Board in Japan, held conferences with many Japanese, addressed many audiences and discussed the conditions of Christian work in the empire and especially the work of the Board, with committees of the churches, trustees of educational institutions, pastors and evangelists. About 200 hours were passed in formal conferences and as many more in informal discussions.

PROPERTY OF THE BOARD.

The Doshisha. As the Japanese law prohibits foreigners from owning or leasing real estate, such property of all mission boards has been placed in the hands of Japanese, either as individuals or trustees. The Board, under this compulsion, in 1893 gave its real estate to trustees of three different institutions, the chief of which was the Doshisha. The Board was to have the use of this property for thirty years, paying therefor a nominal rent The donations to the Doshisha were given with the understanding that it should be maintained as a Christian institution. The Board has built in Kyoto nine houses for the use of its missionaries.

Later in 1893 the trustees of the Doshisha declared that they "do not recognize that property as subject to any condition in regard to its present use," but they said they did not intend to change that use as long as the need for it continued. Most of the present trustees have been appointed since the property was transferred to the Doshisha. The deputation was not able to secure an agreement for the free use of the houses as residences by the missionaries, but the trustees promise not to charge rent for these houses while the missionaries continue as teachers in the institution, and that they will give free use of a certain number of houses to missionaries when not occupied by foreign teachers. No agreement was reached in these matters between the deputation and the trustees.

Nurses' Training School and Hospital. These were organized by Dr. J. C. Berry, the buildings were erected by the Woman's Board, and the hospital furnished and equipped at the expense of the Board, though money toward the purchase of the ground was given by Japanese. Dr. Berry returned to the United States in 1893 on furlough, and during his absence the Japanese members of the hospital committee voted that his place should be filled by a native and that if he should return he should act as adviser. Dr. Berry's services have been highly appreciated and his return is earnestly desired by the mission and by many of the leading Japanese. But the deputation feels compelled to advise that the Board should not send Dr. Berry back to Japan and that the training school and hospital be left, as they must be, in the care of the trustees of the Doshisha.

Kumamoto. Two houses were built here by the Board for its missionaries in 1891, the property being held by trustees of two schools started by Christians with the help of the missionaries. Through dissensions in the board of trustees these schools ceased to be Christian in 1893 and the missionaries were turned out of their homes. The Kumiai churches, being unable to secure any honorable adjustment of the claims of the Board, withdrew fellowship from the school. The deputation made to the trustees a proposition for the Board to relinquish all claims to the property, provided that it should have the use of the houses for its missionaries for thirty years, but no answer was received. No redress is possible for this seizure of the property of the Board, unless the trustees are honest enough to restore it.

THE DOSHISHA.

The Christian character and spiritual tone of this institution are far less pronounced than formerly. The trustees declare that the university is "Christian," and that as individuals they affirm their belief in the personality of God, the divinity of Christ and the future life, but that they could not as trustees affirm these beliefs, nor could they identify themselves in belief with the Kumiai churches. To all the representations made to them of the importance of making some statement of belief on which to determine their fellowship with American Christians who have helped to support the Doshisha, they replied that theological opinion in Japan was in such a formative state that they could only affirm that they should maintain a Christian university, but could not define Christianity.

The deputation sets forth at length reasons in explanation of the situation, and says that "full force should be given to the facts that the Bible has place in the curriculum of the university; that professors and students are required to attend daily service in the chapel; that the president, who is also pastor of the college church, preaches evangelical and fervent discourses; that he declares his purpose to resign his office whenever the university ceases to stand for evangelical Christianity; and that the trustees, through their chief financial official, pledge themselves that, should the Doshisha for any reason cease to be a Christian educational institution, the property shall be sold and the proceeds returned to the donors."

The deputation makes the following recommendations:

First, that for the present the teachers supplied to the Doshisha by the Board be continued, if desired by the trustees.

Second, that for the present, and while the able and devoted men sent by the Board are connected with the theological department, our co-operation with the Doshisha in the training of pastors and evangelists be continued.

Third, that after the reduced appropriations asked by the mission for the Doshisha for the year 1896 is paid, the sum given by the Board to the university be reduced annually so as to cease at the end of the year 1898.

KOBE COLLEGE.

The report on this institution is so encouraging that we print it in full: "It is very gratifying to be able to speak in terms of unqualified praise of Kobe College. In buildings and equipments, in courses of education, in management, it is unsurpassed as a Christian school for girls in Japan. During the twenty years of its existence it has seen great changes, and it is destined to see others equally great for which it is well prepared. There was a time when foreign education for girls was much desired by the Japanese, and this, like all similar schools, was crowded with students. Then came the reaction, when it was thought by the people that the Western education unfitted the girls for the homes and lives for which they were destined. That reaction has not yet passed. The government schools make small provision for the education of girls above the primary grade. Under these circumstances one of the greatest benefits extended by foreign missions to women in Japan is through their schools for girls. There is evidence that this benefit is now being more fully appreciated, and that no better work for the future of Japan can be done than to persist in holding open these schools until the people shall see their disastrous error in neglecting the opportunity thus afforded. The minister of education has recently made a strong utterance in favor of female education, which is sure to have much effect on public opinion.

"'Very few of the pupils,' Miss Searle reports at the twentieth anniversary in November, 'enter the school from Christian families, or with any previous knowledge of Christian truth. Of the 1,329 graduates only nine were not members of the church at the time of their graduation.' At present there are about seventy pupils in the college. Its property is held by a secure title and it is under the management of the missionaries. The W. B. M. I. may justly take great pride in this institution which it has done so much to foster. We recommend that Kobe College under its present management be fully sustained."

POLICY AND CO-OPERATION.

The deputation recommends that the number of missionaries be not increased at present, but that the Board send annually to Japan men of established ability to speak in furtherance of missionary work, and that in this movement efforts be made to secure the co-operation of other societies. It is also recommended that a Review in the vernacular shall be published and other literature circulated, giving the best results of Christian scholarship.

The deputation advises that the mission should continue to co-operate with the Kumiai churches, laboring for and encouraging the formation of churches to become as soon as possible self-supporting and independent, and counseling with the Kumiai churches as to the best places for beginning new work.

The report gives high praise to the educational system established and carried on by the government, in which, while there is no formal religious teaching in the schools, Christian teachers exercise much influence. The development of this system is most remarkable, and, in view of it, it does not seem wise that missionaries should employ their energies in teaching, but rather in evangelistic work. Except in the maintenance of schools for girls and in direct preparation of young men for the gospel ministry, the necessity for mission schools seems to be rapidly decreasing.

The deputation commends most heartily the ability, consecration and faith of our missionaries. It speaks with equal cordiality of the work of the Kumiai churches. The work begun by the American Board and now connected with these churches is by far the strongest of any mission work in Japan. Very grave difficulties, which it is hardly possible for Americans fully to comprehend, have to be met by our Japanese brethren, young in years as Christians, with no Christian ancestry or traditions or training in childhood to support the Christian faith which they hold. But the deputation expresses its confidence that the church in Japan is founded on the living Christ, and that these churches will maintain their belief in the evangelical doctrines of Christianity. Strong reasons for hope and for confidence in the final outcome are given. We conclude our summary with these encouraging words of the deputation: "The extraordinary and abnormal movement of multitudes toward Christianity a few years ago has given place to a slow and healthy growth. The churches are not so well attended as formerly, but those who do attend are more faithful and are developing stronger faith and doing better work. This is the unanimous testimony of the most conservative of the Kumiai pastors and of the missionaries. If our recommendations, and other similar plans, are adopted, we believe that the new spiritual revival, now so evidently begun in Japan, will be greatly advanced, and that the Board and the churches will soon recognize that the results of their efforts in that country have fully justified all the expenditure of money, labor and consecrated lives."

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Feb. 9–15. Christ's Warnings. Matt. 7: 21–27.

This is one of the subjects which should send us to the gospels to find out, in addition to the passage referred to, what other utterances of Jesus are in the nature of warnings. Such a method of study will bring to light the fact that the most severe of Christ's warnings are directed to the professedly religious. He had kind words for the publicans and harlots, for those whom we should call the riff-raff of society; but for the Pharisees, who were outwardly pious but inwardly selfish and proud and mean, and even for those of his disciples who apparently thought his religion meant simply using his name in a magical sort of a way, Jesus had nothing but scorn and contempt. This does not mean that he did not hate the sins which made men and women outcasts, but that he felt that the crowning sin of all was to counterfeit the religious life.

This subject therefore should cause deep heart-searching. Jesus' warning is the outcome of his great desire that each of us should have a genuine and ever-deepening religious life. The corner stone of that edifice called character which he wishes us to rear must be sincerity. "If ye love me keep my commandments," is the injunction, and at the close of more than eighteen hundred years of Christian history it is ringing more imperatively than ever in our ears. Christ wishes the testimony of our lips, but he wishes far more the witness of our lives. Every time we claim a degree of religious experience into which we really have not entered, every time we fail to match what we have said in prayer meeting by corresponding conduct in the schoolroom, on the playground, and behind the counter and in the home, we are imperiling our own religious life. The outward form of it may continue for years, may, indeed, become more finely adorned and apparently larger, but by and by the crash will come and the hollowness of all this pretense will be exposed.

But not only our personal religious interests are at stake, but the very life of Christianity itself is in danger when profession outruns practice. That is another reason why this warning of our Master's is all the more solemn and awful. He looked down the ages and saw that his cause would receive a setback every time the outward show of Christianity did not signify an inner spirit and power. It is bad enough when a single soul loses its direct touch with God and the respect of honest men by failing to walk righteously day by day according to the precepts which he professes to obey, but it is still worse to have the honor of Christianity itself smirched by the exhibition of hypocrisy that can never fail to involve to a certain extent the whole body of believers and the glorious cause they represent. Christianity can stand almost any assault of its open foes, and it sometimes thrives all the more in the face of such opposition, but a hypocrite in the fold does far more harm than a battalion of thieves and robbers outside.

The proper question, then, for each of us is, "Lord, is it I?" Let us search for the beam in our own eyes, let us cast out the demon of unreality and hypocrisy that may lurk in our own hearts.

PASSING COMMENT.

The young people of a Michigan church seem to be fully up to the times as far as seeking out and supplying the literary demands of the community are concerned. They realize that much can be accomplished of real value outside the ordinary work of young people's societies.

Pastors, especially at the beginning of a year, must feel the need of special help. In some cities of late many of them have met daily together in private for prayer and conference. Doubtless the results of such gatherings have already been manifest, if not they must surely come.

Apropos of the free pew article which follows, the sane advice of a pastor in whose church the system is working admirably is worth heeding: "Do not move in the matter of free seats till the conviction on the part of laymen is sufficiently decided to support the financial interests vigorously. Do not hope that any plan will exactly meet the tastes and needs of all. Organization always calls for mutual yielding and forbearance. But if any church has conviction, charity and cash, it may feel secure to go ahead."

A VETERAN RE-ENLISTED IN CHICAGO.

The Millard Avenue Church accounts itself fortunate in securing Dr. W. A. Waterman to fill its pulpit. The church is already sufficiently strong to be attractive to an earnest, aggressive minister. In buildings and field it furnishes abundant opportunity for large and rapid growth. Its membership is 221, with 250 scholars in its home Sunday school and a large attendance in its branch mission school. Its benevolence, somewhat less last year than usual owing to a change of pastors, was a little more than $600. Last August Dr. Waterman was the unanimous choice of the church and congregation as the next pastor, and his term has opened auspiciously. The congregations crowd the house, the fine Sunday school rooms are always full and the prayer meetings are large and enthusiastic.

Dr. Waterman has had a varied experience and still has all the freshness of a young man united to the wisdom of years of honorable service. He was born in Blandford, Mass., graduated at the Westfield Normal School, studied at Amherst College while superintending public schools in Palmer, whence as a private he went to the war during its second year. As color bearer, and later as captain, he had many a thrilling experience.

Through the influence of President Bartlett, then professor, he entered Chicago Seminary, graduating in 1867 and beginning his ministerial work with a mission church in Cameron. After a service of eight years in this Southern town he labored in Marion, Io., ten years. As secretary of the Iowa Reserves at Grinnell he did his part in aiding to rebuild the college after the destructive cyclone of 1882, and he was prominent in securing the passage of the prohibition law in Iowa. In 1886 he became pastor of the First Church, Kalamazoo, Mich. During this pastorate, as in the former two, he assisted in the building of a house of worship and in the organization of new churches in the outlying districts.

He resigned his pastorate in 1891 in order to travel extensively in Europe and to attend, as a delegate of the National Council, the International Council in London, and, as delegate of the Peace Society, the World's Congress at Rome. After his return to this country in 1892 he became pastor of the church at Geneseo, Ill., where he remained till called to the church he is now serving. Dr. Waterman was one of the vice-presidents of the C. H. M. S. for six years and for a long time a director of the theological seminary. He is also a corporate member of the American Board, a trustee of the Illinois H. M. S. and vice-president of the Ministerial Union of Chicago.

The council for the installation met Jan. 21 with Dr. E. F. Williams as moderator. Dr. Waterman made a statement covering his religious experience and the providences which led him, a soldier in the army, into the ministry. He read an able and carefully prepared paper on his doctrinal views, which was so satisfactory that no questions were asked. He may be reckoned among the liberal conservatives, having no sympathy with the higher criticism. Although almost accepting the doctrine of predestination, he affirms the absolute responsibility of man and his just condemnation for his own choices. In Christianity he has the fullest confidence in God's method for saving sinners and in Christ as a divine being. He believes that a gospel which has done so much for the world and for so many in all possible circumstances is absolutely true, and he is determined to preach it as a gospel which he has himself fully tested.

The evening services were exceedingly interesting. The sermon, by Dr. F. A. Noble, was a strong and eloquent presentation of the truth that needed light comes directly from God and from him alone, through the use of divinely appointed means. The ordaining prayer was offered by Rev. J. C. Armstrong, the right hand was given by Pres. F. W. Fisk, Dr. Waterman's old teacher in the seminary, the charge to the pastor by Dr. James Tomkins, and to the people by Rev. J. A. Adams, a former pastor. The women gave the members of the coucil an elegant collation in their commodious Sunday school rooms.

A SUCCESSFUL ADOPTION OF FREE PEWS.

In The Congregationalist of May 9, 1895, there was an article entitled, An Unsuccessful Experiment in Free Pews—a practical contribution to a practical problem. The believer in free pews, disappointed, perhaps, in the outcome of that experiment may hope that this church will "yet repent and do the first works." But a fair test found the system of free pews wanting for the church at Gardner, Mass. To preserve a balance in the discussion, I give the experience of the First Church, La Crosse, Wis.

Prior to 1892 this leading church in a city of over 25,000 population had rented its pews for more than thirty years, and owing to its good standing and constituency the system worked well in many ways. There were disappointments, it is true, at the annual rentals, due either to pride or poverty. But the pew rentals gave a fairly adequate income and produced as little friction as could be expected of any system. Gradually a conviction was felt that the system was ill adapted to the conditions, was not in harmony with the spirit of the times, and did not set church finances upon the right basis.

An entering wedge for free seats was started with a change in the evening service. Aided by an organization of men, called The Pastor's Auxiliary, the church inaugurated special services, which have since been widely extended in other places, East and West, through Sunday evening clubs and leagues. Free seats were an essential of the idea. This change was instituted some ten months before the annual meeting of the society, so that the question came before the meeting as a practical issue. As first presented it seemed mainly a question of finance. The trustees did not oppose a new plan provided expenses could be met. A committee was appointed, contributions were made sufficient to meet the year's demands and in the final vote it was decided to try free seats for twelve months. The vote was far from unanimous. In fact, had purses ruled principles the vote would not have been carried.

The change was quite unsatisfactory to the stated worshipers. The breaking up of an order that had obtained for a generation was not pleasant. Most of those who were active in introducing the innovation would have returned to the old order during the first year. As in the church at Gardner, some said: "I have no church; I do not feel at home." And many hoped that the first year of free pews would be the last.

To the surprise of all, when the matter was broached at the annual meeting of 1893, the vote was more favorable for free seats than the year before. The same financial committee did their work and the new order prevailed again. Not all enjoyed it, but the friction and feeling of homelessness decreased. If families were at church on time the old pews could almost always be occupied, and regular attendants began to realize that a sense of pew ownership was not, after all, an integral part of worship; and others admitted that though the rented pew was their preference nevertheless had they been among the strangers or the poor of the congregation free seats would be their choice. The spirit of putting one's self in the place of another prevailed more fully, and on the whole the second year was more agreeable than the first.

The year was a hard one in financial circles. Additional expenses came with the year's work and left a deficiency of $500. Despite this fact free seats had grown in favor, so that the next annual vote was unanimous for their continuance. Now came a test of voluntary giving to meet an emergency. The finance committee was enlarged to include fifteen business and professional men, and they brought a subscription to the final meeting which met the yearly budget of expenses, provided for the debt and added $200 to the pastor's salary.

Thus far, then, free seats and voluntary gifts have not been found lacking with this church. The new custom has not materially affected the morning attendance at worship, and the increase in the evening congregation is due to other causes as well as to free seats. It has produced no revolution in the city and not all are converts to the system yet. But persons whom we ought to reach feel more and more at home, and I believe there is not one who does not like to see "Free Seats and a Cordial Welcome to All" upon the printed announcements in place of "Pews to Rent."

To my own mind the following conclusions are warranted:

1. While the reliable church attendant enjoys a regular seat, while one family should sit together in the same pew, while the pastor prefers to see the same faces in the same places as often as possible, yet this remains true: We get by giving, we find a higher life by losing what is lower, and in many cities a condition exists which calls for some sacrifice of the personal comforts and prestige of pew life, if we would add a higher life to the community. Hence the individual who suffers, the family which allows and the church which adopts free seats upon this principle makes no mistake. The sacrifice of a lost "cricket, Bible, hymn-book, fan, note-book and pencil" will be rewarded in some saved life or ennobled character, if they are given up for Christ's sake and the gospel.

2. Free seats prevent financial distinctions in worship. Those who favor the rental system may desire not to advertise or offend one of these financial little ones, but despite the desire they do it. In his Social Aspects of Christianity Professor Ely says truly: "By our system of rented pews—for we have gone so far as to introduce notions of private property in the house of God—we do not simply occasionally violate the command given by James, but we bring it about that the rich habitually have the best seats." And this cannot be otherwise so long as a money value is put upon them.

3. Money subscribed directly to spreading the gospel places giving upon a higher basis than that for paying pew rent. To be real, giving must be voluntary. To make it morally valuable the individual must decide for himself how much he will give. The rental system does not foster giving at all. It is not an appeal to duty, privilege or generosity. It fosters a commercial spirit and asks a certain sum for a distinct personal privilege. Hence the tendency encourages a desire to secure the best pew possible for the least money. It trains toward self-seeking rather than toward public good and the welfare of God's kingdom. Voluntary contributions allow niggards to be niggardly, it is true. But they also allow the liberal to devise liberal things and put the responsibility for giving where it belongs—upon the individual. Our faith, therefore, is in free seats and offerings as the future system.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES.

Bangor.

Prof. D. S. Talcott, of the Greek and Hebrew department for the long term of forty-two years from 1839, died at his home in Bangor, Jan. 19, aged eighty-three. The professors and resident trustees attended the funeral and four of the faculty acted as bearers.——Rev. E. H. Byington, D. D., Newton, Mass., gave two lectures, Jan. 23, 24, on The Pilgrims and Puritans in New England, and The Social and Family Life of the Puritans.——The seventy-seventh annual catalogue, just issued, records forty-nine students, viz., one graduate, eighteen Seniors, fifteen Middlers and fifteen Juniors. A professorship has been added in English Biblical exegesis under Prof. G. W. Gilmore. He has written and recently published a book on the Johannean problem.——A new feature is the gymnasium class drill four times a week.

Andover.

Rev. W. E. Wolcott is to preach the sermon on the Day of Prayer for Colleges.——Last Wednesday evening the Society of Inquiry held a meeting to consider home missions. Interesting papers were presented by Messrs. Rollins, Merrill, Mattson, Olmstead and Ward.——Under the scholarships in pastoral theology several men from the Junior Class are sent out each Saturday to engage in religious work, resuming their attendance at the seminary the following Monday. This year the institution is represented in Boston by Messrs. Axtell and Crockett at Berkeley Temple and Mr. Partridge at the Shawmut Church, and Mr. Dunbar at the Y. M. C. A. in Lawrence and Mr. Wright at the Concord Reformatory.

Hartford.

The annual register, or catalogue, has just been issued and is substantially the same as in previous years, with an additional topical classification of all the courses arranged under twelve heads.——Pending his recovery from a slight accident, Professor Mead is meeting the Senior Class in his rooms at the Allyn House.——Tuesday evening of last week the smaller chorus of the Hartford School of Music, known as the Anderson Club, gave an enjoyable musicale in the chapel, with a large attendance.——At the rhetoricals, last Wednesday afternoon, Messrs. Bishop and Tuthill of the Middle Class and Mr. Capen of the Junior Class discussed The Country, the Village and the City as Fields for Religious Work.——At the students' missionary meeting, last Friday evening, Mr. A. H. Haigazian a graduate student at the seminary, gave an interesting sketch of the history of his native country, Armenia, and read extracts from a touching farewell letter recently received from a friend in Armenia, who was at the time of writing expecting that any day would witness his death at the hands of the Turks.——At a largely attended meeting of the Students' Association, Jan. 21, strong resolutions were unanimously adopted, expressing sympathy with the suffering Armenians, and urging instant action by Christian nations.

The ninth annual meeting of the Central District of the Inter-Seminary Missionary Alliance will meet here this year. The sessions will begin the afternoon of Feb. 27 and close the evening of March 1. The seminaries included are those in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, District of Columbia and Connecticut, about forty in number, representing all denominations.

Yale.

A large number of volumes have recently been added to the library of foreign missions. It is one of the two largest of its kind in the world, and contains about 5,000 volumes. Its growth is due to the management and efforts of Prof. G. E. Day.——Professor Brastow recently delivered an interesting and inspiring lecture on Henry Ward Beecher before his classes in homiletics. Papers on Beecher's personal and preaching characteristics have been read before the Middle Class by Messrs. Briggs, Knapp, Beard and Sarles.——On Wednesday of last week Mr. E. J. Converse of the Senior Class delivered a strong address on The Minister and Municipal Reform ——The question debated by the Leonard Bacon Club last Wednesday was, Resolved, That President Cleveland's Action in the Venezuelan Matter Was Unwise. The affirmative was supported by Messrs. Pinney and Short, the negative by Messrs. Blomfield and Macfarland.——Mr. W. M. Short of the Senior Class is supplying the pulpit of Hope Chapel in Bridgeport, and Mr. C. W. Collier is pastor of the church in East Hampton.

Chicago.

Last Monday night the Junior Class gave a musicale in the seminary parlors, consisting of piano and violin solos, quartets and readings ——Thursday afternoon Rev. Washington Gladden, D.D., gave an admirable address on Has the Work of the Christian Ministry Been Superseded? In the evening a stereopticon lecture was given on the life of Christ.——The trustees of Beloit College, at their semi-annual meeting, conferred the degree of D. D. on Professor Mackenzie. He is giving an elective twice a week on Kant's Critique of Pure Reason.——Prof. E. T. Harper has an elective twice a week in Aramaic language and literature, besides two electives of one hour each on comparative religion and normal lessons in the historical study of the Old Testament.

CONFERENCES AND ASSOCIATIONS.

ME.—Cumberland Conference was spirited and profitable and was held at Westbrook Jan. 22. The topics were: The Relation of Home Influence and the Place of the Sunday School in Soul Winning, How Shall the Ordinary Church Services Help to Reach Men, Evangelists in Church Work, How to Gain Permanent Results from Special Services. Rev. D. P. Hatch, the recently elected secretary of the Maine Missionary Society, spoke of the Spiritual Possibilities of the Work. Rev. C. E. McKinley preached.

CLUBS.

MASS.—The Worcester Club held its annual meeting Jan. 20. A balance of $615 was reported in the treasury. Nine members have died during the year. The subject was: The Present Condition and Future Outlook of the Church. Mr. L. C. Muzzy gave a paper on the effect of the church on the great business world, W. H. Bartlett on the influence of the church on the formation of public opinion in the political world, and L. P. Goddard on the power of the church through the press

The annual meeting of the Boston Club last Monday evening was devoted largely to business, the reports of the various officers showing that the organization is in a prosperous condition. Hon. A. H. Wellman was elected president, succeeding Dr. Boynton, who made a happy farewell speech. During the evening an appreciative paper on the late Dr. N. G. Clark was read by his colleague, Dr. E. E. Strong.

MICH.—The Western Michigan Club held its annual meeting Jan. 20. The topic was, How Can We Make the Club More Useful to Its Members. An amendment, including women in the membership, was unanimously passed. Rev. C. H. Tainter gave his illustrated lecture, The Men of the Mayflower, to a delighted congregation. H. J. Hollister, Esq., was elected president.

NEW ENGLAND.

Massachusetts.

BOSTON.—Walnut Avenue. The annual fellowship meeting was large and enthusiastic, the reports being a surprising account of the varied and extensive efforts put forth. The membership is now 366. The weekly offering system has been a marked success the past year. Dr. A. H. Plumb is pastor. ——Eliot. Notwithstanding the continued heavy losses from death and removals, the annual report of the church shows decided gains in membership and benevolent contributions. Of the nearly $4,000 given in benevolence, $1,492 were for foreign missions, a gain of $375 over the previous year. A flourishing Junior C. E. Society has been added to the fourteen other organizations doing effective work. Rev. Drs. A. C. Thompson and B. F. Hamilton are the pastors.——Union. The esteem in which Rev. F. H. Page, Dr. Boynton's faithful assistant for two years, is held found expression at a largely attended farewell reception to him last week. He was presented with a substantial token of his friends' affection.

Nine and seventy are the years of the City Missionary Society, whose anniversary was celebrated at the Second Church, Dorchester, last Sunday, the speakers being the pastors of the local churches and Pres. R. H. Stearns Rev. D. W. Waldron brought his customary accurate and gratifying report of the year's activities. The nineteen missionaries have made 58,985 visits to 24,311 families, have distributed 613 Bibles and Testaments and 106,730 papers and tracts. They have gathered into Sunday schools 827 children and secured employment for 610 persons.

Rev. Eli W. Beers addressed the Ministers' Meeting last Monday morning on the question, What Should Be the Attitude of the Ministry Toward Mental and Spiritual Healing? He took the ground that all disease or suffering is the result, primarily, of sin, and quoted the Scriptures that "to be carnally minded is death, while to be spiritually minded is life." He referred in detail to the experiments of Prof. Elmer Gates as showing that certain mental conditions produce certain inevitable effects upon the secretions and excretions of the body, changing them to actual poisons. He gave numerous examples of the effect of mental troubles upon bodily health, and said that the ministry should try with all their might to change the mental conditions of their people so as to bring them into harmony with God's plans and therefore into a state of health.

CAMBRIDGE.—Hope. The annual reports show prosperity. Since organization five years ago the church has doubled its membership. Of the small indebtedness all but an insignificant amount is provided for.

DORCHESTER.—Neponset reports a prosperous year. The membership of the Sunday school has greatly increased and the C. E. Society, including the Juniors, numbers ninety-one. The benevolences amount to $492, as against $347 in 1894. The home expenditures have also increased in two years by $325. A missionary reading club has been formed on the Chautauqua basis. Rev. E. C. Webster is pastor.

HYDE PARK.—The Overlook, which begins the new year as a monthly representative of the church, bears a fine likeness of the pastor, Dr. A. W. Archibald, besides a salutation from him to his flock of 701 members, and many items of interest. Last year's figures show home expenses of $7,800 and benevolences of $4,512. The new members received last year number fifty-seven, thirty-one on confession.

MEDFORD.—Mystic. At the annual meeting over 250 persons were present and, including letters, 299 responses were given. Thirty-nine additions have been received. All departments are in an encouraging condition, the benevolences being the largest, with one exception, for the past fifteen years. A church debt of $1,800 has been canceled and the outlook for the coming year is promising. Thirteen persons united with the church Jan. 5. Since then several business men and many others have taken a decided stand for Christ and a quiet, earnest spirit pervades the whole church. Rev. John Barstow is pastor.

LOWELL.—High Street. The semi-centennial of the church was celebrated Jan. 22, with exercises all the afternoon and evening. There were a historical address and reminiscences from former pastors and members, and letters from absent friends. After the formal exercises over 400 members and guests enjoyed a bounteous supper and listened to a number of addresses, congratulatory and reminiscent. The pastor, Rev. C. W. Huntington, had preached an historical sermon on the Sunday previous. The church was weak and burdened at its start and it was stated that at one time a vote to disband was defeated by a majority of but one vote. Now, however, the church, while not the largest in numbers in the city, is doubtless the most prosperous and is among the largest contributors to missionary enterprises. Its present great prosperity is largely due to the vigor and devotion of Dr. Owen Street, who became pastor in 1857, at the time of extreme depression, and continued in office until his death in 1887. His successor has maintained his standard of scholarship and consecration and the now flourishing church anticipates many years of large service.——First. Another step in the controversy in which this church of 900 members is involved was taken last Thursday evening, when by a vote of thirty-one to twenty-six the society instructed its treasurer to execute a lease of the entire church property to twelve individuals, members of the society. The lease is for three years at one dollar per year. The lessees assume all the debts of the society and agree to allow the pew holders to exercise all their rights, to maintain worship, permitting the church to use the property as heretofore but retaining in their hands all right of other control. The lease, which had been previously prepared, was at once signed. It is said that this action will be at once tested in the courts.

TAUNTON.—Trinitarian. The reports at the annual meeting show that satisfactory work has been done in the various departments. Eighteen new members were added last year, the financial condition is excellent and the benevolent contributions have been well kept up. Rev. S. V. Cole is pastor. ——Union. This church, under the efficient pastoral care of Rev. E. H. Chandler, has been growing in strength and influence. The free pew system, which was inaugurated two years ago as an experiment, has proved sufficiently successful to warrant its continuance.——Winslow. The annual supper was attended by about 200 persons and the reports were listened to with great interest. The fund for the new building is gradually increasing. Rev. S. H. Emery, D. D., who has twice been pastor of the church, was elected pastor emeritus. Rev. T. C. Welles is pastor.

FALL RIVER.—Union services have been held by the Congregational churches of the city at various meeting houses, closing with the Lord's Supper.——First. On the 9th inst. the Congregational churches observed a union communion service with this church on its eightieth anniversary. It began with five members and it has received into membership 998 persons in all. There are now five Congregational churches in the city, of which the total membership is over 1,000.——A large congregation last week heard Dr. M. D. Kneeland, secretary of the New England Sabbath Protective League. Nearly all the Protestant churches of the city were represented.

WORCESTER.—Pilgrim. The attendance at the midweek prayer meeting has greatly increased since the new pastor came. A council has been called for Feb. 6 to install Rev. Alexander Lewis. ——Central has advanced its pew rents twenty per cent. The woman's association held its meeting Jan. 21, at which a history of the organization was given, its needs presented and an appeal made for funds to carry on its missionary work.——Union. Rev. F. F. Emerson gave a carefully gathered history of the Red Cross movement and work of Clara Barton at the Sunday morning service Jan. 19. The literary club gave a largely attended entertainment Jan. 21; subject, The Life and Compositions of Mendelssohn.——Piedmont. The church is enjoying a period of marked prosperity. On a recent Sunday Dr. Elijah Horr asked for contributions to extinguish a floating debt of $6,500 and $6,700 was quickly subscribed. The annual parish meeting, Jan. 23, showed a balance of over $500 in the treasury. An illustrated lecture on Rome and Naples was recently given under the auspices of the Business Men's Union. ——Immanuel. The C. E. Society has purchased a large number of books of the Moody colportage library to distribute among the families of its parish.——Several of the larger churches have made decided reductions in the appropriations for music for the year.——Dr. A. E. P. Perkins read a paper before the Ministers' Meeting, Jan. 20, on The Old Testament, Its Homiletic Place and Uses in Modern Preaching.

OXFORD.—There was a large attendance at the annual supper and roll-call. The reports were encouraging for all departments. Evangelistic services in November resulted in the conversion of twenty persons. The contributions to benevolent objects last year amounted to $827, which is a gain of $142 over 1894. Rev. A. E. Bradstreet is pastor.

WEST BOYLSTON.—The church will long remember Jan. 23 as a successful reunion. The church is today in a prosperous condition and will celebrate its centennial next August.

BROOKFIELD.—The number of additions during the past year were twelve and there were two added Jan. 5. The present membership is 132. The net gain is seven. The Week of Prayer was observed by union services with the Methodists. The evening services are under the auspices of the Y. P. S. C. E. The present pastor is Rev. E. B. Blanchard.

SPENCER.—First. The revival services, conducted by Rev. H. J. White for the past two weeks, closed last Sunday with good results. The several evangelical churches of the town united, and not only have the hearts of Christians been quickened but quite a number of conversions are reported. The C. E. Society has just taken one share in the General Howard Roll of Honor.

NORTHAMPTON.—Edwards. The report of last year shows forty-five additions to membership, twenty-one on confession. The roll now includes 421 names, and besides this 165 Smith College young women are associated with the church in what is known as the Covenant of Christian Living. The benevolences aggregated $3,118 and the home expenses were $5,646. Under the direction of Rev. Paul Van Dyke, and his assistant, Rev. R. H. Life, the church is fulfilling a wider mission year by year.

PITTSFIELD.—The whole amount of church offerings last year was $4,044, and of benevolences $6,602. The additions were thirty-seven, nineteen on confession. All departments report growth and earnest labor. The Sunday evening committee is a new feature which has succeeded well.

CHESTERFIELD.—Of the ninety members in all, forty-six responded to the annual roll-call. Seven were added last year.

WILLIAMSBURG.—Last year the benevolences were $750. Two shares were taken in the General Howard Roll. The present membership is 212, including the nineteen additions of last year.

GREENFIELD.—Second. The surrounding churches near this town were well represented at the home missionary field day, Jan. 23. Secretaries Coit and Wiard conducted the exercises. Their addresses were full of interest.

NORTH ADAMS.—The annual meeting held recently brought some good suggestions for another year. The reports of last year are encouraging, showing that a good amount had been given for benevolences and that all departments are flourishing.

Maine.

PORTLAND.—West. The church has had a year of marked prosperity financially and spiritually. It has increased its income several hundred dollars and for the first time in its history assumes self-support. Twenty-seven additions were reported at its recent annual meeting. The leadership of Rev. L. S. Bean is strong and spirited.——Fourth has advanced $200 nearer to self-support. The wise management of Rev. William De Claybrook is uniting the colored people of the city as they have not been united for years.——St. Lawrence Street has appointed a special committee to prosecute the plan of building a new edifice. Six men in the congregation have promised $500 each, and the public will co-operate generously.——The churches of various denominations united Jan. 26 in four union meetings in behalf of persecuted Armenia. Rev. E. P. Allen, whose father is missionary at Harpoot and who is familiar with the situation by eighteen years' residence there, headed the movement. He lectures frequently on the subject.

ANDOVER.—This town, with a population of 800, has a church membership of eighty-one under the pastoral care of Rev. F. V. Norcross. No deaths have occurred the past year and prosperity has been present throughout. The Y. P. S. C. E. in its fifth year has an attendance of from sixty to one hundred. Beside the usual midweek prayer meeting there is an afternoon meeting, which is earnest and of great benefit to the older people who cannot attend in the evening. The Cummings Brothers held a series of meetings here last fall which were helpful.

BIDDEFORD.—Second. Marked prosperity has come to the church. Fourteen members have been added the past year, and benevolences were larger than for many years, besides a legacy of $500 recently paid to the Maine Missionary Society. The church has been incorporated, congregations are steadily growing, the Sunday school is one of the largest in the city and a scheme for a parish house has been started. The young people are being reached and are working along many lines. Rev. T. A. Frey is pastor.

BANGOR.—The A. M. A. has received a legacy of $858 from the estate of the late Rev. Joseph Smith, the widow having died since his decease.

AUBURN.—Sixth Street. A new feature of the Sunday school is a five-minute talk before the lesson.

A new mission in a hall at Mountainville, near Deer Isle, has been opened and the hall will soon be dedicated.——The work at Sawyer's Island, carried on by Rev. Donald McCormick, shows good results.——Rev. S. D. Towne and Mr. Goodwin are holding union meetings in South Paris which are well supported.——South Church, Hallowell, expects to receive, as a gift from the late Miss Helen A. Lord of Chicago, a legacy of $500.——The debt of $750 of the church in Foxcroft and Dover, it is reported, is entirely provided for.

New Hampshire.

HOLLIS.—According to the annual report, just published, nine persons were received to the church the past year, seven on confession, making a total membership of 188. Home expenses were $1,453, and benevolent contributions, not including missionary boxes, $382. Contributions are taken every fourth Sunday and all the denominational societies are remembered.

MANCHESTER.—Franklin Street. At the annual meeting of the church 500 persons sat down to the supper. The past year forty two members were added, thirty-eight on confession. Following the home missionary rally, Jan. 19, nearly $1,000 were raised by this church and $520 by the First Church.

WINCHESTER.—During his pastorate of nearly eight years the pastor, Rev. H. A. Hosford, has seen the resignation of every other pastor in the Cheshire Conference. He is now giving a series of Sunday evening lectures on Home Life to good congregations.

GOFFSTOWN.—So much interest was manifest during the Week of Prayer the meetings have been continued, the pastor having assistance from brother pastors. An after meeting has followed the evening service, and several persons have expressed a purpose to begin a new life.

CORNISH.—After a pastorate of twenty-two years Rev. J. T. Jackson has resigned, and will close labor March 15. He has been a successful pastor, greatly endearing himself to his people and to the town. He has been ready for every good work and will be greatly missed. He does not purpose to take another pastorate, but will locate at Merrimack.

EXETER.—First. The membership is now 182, including fifty-nine non-residents. The benevolences for 1895 were $3,115, divided among the regular societies, of which $1,365 were given to foreign missions and $1,106 to home missions.

CENTER HARBOR.—Special meetings have continued since the Week of Prayer and resulted in an increase of interest in the line of distinctive work to promote spirituality. New efforts are being made to increase the membership of the Sunday school, and a home department has been started.

ATKINSON.—Mrs. Abby Page, one of the aged members of the church, has recently given $1,000 to increase the chapel building fund. It is hoped enough will soon be in hand to warrant a forward movement in this direction.

ALTON.—Under the lead of the pastor, Rev. J. C. Emerson, a house to house canvass has been made of the two villages, showing only seventy-eight church members in a population of 580, representing three denominations.

DERRY.—During the past year seven persons have united with the church on confession. On account of frequent confusion with the other church in town, from similarity of names, the name of this church is to be changed.

CLAREMONT.—The church edifice is at present closed for repairs, and the congregation is worshiping with the Baptists.

The church in Lancaster has received a legacy of $3,000 from the estate of Mrs. Jacob Benton.

Vermont.

CHARLOTTE.—The interior of the church edifice has been completely renovated at an expense of about $1,500, of which all but about $150 has been raised during the past year. Beautiful memorial windows have replaced the former windows, the ceiling and walls have been frescoed and the woodwork painted, modern oak seats have been put in and the floor has been newly carpeted, the effect of the improvements being entirely pleasing. At Christmas the people remembered their pastor, Rev. Hervey Gulick, with a generous gift. At the recent communion eight persons joined the church on confession and one by letter.

WILLISTON.—Deacon William Miller, who recently died, was one of the youngest of seventeen children, and was a deacon in the church for more than half a century. He sang in the choir till he was eighty-five years old. He died at the age of eighty-nine.

CABOT.—The reunion and roll-call brought out about ninety members. The total membership is 109. The benevolences were $167 last year, and the expenses $793.

The services led by Evangelist Whittier in Richford resulted in about seventy conversions.——The year in Morrisville has been a prosperous period.——During a recent storm the old meeting house in Plymouth, built in 1816, was shattered to the ground.——The Randolph Center Church has closed a successful year with a balance in the treasury.

Connecticut.

HARTFORD.—First. At the annual meeting of the society last Friday night the year's expenditures were reported as over $11,000. An additional expense the coming year will be the church's proportion of the paving of Main Street in front of its property, costing from $900 to $1,500. The sum of $200 was voted the Sunday school and the treasurer was authorized to borrow any sum, not exceeding $3,000, necessary to carry on the work of the year. The records are still kept in the same book which has been in continuous service for 212 years, the first entry having been made April 24, 1684.——Fourth. The present membership is 851, a net gain during the year of sixty-five.——Park. About thirty members were present at the annual meeting of the society last week. The church has been without a pastor for about a year. The proposed union with the Pearl Street Church has failed to materialize.

NEW HAVEN.—Howard Avenue. During 1895 sixteen persons were admitted to membership on confession and seventeen by letter. The present membership is 462. The total expenditures were $4,489. Rev. W. J. Mutch has been pastor since his ordination ten years ago.——United. Dr. T. T. Munger preached his tenth anniversary sermon Jan. 19, reviewing the history of the church since its formation by a union of the North and Third Churches twelve years ago. The present membership is 616. The Sunday school has a membership of 464 and the Men's Club of 137. The benevolent contributions for 1895 were $6,816. There were forty-three additions. Last Sunday evening the Men's Club service was addressed by Dr. P. S. Moxom on Culture.

CHESTER.—The formal re-opening of the edifice took place last Thursday, the occasion being a sort of a jubilee on the part of the pastor, Rev. Alexander Hall, and his people. The house has been closed many weeks, during which extensive improvements have been made. The entire interior has been covered with metal ceiling, the whole being harmoniously decorated, a new floor has been laid on a different plane, and a new carpet has been laid. Easy pews of a circular form have been put in and a new church hymnal purchased. A large congregation was present at the service.

GREEN'S FARMS.—The church held a reunion of its congregation Jan. 23. Its roll includes 137 members, and eighty-two were present. Addresses were made by neighboring pastors. Over 150 persons sat down to the collation. The church is in a united, prosperous condition, and is planning to work among the Germans and other nationalities who have settled in the parish within a few years. Rev. R. J. Thompson is pastor.

WILLIMANTIC.—The annual reports show the work to be in a prosperous condition. Forty-seven new members were added last year, making the present membership 328, the largest in the history of the church. The Boys' Brigade has had to suspend its bi-monthly drills on account of non-support. All the other departments are in a flourishing condition. The church is at present without a pastor.

STONINGTON.—First. Two centuries of existence and more have passed in this church, as shown by its latest manual. In all it has had twelve pastors, Rev. J. O. Barrows serving at present. There are contained lists of former pastors, deacons, Sunday school superintendents and members, besides a cut of the meeting house. The cash contributions for the past year have amounted to $630. In addition fifteen barrels of clothing and other articles have been sent to missionaries and sufferers from famine in the West. The records show a steady increase for the past three years.

MYSTIC.—All the churches of the vicinity united in a fellowship meeting in the local church week before last. The sermon was preached by Rev. J. O. Barrows.

REDDING.—An enjoyable fellowship meeting was held Jan. 21. The general topic was Spiritual Life, and a missionary topic was also discussed. Rev. C. W. Francis preached the annual sermon.

ENFIELD STREET.—Mr. and Mrs. R. F. King have given the church a silver dining service. The young women of the church have also invested the remainder of the money they raised in silver for the dining-room.

NEW BRITAIN.—In the evangelistic meetings in which Rev. H. W. Pope is assisting, an unusual interest is manifest. Meetings were held all last week except Saturday, and on Sunday the South and First Churches united in a revival meeting. Much good is done, and the way is being prepared for the services which are to follow.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

NEW YORK.—Broadway Tabernacle. The annual reports from twelve departments show general prosperity. The present membership, after a thorough revision of the roll, is 833. There is a morning and an afternoon Sunday school, both growing. The benevolences of the church for the year have been $25,942, of which the Society for Women's Work raised $3,981, besides fifteen valuable trunks sent to home and foreign missionaries. The largest department is Bethany Mission. It costs about $5,000 a year, of which $1,000 is raised on the ground. A kindergarten was started during the year and is proving successful. The statistics of the mission are not included with those of the home church. Its Sunday school has a roll of about 1,300 and there is a great variety of services every week day. Many members of the home church are engaged in the activities at this branch.

ELMIRA.—Park. Commemorative of the fiftieth anniversary a neat, comprehensive report of the observance has been published in pamphlet form, including the details of the pleasant services. The organization was the off-shoot of a Presbyterian church and started with forty members. Interesting accounts are given of the "seedling church" and of its various societies, and reminiscences follow. There are also inserted two fine cuts of the former and present edifices.

MADISON.—Evangelist H. D. Sheldon has been with the church two weeks and as a result of a special effort eighty persons have given evidence of conversion. The whole community has been aroused. Mr. Sheldon gave up a growing business to enter upon evangelistic work and has had success in his new calling.

NEW HAVEN.—The church has suffered much by removals so that there are now only ninety-three members. Yet the benevolences during the past year amounted to $905. Rev. Samuel Johnson is pastor.

New Jersey.

EAST ORANGE.—Trinity. The offering at the Sunday evening service, which is conducted under the auspices of the Men's Club, has been given up. The women of the Helping Hand received many generous Christmas contributions for the poor and were enabled to provide thirty-two dinners. The Sunday school and sewing school are both doing well. Another special offering recently made was for the Memorial Hospital and amounted to over $200. A box of clothing has recently been filled for the benefit of the Armenians. The finances of the church are in excellent condition. Envelope offerings supplement the pew rents. The debt of $3,000 on the new edifice has been reduced by one-third, and a movement is now afoot with good prospects of success to clear it off altogether. The total beneficence for the past year was nearly $2,200.——Swedish. This church is in excellent spiritual condition, as has been shown in the special meetings since the first of the year, many hopeful conversions being reported. Nineteen persons joined the church on confession the past year. The debt on the new building is being steadily reduced by a system of monthly gifts for the purpose. The Young People's Society meets twice a week.

NUTLEY.—St. Paul's has had a prosperous year, notwithstanding its pastor, Rev. J. A. Fairley, has been much of the time and still is disabled by the failure of his sight. The pulpit is supplied by his brother, Prof. William Fairley of the Reformed Episcopal Seminary of Philadelphia. Twenty-five persons have united with the young church the past year and there have been no removals. The music is of unusual excellence. A lot has been selected for a house of worship, and the money is about ready to pay for it. It is hoped that the building may be begun in the spring. The Sunday school shows an encouraging increase, and a Young People's Society for Christian Service has been formed, which already has a membership of thirty.

HOBOKEN.—Norwegian. This missionary church has been weakened somewhat the past year by removals, its constituency being of a more or less floating nature. Its prospects now, however, are good, since more members than it has lost will be added at the next communion. Others will join later. Its Sunday school, now three years old, continues to grow, and numbers now over sixty, a remarkable growth in view of the fact that most of the Norwegians of the city are young people and unmarried.

MONTCLAIR.—Swedish. This church, quite recently a mission, is growing. The membership now is thirty, and the congregation about three times as large. Its temporary pastor has now been called to the permanent pastorate. A building fund, now amounting to about $1,200, has been formed.

DOVER.—Swedish. Thirty-one persons have joined this small church on confession the past year. The church is in a good condition spiritually, but the members are poor financially. Unhappily the pastor is about to leave them, having been called to Woodstock, Ct.

JERSEY CITY.—Tabernacle. Dr. J. L. Scudder contradicts the report that the property of the church is to be sold. He asserts that the church feels its responsibility in its present location, and has won its former success through its own efforts.

Swedish missions are to be found in Morristown, Elizabeth, Arlington and Plainfield. In the last named place a volunteer missionary continues to work amidst many financial difficulties.——Rev. A. P. Nelson, the Swedish superintendent, has large plans for extension.——W. S. Clark has become pastor of the church at Guttenberg.

Pennsylvania.

RIDGWAY.—First. The church members responded to the annual roll-call to the number of 120 out of 274. Twenty-eight new members were received during the year, nineteen on confession. The total number of new members during the present pastorate of four years is 110. The Christian Endeavorers, Junior and Senior, number 140. All bills for the year were met and over $775 given in benevolence. The congregation remembered the pastor and his wife generously at Christmas.

THE SOUTH.

Georgia.

ATLANTA.—First. Following the Week of Prayer meetings, which enlisted special interest, evangelistic services were held under the lead of the pastor, Rev. H. H. Proctor. Fifty conversions resulted. The church is deeply stirred. The Young Men's Sunday Evening League, recently organized, is meeting with eminent success. It has solved for this church the problem of the evening service. The pastor was presented with a Bible by Mr. Moody during his recent meetings here. It possesses a unique value, since it is one of the edition of 100 printed at Mr. Moody's special request.

SAVANNAH.—First has recently returned to its house of worship, which has been rebuilt at considerable cost. It has one of the most desirable locations in the city. The pastor, Rev. L. B. Maxwell, who has served the church for eight years, has resigned, to take special work under the International Sunday School Committee. He is to have charge of the work among the colored people in the South. But on account of pressure brought to bear from his church and other sources he has decided to return and resume the pastorate after six months. This decision causes general rejoicing among his colaborers in this section.

THE INTERIOR.

Ohio.

MEDINA.—The annual meeting was held Jan. 10, with business, social, supper, roll-call, with over 200 responses and addresses by members of the church. In the past year there were thirty-nine additions, thirty-two on confession, making the present membership 476. The benevolences were $1,475, a gain of $100. Total home expenses were $2,500. The Sunday school average attendance is 263. About $250 have been expended in fitting up the basement for the primary department. All branches of the work are prosperous and the people are united in their pastor, Rev. J. R. Nichols.

ROOTSTOWN.—The annual meeting was the best the church has held. There was a preparatory lecture, dinner and roll-call, responded to by 160 members and letters from others.

Illinois.

FALL CREEK.—This church, whose pastor, Rev. C. E. Conrad, felt constrained because of advancing years to give up his work, wisely called Rev. G. L. Brakemeyer. The completion of the new house of worship last fall furnished vantage ground for progress along other lines also. On New Year's Day the two remaining charter members with eighty-eight others, eighty-six on confession, entered into covenant with each other. It was a glad day for that community. A quiet revival has been going on for several weeks, and still greater results are expected. At a missionary rally in the fall $65 were contributed for missions, the sum being later swelled to $85.

GODFREY.—The annual meeting was an all day social at the parsonage with refreshments. There were forty persons present. The departments reported progress, notably the Sunday school, the Woman's Board and the Y. P. S. C. E. This is a small community, chiefly of farmers and fruit growers, and a suburb of Alton, on the edge of vigor and thrift. Rev. O. C. Dickerson is pastor.

MARSEILLES.—During the two years' pastorate of Rev. C. M. Sanders, there have been fifty-one additions, thirty-five on confession. Mr. Sanders hopes to be able to resume his work by February.

Indiana.

INDIANAPOLIS.—Fellowship. The annual reports showed $1,250 raised on the field, of which $400 were paid on the church debt. The church is five years old and has a roll of 125 members, twenty-nine of whom were received during the year. It is a neighborhood church and 200 families are being reached. The Sunday school has a membership of 225. Nine denominations, including Moravian, Dunkard and Lutheran people, are in the congregation, which is rapidly being assimilated into a harmonious whole under the popular and active pastorate of Rev. F. M. Whitlock.

CARDONIA.—Rev. Thomas Smith is assisting Rev. James Hayes in special meetings here. One hundred dollars have recently been raised among the miners for church improvements.

Michigan.

LANSING.—Plymouth. The Guild is the latest organization in the church. It is composed of young women, with young men as honorary members, and its objects are social, literary and missionary development. The Guild began its career by compiling and publishing, in most attractive holiday form, a little book of quotations appropriate for Christmas and New Year, entitled Christmas Thoughts. A thousand copies were sold in three weeks, clearing over $250, and a second edition of the book is ordered for sale during the year. Fifty members were received last year.

GRAND RAPIDS.—Barker Memorial Chapel on the west side was dedicated recently. It cost $1,351 and is paid for without the help of the C. C. B. S. The lots were given by the late G. M. Barker, after whom the chapel is named. A church will soon be organized.

The meeting house of the Dorr church has been moved to Moline, much to its advantage.——Rev. Wilfred Lindsay at Saugatuck is supported by a united and prosperous church, which celebrated its thirty-fifth anniversary Jan. 12.——The Alpine and Walker church with a branch at Grange Hall has suffered from proselyting tendencies, but has maintained all departments of its work under the leadership of Rev. J. T. Walker.——Bass River, yoked with Allendale under the pastorate of Rev. W. P. Wilcox, has found that there are disadvantages in organizing a church with too many heterogeneous elements brought together in revival and is patiently working over its material.——Clarksville, also organized in a revival, is learning lessons of patience and is yoked with South Boston under the lead of Rev. D. S. Arnold.——Middleville and Irving are prosperous, the latter never more so, under the pastorate of Rev. Harry Appleton, who is completing his first year with these churches.——The Dano-Norwegian church, organized in February, has found its field too narrow and has ended its brief but not fruitless life.

Wisconsin.

APPLETON.—First. Rev. John Faville has just preached his tenth anniversary sermon. In entering upon his eleventh year this pastorate becomes the longest in the history of the church. A representative of the C. H. M. S. organized this church forty-five years ago. Four years it worshiped where ever it could, and began a church building in 1854. It received aid from the C. H. M. S. eight years, when it became self-supporting, and since then it has returned to that society ten dollars for every one received. In coming here Mr. Faville found a church of 358 members and current expenses of about $2,400 a year. Now the church has 555 members, the parish includes 560 families, the Sunday school has 945 members and the current expenses are $6,000. The valuation of church property has increased from about $12,000 to over $50,000. The development of the auxiliary societies has been commensurate with the progress of the church proper. During the ten years the church has received 441 members, of whom eighty-six were by letter. No communion season has passed without additions.

MILWAUKEE.—Grand Avenue. Last Sunday the church welcomed back its pastor, Dr. G. B. Ide, who has been sick in the East since the National Council. He has the sympathy of many friends in this long season of rest. Meanwhile his pulpit has been supplied acceptably by Rev. H. T. Sell, lately of Auburn Park near Chicago, Ill.

MADISON.—The past year was prosperous and closed with a total of 723, benevolences for that period of $3,746 and home expenses of $7,056.

The Sunday evening club recently formed in Waupun promises well.——The club in Platteville has succeeded in filling the house at the evening services.——In Baraboo a new house was dedicated last year, which is well filled at the services.

THE WEST.

Missouri.

CAMERON.—The Congregational and Presbyterian churches united in calling R. L. Layfield, the Kansas City evangelist, to assist them in special meetings beginning Jan. 13. After a week all the churches united in the services. The attendance is steadily increasing.

Iowa.

GRINNELL.—Dr. G. F. Magoun's many friends will be pained to learn of his serious illness and great suffering. The interest taken and the sympathy expressed by his friends are touching. It is another proof of the power of a self-sacrificing and consistent Christian life devoted to the welfare of others. He has lost none of his interest in public affairs or in the prosperity of the church.

MANSON AND CENTER.—The work is progressing under the charge of Rev. George Marsh. During the four months of his pastorate fifteen members have been received at Manson and six at the Center. The latter people are planning to build a house of worship in the spring. A site has been given and funds are now being raised. The Week of Prayer has been followed at Manson by a series of special meetings with encouraging results.

PRAIRIE CITY.—Rev. J. J. Mitchell has been following up the Week of Prayer with a series of special meetings in which he has been aided by Rev. A. C. Rosenberger of Mitchellville. The church is active and the outlook encouraging. During 1895 $950 were raised, of which $47 were for benevolences. The Ladies' Aid and the Young Ladies' Societies have rendered much assistance.

CEDAR RAPIDS.—First. The net gain the past year has been the largest in its history. During the past four years 142 persons have been welcomed to fellowship, the benevolence increased from $1.50 to $3.50 per member, many new methods introduced, $1,500 has been paid on indebtedness and a second church organized out of a mission. Rev. G. R. Dickinson is pastor.

TRAER.—The church has not been so awakened in years as it is now through a series of special meetings. In a single week twenty-four persons professed conversion, and Jan. 19 twenty members were received into the church. As many more are ready to join. Rev. O. O. Smith is pastor.

MITCHELL.—Thirty conversions are reported as a result of the union meetings conducted by Evangelist Packard. He is now at Muscatine assisting Rev. G. M. D. Slocum in special work.

McINTIRE.—Special services are in progress conducted by the Congregational and Methodist pastors. At the first meeting, led by Rev. L. M. Pierce, there were three conversions.

There were 125 cards signed at the revival meetings recently held in Garner in care of Mr. W. A. Sunday.——Revival meetings are in progress in Iowa Falls, Rev. T. M. Price, the pastor, being his own evangelist.——During the two and one-half years of Rev. F. E. Carter's ministry at Clear Lake there have been seventy accessions to the membership.——At Charles City Evangelist Williams has been conducting a series of special services.

Minnesota.

MINNEAPOLIS.—Fremont Avenue. As the result of evangelistic services there have been a number of conversions, with nine additions to the membership. A small indebtedness has been cleared.——First. Evangelist Thompson is assisting in revival meetings, one or two other churches uniting, and there is increasing interest.——Fifth Avenue. During the pastorate of Rev. E. C. Whiting the church has prospered and an addition to the building has been erected, the Sunday school crowding the seating capacity.——Forest Heights. During the one year pastorate of Rev. J. P. Dickerman, which terminates Feb. 1, a house of worship has been built costing, with lots, $3,000, and it has been entirely paid for excepting a loan from the C. C. B. S.

ST. PAUL.—The St. Paul Congregational Union held its anniversary Jan. 21. There was a report from Rev. J. B. Drew and addresses by Rev. Messrs. J. H. Morley and H. A. Risser. There are now thirteen Congregational churches in St. Paul, the last two accessions being organized out of branches of the People's Church.——Olivet has made much progress during the year, having received substantial additions and enjoyed a revival. It sustains a hopeful mission.——Atlantic has organized a men's club which fills the house Sunday evenings.

BROWNTON AND STEWART.—These two churches, united under Rev. J. W. Danford, have asked him to remain another year, have decreased the aid from the C. H. M. S. and presented the pastor with valuable gifts. In spite of many discouragements both churches have made substantial progress.

GRANITE FALLS.—Owing to a changing population, foreigners taking the place of the natives, the church has been weakened. Mr. J. H. Hjetland is at present assisting Rev. J. W. Todd at Montevideo and both work as occasion arises at Granite Falls, with the hope of securing a resident pastor.

WINTHROP.—Revival services are being held with some conversions. The town is largely foreign and has three out-stations, where services are also being held. Many of the people come from more formal churches and are receiving new conceptions of spiritual life.

The Lamberton church, although pastorless, sustains services and expects a pastor soon.——The new parsonage at Ellsworth, which is completely paid for, excepting a loan from the C. C. B. S., greatly strengthens this triple field.——At Crookston revival meetings, Evangelist C. N. Hunt assisting in union services, have developed considerable interest, resulting in several conversions.

Andrew G. Nelson, general missionary among the Swedes, whose field covers northeastern Minnesota and northern Wisconsin, during the year ending Oct. 1, 1895, preached 315 sermons at thirty-three different points in nine counties. His regular work necessitates much traveling and includes house-to-house visitation as well as the holding of from one to four public services daily, often at points several miles apart. One night last month he slept with only his sheep-skin lap robe for a bed and his fur coat for a covering, waking refreshed and happy.

Kansas.

LAWRENCE.—Pilgrim. Twenty-two persons were welcomed to fellowship Jan. 19, making forty within two weeks. In some cases whole families united, causing deep rejoicing.

Nebraska.

HOLDREGE.—This church, Rev. V. F. Clark, pastor, is entering hopefully upon the new year. At the beginning of the year all debts were practically paid except what is due to the C. C. B. S. The Y. P. S. C. E. is fitting up the church parlors. Mr. Clark preached Jan. 17 to a large congregation at a point in the country where revival work has lately resulted in a number of conversions and where the organization of a church is in prospect. He also has an interesting class in Puritan history. The women's society of the church devote half their meetings to the study of missionary subjects and have prepared a unique program for the current year.

WALLACE.—Although in the western part of the State and having suffered from removals, this church finds its congregations well sustained and its departments of work going forward successfully. It has always had a strong hold upon the country population in the region and this work is well sustained by the present pastor, Rev. C. G. Murphy. One of the most hopeful features is a Junior C. E. Society, the members of which are faithful in attendance and earnest in the Christian life. Mr. Murphy is assisting Rev. G. W. Knapp of Grant in special meetings.

CURTIS.—Rev. C. W. Preston is to enter at once upon special work at one of his out-stations where there is a growing interest. He has been assisted by Rev. G. W. Knapp of Grant in special services at the home church. When Mr. Preston's appointments keep him in the country over Sunday evening the home church is always glad to hear his wife preach.

WYMORE.—Rev. W. S. Hills finds his work constantly increasing in extent and interest. Five persons united with the church, Jan. 12, making fourteen in all since Mr. Hills came to the field in October. The Sunday school has increased to a membership of ninety, an active Y. P. S. C. E. was lately organized, and a Martha Washington Society is making itself useful in social and financial matters. Evening congregations sometimes reach 300.

OMAHA.—Park Vale. Rev. A. H. Byles assisted Mr. W. H. LeBar in the communion service, Jan. 19, when eight were received into membership on confession, the first fruits of special meetings which had been held two weeks previously. The Sunday school is increasing in numbers to such an extent that need is felt of a larger building.

A 1½ STAND.

We have many calls for a Hall Stand which is best described as a "one-and-a-half Stand." In other words, not a single width nor a double width, but a compromise exactly between the two.

This compromise size provides a seat which is just sufficient for two persons to sit together. The hooks are so far apart that the garments do not obscure the mirror, as in a narrow pattern. And yet this size will go in almost every place where a single-width Hall Stand is required.

A Hall Stand should be well built. Using only the best seasoned Oak, with mortised joints and accurate dimensions, we produce a piece of furniture that stands rigidly and securely on the floor, and is practically indestructible.

Do not fail to get our prices before buying elsewhere.

The General Theological Library, at its new building, 53 Mt. Vernon Street, Boston. Founded for the benefit of clergymen, theological students, Sunday school teachers, authors, and readers of a Christian literature of all denominations. It contains 17,000 volumes and 100 periodicals in the reading-room. Its books have circulated in more than 500 towns and villages in 12 different States of our country. It is supported by donations, bequests and fees from life and annual members, who have the full use of the library, and by the perpetual membership of churches, whose pastors have the use of the library, including the drawing of books, forever gratis. Donations and fees should be sent to Rev. Luther Farnham, secretary, at the library.

The American Sunday School Union has been at work seventy-one years for the retired rural districts. Its union methods specially commend it to communities of sparse populations divided in religious sentiments. Its missionaries visit families, distribute religious literature, hold evangelistic meetings and organize Sunday Schools. Probably no evangelizing agency has larger results for the amount expended. 11,000,000 children are yet out of Sunday School. Will you help to save them? Send to Rev. Addison P. Foster, D. Farnam.—Under the leadership of Rev. E. E. Sprague this church has been energetically pushing its work in two or three country districts, with eminent success. The pastor has been earnestly supported in this work by an active Y. P. S. C. E., and Supt. J. D. Stewart is giving two weeks to Sunday school institutes at these points.

Bertrand.—This church united with the Methodists in evangelistic services, in which a number of persons expressed hope in Christ, five having already united with the church. The pastor, Rev. F. D. Healey, will teach for a short time in the high school in connection with his pastorate.

Albion.—This church is making an earnest effort to educate its young people along the lines of Congregational history and effort.

Evangelist Billings is assisting Rev. Samuel Williams of Riverton in special services, which promise good results.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

San Francisco.—First. The pastor, Rev. Dr. C. O. Brown, is prosecuting in the courts, for blackmail, a woman who has served a term in prison in Massachusetts. At his request a committee was appointed by the Bay Association, Jan. 13, to consider the charges made against his good name.——Third. The pastor conducts a large Bible class at the close of the morning service. A Men's League has been organized with a good membership.——Plymouth. The Ladies' Foreign Missionary Society celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary Jan. 17.

San Mateo.—Since the arrival of Rev. F. V' Jones evening congregations have so increased that more pews are needed. The meeting house has been renovated at an expense of $250.

Oakland.—Plymouth Ave. Special and pleasant services were recently held in connection with promotions from the infant class to the main school.

At a recent communion service at Santa Cruz of the five persons uniting on confession two were Japanese and two Chinese.

Washington.

Spokane.—Westminster. Reports at the annual meeting inspired gratitude to God for past blessings and hope for the future. The Ladies' Missionary Society has taken on new life. A systematic course of study has been outlined and once a month carefully prepared papers are read. Rev. F. P. Cherington is pastor.——Second. The annual meeting was full of enthusiasm. Every department was found in excellent condition and the future seems full of promise. The Sunday school enrollment has reached 229. This department contributed $30 for benevolences during the year. The Ladies' Aid Society has proved itself invaluable and the Junior C. E. Society has added $15 to the church treasury.——Pilgrim. This church has always worshiped in rented buildings heretofore, but now rejoices in the prospect of a house of its own, to be completed early in February. Preparations are being made for a library in connection with it. Papers, magazines and books will be gratefully received if sent to the pastor, Rev. Jonathan Edwards. The Senior C. E. Society has assumed the cost of the front window and the Juniors will provide the lamps.

Pleasant Prairie.—This church is now worshiping in a schoolhouse which is too small to hold the congregations. It will be compelled to build in the near future.

The edifice at Clayton, Rev. J. J. Hancock, pastor, was opened Jan. 12, Rev. Messrs. Jonathan Edwards and T. W. Walters officiating.——The Juniors have purchased a new stove for the church in Hillyard.

Sarsaparilla Sense.

Any sarsaparilla is sarsaparilla. True. So any tea is tea. So any flour is flour. But grades differ. You want the best. It's so with sarsaparilla. There are grades. You want the best. If you understood sarsaparilla as well as you do tea and flour it would be easy to determine. But you don't. How should you? When you are going to buy a commodity whose value you don't know, you pick out an old established house to trade with, and trust their experience and reputation. Do so when buying sarsaparilla.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla has been on the market 50 years. Your grandfather used Ayer's. It is a reputable medicine. There are many Sarsaparillas—but only one Ayer's. It cures.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

Taking everything into consideration, the mercantile situation wears a brighter aspect than one week ago. Monetary rates are a trifle easier, which is a happy factor in itself. Hitherto, banks and trust companies have confined themselves to merely accommodating their regular customers and have not done much in the way of buying business paper. Latterly, however, they have showed more disposition to handle it.

As we draw near to the day of the sale of the new Government bonds, Feb. 5, financial circles are feeling more confident that the issue will be an entire success. Nor do the majority of financiers expect to see any severe contraction of the currency, because the Treasury Department has provided a plan for the payment of the bonds in installments.

Furthermore, it is expected that the issue will be two or three times over-subscribed, so that, as only $100,000,000 of bonds are to be sold, it is probable, if not certain, that all this money now withheld for subscription purposes will seek employment in loans in the open market. This ought to be reassuring to business men, as undoubtedly many of the recent large mercantile failures were caused by tight money. Financial institutions here have been large lenders of money on warehouse receipts, showing that business houses were carrying large stocks for which there was no market.

However, the whole aspect of the situation is brighter. Wheat has advanced steadily and it is said that iron was secretly advanced last week, the announcement not being made up to the time of this writing. Exports of general merchandise are increasing and imports decreasing, which is another favorable factor.

Cotton goods are slow of sale, which is causing the mills to store their product. Prices for these goods, however, are considerably above what they were a year ago. Wool continues firm, but there is only a light business with the mills. The demand for woolen goods has improved of late. In leather the trade is very dull. The Leather Trust's tanneries remain closed for the most part.

In the stock market there is a decidedly better feeling and prices scored a good advance last week. After the bond issue is settled it is felt that that event will be the signal for a general advance in security values.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING.

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, JAN. 24.

The meeting opened with singing "All hail the power of Jesus' name," and prayer led by the president, Mrs. Judson Smith. The unity of spirit which prevails in all truly Christian work, with its variety of method and manifestation, was illustrated in the person of the leader, Mrs. Fessenden, president of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., who defined the purpose of such work as "the uplift of humanity." The topic which she selected was "the ministry of pain," reading the story of Paul's sufferings from 2 Cor. 11: 23-33, and the description of the glad victory of the "great multitude which no man could number," spoken of in Rev. 7: 9-17. She condemned the too general impression which leads many to ask, "What have I done that God should punish me so?" reminding such that our suffering Christ was also a sinless Christ, and in what she said concerning pain as punishment, or rather as warning, as tending to promote purity, and as vicarious, suggesting many interesting seed thoughts.

Sympathy was expressed for Mrs. Joseph Cook in her present anxiety as to Mr. Cook's health, and for Clara Barton as she goes on her way to Constantinople to carry relief to the suffering, of whatever name or creed. Mrs. J. L. Hill spoke of the power of the word "nevertheless," and the implied conclusion which follows it after many a painful reflection.

Mrs. Smith introduced Mrs. J. F. Clarke, better known as Miss Beach, who went to Bulgaria in 1869 and after three years returned, but whose love for the work there has not waned during the interval, and who spoke of her pleasure in going back to the same people, although she could not refrain from a minor strain since the announcement of the "cut" in the appropriation of money for the mission.

It was a pleasant surprise to see the sunny face of Mrs. S. W. Howland of Ceylon, who is spending a year in the country, but is not often in Boston. The little tremble in her voice as she began to speak was due to that same dreadful "cut" of which Mrs. Clarke had spoken, and which is carrying discouragement to the little company of workers in Jaffna. She had been reminded of McCheyne, who once wondered if "the Lord wanted McCheyne as much as he had thought he did," and said, "Perhaps the Lord does not want the Howlands as much as we thought he did." "This means dismissing ten native helpers, and you cannot know what that means." She reported a recent Y. M. C. A. convention in the island, and a list of 140 names of young men who had promised to give a half-hour each morning to Scripture study and prayer; six young men from Jaffna College have united with the church, and thirty girls from the Uduville boarding school. She recommended the leaflet Expectation Corner and the Open Door. Truly there are plenty of open doors, but, alas, there seems to be a great lack of expectation corners.

Do you make doughnuts this way?

Sift 1 quart flour, 1 saltspoonful salt, 1 saltspoonful ground nutmeg or cinnamon, 2 rounding teaspoonfuls baking powder, together. Beat 2 eggs; add 1 cup sugar, 1 cup milk, 2 teaspoonfuls melted Cottolene. Stir these into the flour, roll and cut into shape. Have kettle ¾ full of Cottolene—at just the right heat—and fry the doughnuts in it for 3 minutes.

For frying, Cottolene must be hot, but don't let it get hot enough to smoke or it will burn. To find if it is hot enough, throw into it a single drop of water. When at just the right heat, the water will pop.

Genuine has trade marks—"Cottolene" and steer's head in cotton-plant wreath—on every tin.

TEMPERANCE.

—— Governor Evans of South Carolina will issue soon a special message treating of the State dispensary law and its results.

—— The senate committee on territories had the collector of revenue at Sitka before it recently, arguing in favor of granting licenses for the sale of liquor in Alaska. At present such sale is illegal, but liquor is sold.

—— The Nation of Jan. 16 publishes a letter from Brunswick, which sets forth in a temperate fashion the condition of affairs in the State of Maine after forty-five years of prohibition. Whether or not it deals justly with the facts it is not for us to say, but the temper of the communication is so unusual as to make us incline to believe in its conclusions.

—— Superintendent Skinner, of the New York State department of instruction, has prepared and had introduced in the legislature of that State a bill repealing the law of 1894, which compelled the public schools to give instruction on the nature and effects of alcoholic drinks and narcotics. A man holding such a position is supposed to execute law, not frame it.

—— Mr. Gallivan of Boston has introduced a bill in the Massachusetts legislature giving the control of the liquor licenses in Boston to a board of excise commissioners, two to be appointed by the governor and two to be named by the mayor of the city. This law aims at severing the present relations between the Board of Police Commissioners and the saloon keepers, and if passed will once more give partisanship free rein in administering Boston's excise affairs.

—— Senator Peffer of Kansas and Representative Denny of Mississippi have introduced bills in Congress which, if treated as they deserve to be, will be passed. They aim to make it impossible for the nation to set up traffic in liquor in territory that has been won to prohibition. As it is now the internal revenue laws and federal officials are the chief foes of temperance in not a few sections of the country.

—— The officials of the New Hampshire Law and Order League declare their willingness to meet the Boston Herald or its witnesses, hear all the testimony it can produce, and purge the league of all officers found guilty of the offenses which the Herald has insinuated it has proof of. They say that if the Herald is in the work in the interest of justice or decency it will not refuse to comply with the request, but if it declines to comply the league will interpret its action as proof that it is "the paid organ of the liquor interest." The Herald has printed the reply of the league to its charges, but refuses to act as prosecutor in an investigation.

—— The Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society, at its annual meeting last week, reelected its former officers. The secretary stated that the society has, through its agents, visited 171,327 families during the last year, has had personal interviews with 288,963 individuals and distributed 3,991,048 pages of literature. The society's legislative committee intend to approach the legislators with bills favoring the following schemes:

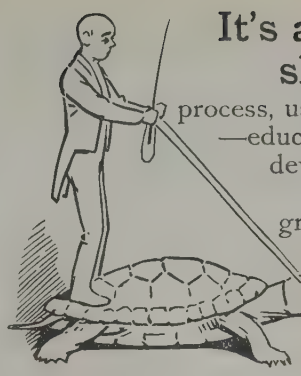
All license fees should go to the State treasury, and the place of delivery of liquor should be construed as the place of sale. The saloon should not be allowed any nearer a church edifice or a private school than to a public school, and it should be less easy for justices and judges to let convicted liquor sellers off with simply a fine. A residential ward or section of a city should have power to prohibit the granting of liquor licenses within its own borders.

—— The South Classis of Bergen dropped Rev. Julius Fiecke from its rolls recently. Mr. Fiecke is the Reformed clergyman who opened a saloon in Hoboken because of the inadequacy of his salary as pastor. Part of his testimony is interesting for its naïveté and peculiar point of view:

I knew it was illegal, but over in Hoboken the Sunday-closing law is not enforced. If I had been told by a single policeman to close up, I would not have sold a drop of beer, but not a single policeman has bothered me. I admit it may not be just a nice thing for an ordained minister to conduct a saloon, but there is nothing contemptible or scandalous about the business. While God gives people beer to drink, surely there must be some one to dispense the drinks. I am prepared to cheerfully take up the ministry again if I could find a church that would give me a salary large enough to enable me to support my family, but you can't pay rent and educate five children on $700 a year.

—— A Populist congressman from Alabama recently made assertions respecting the debauchery of congressmen, which assertions Rev. B. Fay Mills recently repeated in an evangelist address delivered in New Haven. Rev. S. K. Perkins of West Springfield wrote to Congressman Morse to know if the charges were true. He replies:

The paragraph you send me is an unmitigated falsehood and a foul slander. I was present at the time referred to, and know what I am talking about. The author of that should hang his head in shame. It is part of the populist plan of campaign. I showed the paragraph to ex-Speaker Crisp and Speaker Reed, and they will both subscribe to my statement above. You can make any use of this letter you deem proper. The members of Congress for virtue, good character and sobriety will compare favorably with the same number of men in any place on the face of God's green earth. I have been here almost seven years, and I have never seen in that time but one intoxicated member in Congress, or two at most, who showed the effects of drink.



It's a slow process, usually —education, development, growth.

But it hasn't been so with Pearline. Pearline's success has been a wonder, from the start. The more so when you consider the many imitations which claim to make washing easy. These things tend to confuse people. They're forced on the public by peddlers, prizes, substitution, etc. 'No doubt they're often thought to be the same as Pearline.' We protest. Don't judge Pearline by the company it has to keep. 471

A Well-Known Senator Tells A Remarkable Story.

No Possible Doubt As to Its Absolute Truth,

From the High Standing of the Senator.

Higher the Position, More Interesting the Facts.

Readers Eager for Just Such Details.

Senator Frank Plumley of Northfield, Vt., is a man of national reputation. No man today stands more prominently before the people of the State of Vermont than he.

A lawyer by profession, he was elected to the House of Representatives in 1882, is Trustee of Schools, Trustee of Northfield Bank and Trustee of Norwich University (a Military School under patronage of the U. S. Government), has been Trustee of the Montpelier Seminary, Chairman of the Republican State Convention, 1886, Delegate at large to the Republican National Convention in 1888, was United States Attorney for Vermont, 1889 to 1894, and is now State Senator.

Senator Plumley is well known throughout the United States, having been selected by the National Republican Committee as speaker to stump the State of Michigan for Blaine in 1884, and again in 1888 and 1892 he spoke through the West for the Republican presidential candidate.

When he came out of the presidential campaign in '92, owing to overwork he was almost a complete nervous wreck.

Senator Plumley says:

"In the fall of 1892 I came out of the presidential campaign with my nervous system almost broken.

"Rest and ordinary remedies did not assist me. Some of my personal friends advised me to take a course of Dr. Greene's medicines, which I did with entire success.

"I use Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy for that exhaustion caused by long continued mental work, and think well of it."

We understand that Senator Plumley's cure is radical and complete, and, while we congratulate the popular Senator on his recovery, we cannot but add that this is a distinct triumph for that marvelous medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, which, owing to the high standing of Senator Plumley and the fact that he is so widely known, will give Dr. Greene's Nervura a great boom.

The remedy deserves it, for it is in truth a most wonderful curer of disease, a restorative and invigorator which stands at the present day without a rival in making people well; a remedy which is always sure to cure, to give health and strength, to make whoever uses it strong and vigorous.

This most valuable remedy is not a patent medicine and should not be classed as such, for it is the discovery and prescription of one of our leading specialists in nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. The doctor gives an added value to his great remedy by allowing all who desire to consult him without charge, either in person or through the mail.

BENJAMIN JONES BOUTWELL.

Dec. 25, 1840; Jan. 1, 1896.

"A brother beloved, a faithful minister and fellow-servant in the Lord."

Of a family of twelve children his going hence was the first breaking of the circle of children for thirty-two years, and of the entire members ten still remain.

The call to him to rest from his labors came with little warning on Jan. 1. A few days of weakness and then of unconciousness, from which he awoke to be "forever with the Lord."

Amen, so let it be.
Life from the dead is in that word,
'Tis immortality.

But the call brings a flood of tender memories to a large circle of those with whom he had been a co-worker.

Making profession of his faith at sixteen years of age, he had for nearly forty years borne testimony to the power of early conversion, united with an intense purpose to serve in every circumstance of life the Christ who had redeemed him.

His early desire for an education was cut short by enlistment in the thirteenth New Hampshire Regiment in 1861 with two of his brothers. His army life was brief, however, illness compelling his discharge after a few months of service.

He then entered his business career in Boston, where he at once united with Mt Vernon Church, then under the pasteral care of Rev. E. N. Kirk, D. D., whose influence shaped materially the young man's future, and here he began the active service for Christ now being perfected in the presence of his Lord.

One of that noble band of young men, who in various ways carried on the mission work of the North End of Boston, in the sixties, his choice was in the neighborhood prayer meetings, that brought light and joy into the dark corners of that locality and to many hearts otherwise neglected. The experience proved to be the training school for his life of usefulness.

Removing to Worcester, Mass., in 1868, he at once became a tower of strength to many to whom his counsel and prayers remain a blessed memory. Connecting himself with Plymouth Church, then in its infancy, he was superintendent of its Sunday school, and later did faithful work as a teacher.

For twelve years or more, as leader and helper at various outposts in Sunday schools and gospel services, under the direction of the Y. M. C. A., he was honored and beloved. As a man of prayer his public petitions showed his intimate acquaintance with his Master, and to those who were privileged to bow with him in his chamber or office, "when the busy day was done," a memory of holy time lingers too sacred to be given utterance.

Returning to his native town and to the old homestead in 1882, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Knight of Milford, N. H., adding to his hitherto useful life a help indeed "meet for him," but not long to share his joys and labors, for after eight years she was not "for God took her," leaving a daughter and two sons.

It was in Lyndeboro that he found a place and need for the energy and consecrated zeal his city life had developed. The altar fires of the old church needed the reviving that such a life can furnish. Depleted as so many of our churches in the hill towns are, he was in no small degree their leader and guide, shrinking from nothing that would advance the kingdom.

The death of his wife led to his removal to Medford, Mass., where he has spent the last five years of his life. And now the tenderness of his strong heart found its place for sacred service. The motherless children and their training for God were to him a holy task, and faithfully did he fulfill it. His quiet tastes made home with its double care his sweetest joy and his tender nurture of the little ones a benediction. Blessed indeed is the memory of this "just man who feared God," and by a quiet, yet strong and earnest, life was ever a help and blessing to the church in city or country where he worshiped and an inspiring listener to every pastor under whom he served. He answered ever the higher call of God to "do with his might" that which should hasten the "day of the Lord." May we, too, "be remembered by what we have done."

A. E. G.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

HON. PHILO PARSONS.

The city of Detroit loses one of its most prominent citizens in the death of Mr. Parsons, which occurred suddenly at Winchendon, Mass., Jan. 22, at the age of seventy-nine, lacking a few days. He was born in Scipio, N. Y., but for more than half a century had lived in Detroit, and was a leader in developing its material and educational interests. He secured by cable for the University of Michigan the famous Rau Library from Heidelberg, and gave between $60,000 and $100,000 to Olivet. Although he refused nominations for mayor and governor, he was active in State and municipal affairs and was influential in bringing the Wabash Railroad to Detroit. He also founded the First National Bank in that city. His private charities were boundless, and many a man in humble life will mourn his death. He has been a corporate member of the American Board since 1871. He leaves two sons and five daughters, four of whom are married. His two brothers are Charles Parsons, president of the State Bank, St. Louis, and Gen. Lewis B. Parsons of Flora, Ill.

THE PROGRESS OF MEDICAL SCIENCE.

CONSUMPTION.

A scientific discussion of this dread disease, its cause, treatment and cure, by Dr. Robert Hunter, the father of inhalation and most eminent lung specialist of the day. After a period of research extending over half a century, Dr. Hunter explains his perfected discovery of a specific remedy for consumption, and proves its success not only scientifically but through the grateful testimonials of his patients, Dr. Hunter was for forty years the sole advocate of the germ theory of consumption, which is now accepted by the medical profession throughout the world as the only correct theory — thus establishing beyond doubt his superior knowledge of this disease. Readers of The Congregationalist can obtain Dr. Hunter's book explaining his treatment without charge, by addressing him at his residence, 117 West Forty-fifth Street, New York.

approve of Scott's Emulsion. For whom? For men and women who are weak, when they should be strong; for babies and children who are thin, when they should be fat; for all who get no nourishment from their food. Poor blood is starved blood. Consumption and Scrofula never come without this starvation. And nothing is better for starved blood than cod-liver oil. Scott's Emulsion is cod-liver oil with the fish-fat taste taken out.

COUGHS AND COLDS
ELY'S PINEOLA BALSAM is a sure Remedy for coughs, colds, sore throat and for asthma. It soothes, quickly abates the cough, and renders expectoration easy.

Consumptives will invariably derive benefit from its use. Many who suppose their cases to be consumption are only suffering from a chronic cold or deep seated cough, often aggravated by catarrh. For catarrh use Ely's Cream Balm.
Both remedies are pleasant to use. Cream Balm, 50 cts. per bottle; Pineola Balsam, 25 cts. Sold by Druggists.

ARMENIAN RELIEF WORK AT TREBIZOND.

THE above photograph represents Armenian Christians assembled in front of the mission house on Saturday, Dec. 28, to get their weekly allowance. There are over 5,000 on the missionaries' poor list, each person being allowed one and one-half piasters—equal to six cents—per week. Dr. Parmelee stands uncovered near the window, at his right is Mr. Crawford of Brousa, who is there to aid in the relief work, in front is Miss Chambers and next her, with an open book, Miss Astina, an Armenian lady teacher who keeps the list of the city poor. In front are Dr. Parmelee's little children. The men on the ground are the head men of the different villages who receive supplies for their villages and bring back, the next week, the seal from each householder to show that he has received his portion. Nearly every one in this group is mourning the loss of a father, husband, son or some near relative. One of the missionaries writes: "We get a good many 'God bless you's,' and we pass on the blessings to the dear friends who are working and giving in America."

GORDON MISSIONARY TRAINING SCHOOL, Clarendon Street Baptist Church, Boston, opens Oct. 2. Evening classes Oct. 10.

THE GENERAL THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY, at its new building, 53 Mt. Vernon Street, Boston. Founded for the benefit of clergymen, theological students, Sunday school teachers, authors, and readers of a Christian literature of all denominations. It contains 17,000 volumes and 100 periodicals in the reading-room. Its books have circulated in more than 500 towns and villages in 12 different States of our country. It is supported by donations, bequests and fees from life and annual members, who have the full use of the library, and by the perpetual membership of churches, whose pastors have the use of the library, including the drawing of books, forever gratis. Donations and fees should be sent to Rev. Luther Farnham, secretary, at the library.

THE AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION has been at work seventy-one years for the retired rural districts. Its union methods specially commend it to communities of sparse populations divided in religious sentiments. Its missionaries visit families, distribute religious literature, hold evangelistic meetings and organize Sunday Schools. Probably no evangelizing agency has larger results for the amount expended. 11,000,000 children are yet out of Sunday School. Will you help to save them? Send to Rev. Addison P. Foster, D. D., New England Secretary, 1 Beacon St., Room 40, Boston.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the Society at New York.

The Congregationalist 12 Weeks for 25 Cents and "The Bonnie Brier Bush" FREE.

40,000 New Trial Subscribers

We celebrate this year our 80th anniversary — the special number of the paper commemorating the event being issued in March. Before that time we wish to secure 40,000 new names, so as to place The Congregationalist, and that particular number, in the hands of as many new readers. We therefore propose that each of our present subscribers shall secure for us one or more names for "12 Weeks' Trial Subscriptions," 25 cents accompanying each name. This payment will entitle the old subscriber to a copy of Ian Maclaren's "BESIDE THE BONNIE BRIER BUSH" for each new name sent, and The Congregationalist will be mailed for 12 weeks to the new subscribers.

The Paper for 12 Weeks & The Bonnie Brier Bush for 25 Cts.

For the purposes of our special offer we have purchased an edition of this remarkable classic by Ian Maclaren from the authorized publishers, Messrs. DODD, MEAD & CO. It is a reprint from new plates of the complete copyrighted edition, which is issued at $1.25; making a dainty volume, cabinet size, bound in cloth, with a unique cover design.

Why We Do This.

WE WISH to signalize the completion of our 80th year by introducing the paper to a multitude of new readers.

WE BELIEVE that our old subscribers will appreciate this unusual offer and will recognize in it an attempt on our part to show our appreciation of any effort they may now make in our behalf as well as their past interest in the paper.

WE ARE WILLING to send the paper for 12 weeks at a loss, believing that twelve such arguments presented weekly will convince the most skeptical.

Suggestions.

PASTORS may remember in this way the committees and active workers in their parish.
The Bonnie Brier Bush and The Congregationalist for 25 cents.

SUPERINTENDENTS may recognize their teachers by this most appropriate gift.
The Bonnie Brier Bush and The Congregationalist for 25 cents.

TEACHERS may give an acceptable present to their scholars at nominal cost.
The Bonnie Brier Bush and The Congregationalist for 25 cents.

Everybody can get THE BOOK OF THE YEAR and THE RELIGIOUS PAPER OF THE WORLD for themselves or their friends for . . . . . 25 Cts.

CONDITIONS—THESE ONLY:

☞ The "12 Weeks for 25 Cents" subscriptions must be for bona fide new names of persons able to subscribe for a religious paper on their own account. The new subscriber must be sent by present subscriber of the paper, but the former may in his turn send other new names.

☞ We deliver "The Bonnie Brier Bush" at our office free, or will send copies, postpaid, to any address for 5 cents additional.

☞ This offer is made for a limited time only and the publishers of the paper reserve the right to discontinue it with one week's notice. Send stamps, silver or bills at our risk. Packages of books will be sent by express, if desired, at the expense of the person ordering. We expect to fill all orders within two weeks of the date of their receipt.

IN order to test the actual feeling in the churches with regard to a consolidated missionary paper, a circular letter representing our six benevolent societies is now finding its way to the Congregational pastors of the country. It asks each to state on an inclosed postal for just how many subscriptions at ten cents a year he will hold himself responsible. Should the replies indicate a probable subscription of 100,000 persons this new venture in journalism, patterned in the main after the Presbyterian Assembly Herald, will, doubtless, soon make its appearance. Here, then, is a chance for the churches to secure what many have claimed is generally desired, a cheap, comprehensive, condensed monthly record of the missionary work of our denomination. We trust the replies will be prompt and favorable.

February is the month of the heroes, the birthday month of Washington and Lincoln. It may be well, therefore, to remind Americans that the great ends attained by both depended upon self-restraint and patience—qualities which are often left out of the account in our ideals of heroism. Washington, it has been said, had to fight Congress as well as the British, and often found himself as much hindered by the fault-finding and irresolution of the one as by the military activity of the other. If he had stopped to resent slights, or stooped to labor for his own personal advantage, or refused to work with men whom he disliked, his fame would never have run round the world. And Lincoln, though it must be confessed that he was a master of the arts which have made our civil service a danger and reproach, yet, by his power of self-restraint in trying times and his subordination of the temper and interest of the moment to well-studied plans of permanent attainment, made himself master of the war for the Union. If Washington had thrown up his command in disgust, if Lincoln had been swept away by the popular demand for war with England after the capture of Mason and Slidell, how different the story of the nation might have been. A petty man, jealous and self-seeking, caring more for today's popularity than for great ends of lasting statesmanship, would have made shipwreck of either opportunity. The lesson is plain, if they would only learn it, for the would-be statesmen and patriots of today.

That American missionaries should buy slaves would seem to be a positive contradiction of terms. Yet a recent report issued by the New York Colonization Society has a chapter entitled A Missionary Slave Trade. It was written by Prof. O. F. Cook, who has spent much time in investigations in West Africa. He asserts that children are purchased from their parents or others in order to form missionary schools. What becomes of them afterwards depends largely on the missionary who bought them, as no one else has any particular responsibility for them. This method is the easiest in opening a new mission. But Professor Cook says: "Those who have the steadfastness and patience to wait till they can become acquainted with the people and win their confidence have afterwards no difficulty in getting material to work upon." The only mission mentioned against which this charge of buying children is made is Bishop Taylor's, and we hope it can be shown that in his case it does not apply. It is by reprehensible methods of which this is an illustration, adopted by missionaries not responsible to any established organization, that in foreign lands and at home the great work of missions suffers disrepute.

MORE LIGHT FROM THE SCRIPTURES.

Edward Winslow reported the substance of a saying of John Robinson which has been quoted oftener than any or all his other utterances. "He was very confident the Lord had more truth and light yet to break forth out of his holy Word." Whether or not Robinson expected greater knowledge of God and of his relations with men, or only of the government of churches, may be an open question. But that more truth and light have broken forth and are still to break forth from the Bible concerning the whole range of Christian doctrine and duty is beyond question. It is this confidence that the Holy Scriptures are an exhaustless mine of divine truth in which each generation may dig deeper than its predecessors which keeps them in the supreme place in the library of Christian students.

A correspondent, having noticed in our columns a remark of this nature, asks us to mention specifically doctrines which have undergone change through greater light thrown on them by study of the Scriptures. It would be difficult to specify religious doctrines which have been unaffected by such light. This does not imply a change in the things themselves which we imperfectly comprehend. Astronomers and astronomies are continually changing, but the stars abide the same. Theologians and theologies change, but God and his Word and Christ and the essential features of human nature remain unchanged.

Christians once believed that God was so angry with nations to whom he had not revealed his will that he directed his chosen people to massacre men, women and children as Turks are now massacring Armenians. Such a belief does not now accord with the ideas of the justice and mercy of God which we have learned from the Scriptures. The fathers believed that Jesus Christ gave himself to the devil as a ransom for men whom the devil held captive. Light from the Scriptures has shown us that we have no warrant for believing that the devil has any power to compel such terms from God. Few persons, we think, could now be found who would accept all of excellent John Robinson's own expositions of the Scriptures in his defense of the doctrines propounded by the Synod of Dort, as, for example, his affirmation that Christ did not die for all men, but only for those predestined by God to be saved. Had he lived to this day we are confident that he would have seen new light break forth from the Scriptures. Some of our fathers believed that little children were hateful to God, objects of his wrath till they came to understand him and till he graciously changed their dispositions and character. Jonathan Edwards declared that they "are young vipers and infinitely more hateful than vipers." We now recoil from such a doctrine. Light from the Scriptures has shown us that the words of Christ are prompted by the affection of our Almighty Father, "Suffer the little children to come unto me: forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God." Our fathers believed that it was right to hold men, women and children in slavery. Jonathan Edwards vigorously defended the slave trade on the same ground that Moses required the fugitive heathen slave to be detained. Moses Stuart in 1850 defended the principle of American slavery from the Bible, affirming his competency to do so because he had been a diligent student of the Holy Scriptures for forty years. But light from the same Scriptures has shown us that, while they recognize and regulate slavery, they teach principles of human brotherhood which, when fully understood and accepted, abolish slavery. New light from the Bible on itself is constantly rewarding prayerful study. Christians once treated the Scriptures as though any portion of them was in itself, so far as it went, a perfect revelation of God. We have come to see in the books of the Bible a progressive teaching of the character and will of God. The earliest writers of these books had faint and dim conceptions of him. Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, but prophets spoke far less clearly of God than did his Son, and even the greatest of the apostles whom Christ had taught and commissioned to proclaim him said, "We know in part and we prophesy in part."

We have mentioned here only a few illustrations of doctrines held in the past, which plainly contrast with those now believed. But that the process of changing beliefs is continually going on is manifest in all Christian literature and in current theological discussions. Our knowledge of Christ contrasts with some views of him held by Christians even within the present century and it has been gloriously enriched and expanded in our own time. Hardly any one from John Robinson to the beginning of the present generation was enough interested in the life of Christ on earth to attempt to write his biography, yet the criticisms of men like Strauss and Renan have roused such study as has led the Christian Church of this century to greater knowledge of Jesus Christ than it ever had before.

We have spoken of change and growth in the knowledge of God's character and will which characterize the whole Christian church. But if any would prefer to confine their investigation to our own denomination, Dr. Walker's Creeds and Platforms of Congregationalism and a collection of church manuals covering only the present century will furnish abundant materials for study. We commend to those interested in this question the discussions at the London Council of 1891 on the present direction of theological thought in Congregational churches.

Whatever John Robinson's opinion may have been, the thought he expressed is the ground of our study of the Bible, the impulse to prayer, the hope which inspires our labors to bring all the followers of Christ into union with one another in him. It is the underlying motive of all Christian scholarship. Ancient records, the exploration of the earth's history in the earth itself, deeper knowledge of mankind, all scientific discoveries shed light on doctrines which express our knowledge of God and of our relations with him. His revelation in the Bible is being ever more clearly interpreted through his revelation in nature, in human conscience and experience. More truth and light are yet to break forth from his Word, correcting our mistakes and enlarging our knowledge of him. Still with the open Book before us we must say, "We know in part, and we prophesy in part; but when that which is perfect is come, that which is in part shall be done away."

COLOR-PHOBIA IN NEW ENGLAND.

Two weeks ago it was Hartford, Ct., that suffered disgrace because of color-phobia; last week it was Boston. At Hartford Hampton Institute graduates were refused entertainment at the hotels. Three of Boston's leading hotels refused to have as a guest Rev. Dr. B. W. Arnett, senior bishop of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, a venerable, cultured, Christian gentleman. The clerks informed those who were entertaining Bishop Arnett that rooms were to be had, but on learning that he was a colored man declared that the hotels were full.

Fortunately those who despise such contemptible evasion of statute law and such violation of the spirit of the gospel are not left without ways of expressing their detestation. They can give the victims of such caste prejudice proof indisputable that there are those in the North who are their Christian brethren and who recognize them as peers and not inferiors. This attitude can be exhibited in words such as those President Clark of the Y. P. S. C. E. uttered at the great rally in Mechanics Hall last week, and by such a greeting as was given Bishop Arnett when he stepped forward to deliver his address there. Rev. S. M. Crothers of the Unitarian church, Cambridge, when he read of the treatment which Bishop Arnett had suffered, refused to keep an engagement to speak on True American Citizenship at a Unitarian club dinner to be held in one of the offending hotels. The opinion of the Boston Ministers' Meeting is expressed in a resolution printed in another column.

In pleasant contrast with this lamentable incident in Boston is the decision of the highest authorities of Chicago's schools to persist in employing colored teachers if they are competent, notwithstanding the protests of parents of white pupils, who object to having their children taught by Negroes; and the farewell message of Governor Stone of Mississippi, in which he goes out of his way to tell his fellow-citizens that,

> Although Tougaloo University is not a State institution, I desire, in its behalf, to convey to you in this parting message a word of warm and sincere commendation. No school in the South is conducted upon higher principles, and its good effects are felt throughout the State. By way of recognition of its great merit, and for the high esteem in which the principal is held in the community, the board of visitors has been continued from term to term, and I recommend that a board be appointed by the governor for the next biennial term.

Such words bring a glow of pride to the officials and constituents of the A. M. A., and they reveal the drift of the best thought of the New South. But while this prejudice against the Negro remains so offensively prominent in our New England cities, we may well be guarded in our condemnation of the same prejudice in the Southern States, as though it were confined to that section.

PILGRIM FURNISHINGS.

Life and death move in strangely close companionship, as the black hollow succeeds the gleaming crest of the wave. Moses climbs the hight to see the land which he has labored toward for a whole long lifetime, only to hear the words of blessing and of judgment, "I have caused thee to see it with thine eyes, but thou shalt not go over thither." Simeon and Anna see the king, as the shepherds and the wise men saw him, and then pass out of sight. It was so of old. It is so today. Men call it fate or judgment, but in a wiser reading it is God's comment upon the value which we put upon the earth and the estimate which we make of our own personal importance. Moses for Egypt and the wilderness, Joshua for the conquest, a new leader for the new times that come—this is God's law.

This law of life and death, which men have turned into the proverbial saying that "death loves a shining mark," has had a fresh illustration recently in the death of the English artist, the new Lord Frederick Leighton. Here was a man who had made himself a splendid name. He was the accepted type of England's national art achievement, president of its Royal Academy, honored in society, just raised to the ranks of the nobility. On one page of the newspaper we read an account of him at the reception of the academy, congratulated by every one upon his new honors "until he must have been weary with handshaking," distinguished, courteous, "the ideal peer." Then follows a description of the house which he had made beautiful for himself, and meant to leave as a residence for his official successors; of his greeting to his friends, and their inspection of his treasures of accumulation and creation. We turn the page—to read that he is dead!

The lesson is common, but it can never become commonplace so long as death walks about the earth and treasures of our gathering remain while the soul flies. It is not the lesson of the worthlessness of the beauty and enjoyment of the earth, but of their subordination. They are but pilgrim furnishings. While we enjoy them it must be with girded loins and ready heart, as those whose permanent possessions are beyond. The love of God and the glad confidence in his loving care for us at once highten our pleasure in the earth and make us ready to leave it when the hour of our departure comes.

THE ETHICS OF CHURCH ENTERTAINMENTS.

Every one recognizes that the church has a social side, and that its ministry in the world must include a recognition and satisfaction of the needs of fellowship in the congregation. Each body of believers is an organic whole with interrelated and mutually dependent parts—not a mere sandheap of particles whose contact is wholly mechanical. It happens, however, that while this need is fully recognized in our Congregational churches, the tradition of the older church life does not supply accepted and unquestioned forms for its satisfaction, and it is often complicated by considerations of financial gain, much needed for church work, but offering constant temptation to a letting down of dignity and a letting in of worldliness. It so happens that attention has been directed to these abuses by a recent article in the Forum by Rev. William B. Hale, and we take the opportunity of the aroused interest in the subject to consider the matter a little more fully. Of Mr. Hale's peculiar talent for abuse of the brethren by misrepresentation and misproportion we have already spoken, and we may dismiss him altogether from the discussion.

At every point of its activity the church is bound by the law of witness bearing. It is free, but it is to be judged by the law of liberty, and its mission in the world is to commend its Lord and the life which his disciples are called upon to lead. This it can do by uprightness, by sympathy, and most readily of all, perhaps, to the superficial observation of the world, by cheerfulness. It is a good life which we follow and it brings good tidings with it to the world, and these should be witnessed by a cheerful face and cordial manner. Gloom is testimony against the Master, but it is well to remember that it does not follow that gayety is testimony on his side.

It is self-evident that our church sociability must be popular in its methods—for that is only saying that it must be effective as sociability. In one sense this is the first thing to be considered, but it can by no means be the only thing. The law of popularity must be joined with an unvarying law of propriety. "He who lifts must be high," and the world of taste and sentiment should never be called upon to look down to discover where the church stands. Public opinion is to be restrained, as well as molded, by our Christian thinking, and what the church does and admits in its own efforts to minister to the social nature of its members ought to be well above the lowest point allowed by the social conventions of the community. The thought of Christ's presence, who is always with his people, ought to guard this point and insure that dignity of bearing in enjoyment as well as worship which alone can hold the respect of the world.

On the other hand, there are diversities of opinion among us, both in different localities and within the limits of single churches, and compromise is as essential here as in any other part of common life. Conservatism must not be too much disturbed by the breaking of its conventions, and liberalism must not be too eager to have its way. If all deliberations were of the apostle's fashion of the Christian walk, "in all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love; giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," there would be little trouble on this score.

The real stress of the question comes, however, when it is attempted to combine social and financial ends, and when the eyes which look to profit overlook the dignity and honesty which best become the church. That church is wise which raises the money which it needs by the direct contributions of its congregation. The larger part of its social temptations are eliminated, and it is free to regard those who come to its gatherings as guests who are to be entertained and helped, rather than as customers to whom it must give at least enough in return so that they shall not go away grumbling that they have not had their money's worth. But if the needs of the church and the usage of the community do not warrant this step toward freedom, the canon of strict honesty must be joined to those of testimony and propriety in all social decisions for which the church can be held responsible.

RUSSIA IN TURKEY.

The responsibility for the Armenian massacres, the most cruel in all Christian history, rests chiefly on England, and its weight is not lessened by Lord Salisbury's speech last week at a meeting of Nonconformist Unionists in London. But no one familiar with the facts has any doubt that England would have put an end to these atrocities if Russia had not hindered her. For many months before the massacres of Sassoun and Moush an Armenian revolutionary society was active in fomenting disturbances. It was small in numbers, but it was especially busy in raising funds and discussing its plans among Armenians in the United States. Russian agents were among them, and it was believed by those best informed in Turkish political affairs that Russian influence was prominent in that society. Such provocation as gave any color of excuse for the attacks on Armenians came from that society. Its plans have been fulfilled as made known by Dr. Cyrus Hamlin in our issue of Dec. 28, 1893. He quoted a statement of a defender of the revolutionists as follows: "These Huntchagist bands, organized all over the empire, will watch their opportunities to kill Turks and Kurds, set fire to their villages and then make their escape into the mountains. The enraged Moslems will then rise and fall upon the defenseless Armenians and slaughter them with such barbarities that Russia will enter in the name of humanity and Christian civilization and take possession." Feb. 8, 1894, we published a communication from Rev. Dr. Barnum of Harpoot, showing how the movements of this society were dreaded by Armenians, and how nearly unanimous was their repudiation of its schemes. Its success could hardly have been possible without Russian influence and money.

To discerning eyes the hand of Russia appears in every movement in Turkey which has attracted the world's attention during the last fifteen months. These horrible atrocities have been managed with consummate system and skill. Moslems hate Greek Christians as much as Armenians. But Russia has absolutely protected the Greeks. Living side by side with Armenians, their homes, business and churches have been unmolested. As the facts come slowly to light, it is found that mobs have broken forth at well understood signals, have been effectively checked whenever they attempted to pass beyond certain boundaries, have been kept to limits of selected work and have stopped when signals were given. Whenever the other Powers have approached decisive action, Russia has blocked their way. She wants the territory where the chief disturbances have occurred, but she wants absolute authority in it and she does not want in it the spirit which has kept the independence of Bulgaria. She is willing to have those who might foster the national spirit in Armenia put out of the way and she prefers to have the odium of that work rest on Turkey.

That work is now well advanced. England has been alienated from the other Powers, or her influence with them has been weakened. The time has come for Russia to develop her plans more openly, and the understanding which she long has had with the sultan is allowed to become known as a quasi alliance. Nobody doubts that Russia is master and Turkey the servant.

We may now expect that after a time the massacres will cease. What may be left of Armenia will again have under Russia the peace of which she has been robbed by Russia's servant. But will the world be better off because of the peace thus gained? Russia is nominally Christian, but she is as barbarous and implacable as Turkey. Her statesmanship is gaining remarkable triumphs in Europe and Asia. But her victories are ominous for the world's religious advancement and political freedom.

The great conflict which impends, in which enlightened Christianity must join battle with Old World nationalities and religions, may by these recent movements be for a short time postponed, but it is surely coming, and Russia is not arrayed on the side of freedon and enlightenment.

THE FELLOWSHIP OF BELIEVERS.

So long as human nature, even when consecrated, continues to be what it is, and that doubtless will be while the world endures, everybody will have, and will indulge, personal preferences. We like some people better than others and cannot help it, even did we wish to. It is not to be expected therefore that the fellowship of Christians ever will cause us to be equally attached to all Christians. But there is a real, practical meaning to Christian fellowship, nevertheless.

It grows out of common interests and helps to promote them, and they are our highest, holiest interests. They concern not merely our property and our most important worldly affairs, nor even our intellectual development, but also the prosperity of our souls. True Christian fellowship makes itself felt in every department of life. It does not abolish social distinctions, but it robs them of injustice and bitterness and even renders them helpful.

The nearer men and women approach Jesus Christ, the nearer they approach one another. They find more in each other to be respected and liked. They learn to see life from one another's points of view, which begets sympathy and promotes good will. The more that Christ's spirit fills any heart, the more the aims and interests which are merely those of this world grow to seem unimportant compared with those which have to do with the higher and eternal world as well as with this.

The strength of the church depends largely upon the sincerity and efficiency of the fellowship of its members. Every one of them is inspired by it, even the youngest, the feeblest, the most ignorant. And if it be a true church of God, one in which the rich and the poor, the wise and the uncultured, the social leaders and the obscure, all meet together on the same footing, recognizing their common bond of union in Christ, and not allowing any worldly conditions to keep heart from quickening heart; if it be a church, the knowledge of which leads observers to say, "See how those Christians love one another"; its fellowship will be a mighty power to stimulate the devout, to uphold the weak, to save the tempted and even the fallen, and to win to Christ the skeptical.

THE WEEK IN REVIEW.

The Decay of the Senate.

The vulgar speech of Senator Tillman of South Carolina in the United States Senate last week, attacking the President, the Secretary of the Treasury and his fellow-senators who were not Populists, in the most virulent and coarse way, deserved rebuke from the presiding officer or from some of his colleagues. Such resolute action would have redeemed, somewhat, the waning reputation of the Senate for dignity and patriotism. Justly or unjustly, we think justly, public respect for the Senate is lessening, and every speech like that of Senator Tillman, every wrangle and compromise such as the one that passed the Wilson-Gorman Tariff Bill, every vote like that of Feb. 1, when Senator Jones's Free Coinage Silver Bill, by a vote of forty-two to thirty-five, was substituted for the House Bond Bill, increases the suspicion and disrespect. Personal and sectional interests seem to count for more than the national weal. The gravest problems are approached and settled in such a way as to gain partisan capital if possible.

The United States and Cuba.

The majority of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations reported to the Senate last week the following resolutions:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the present deplorable war in the island of Cuba has reached a magnitude that concerns all civilized nations, to the extent that it should be conducted, if unhappily it is longer to continue, on those principles and laws of warfare that are acknowledged to be obligatory upon civilized nations when engaged in open hostilities, including the treatment of captives who are enlisted in either army; due respect to cartels for exchange of prisoners and for other military purposes; truces and flags of truce; the provision of proper hospitals and hospital supplies and services to the sick and wounded of either army. Be it further

Resolved, That this representation of the views and opinions of Congress be sent to the President; and if he concurs therein, that he will in a friendly spirit use the good offices of this Government to the end that Spain shall be requested to accord to the armies with which it is engaged in war the rights of belligerents as the same are recognized under the laws of nations.

Spain has everything to gain and nothing to lose by carrying on the contest in Cuba in accordance with the methods of war—not those of massacre. So long as she hesitates in recognizing the rebels as belligerents she incurs responsibility for all damage done to the property of foreign residents in Cuba and her liabilities now on this score must be enormous. With credit almost exhausted in Europe, with the certainty that if this rebellion fails another will soon develop, it would seem to be folly for Spain to continue longer the present method of dealing with Cuba. Even now Congress is nearly, if not altogether, ready to recognize the Cuban revolutionists as belligerents, and atrocities on the part of General Campos's successor may impel both Congress and the Executive to act in a decisive way. We may be too far from Armenia to help her, and it may be inexpedient for us to begin to interfere with European politics as they affect Europe and Asia, but Cuba is a part of America, and Cubans struggling for liberty are not to be slaughtered save in fair conflict.

The United States and the Armenian Atrocities.

"If the balance of power is justly a cause for jealous anxiety among the governments of the Old World, and a subject for our non-interference, none the less is an observance of the Monroe Doctrine of vital concern to our people and their government" was President Cleveland's re-statement, in his famous Dec. 17 message to Congress, of our historic policy of non-intervention in European affairs. It is said that because of this very recent re-affirmation of our position and its use as the basis for an argument why we resent European interference with affairs on this continent, the President is reluctant to obey the instructions of Congress when it ordered that its resolutions be transmitted to the European Powers signing the Treaty of Berlin. The Secretary of State is said to be sounding the Powers to see how they will receive such comment by our national legislature on their shortcomings. Some of the best authorities on international law and statecraft in the country do not hesitate to affirm that Congress erred in pressing its declaration upon the Powers. They hold that the moral weight of the opinion would have been quite as effective without the clause ordering the verdict to be brought formally to the attention of the Powers, and our technical position would have been kept much stronger.

But the resolutions of Congress are only the restrained expression of popular feeling, which is surging in the soul of every lover of liberty and humanity, and dominated by such feeling men care little for traditions or the conventionalities of diplomacy. An Iowa congressman was chaffed last week because he ventured to speak in favor of giving the Turkish minister his passports, but here come sixty or more bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church in this country and they go right to the mark in their petition to President Cleveland saying:

We feel profoundly that our nation should cease to recognize the Turkish Government as a civilized Power so long as its barbarous treatment of the Armenians continues, and that it should bring every influence to bear upon the civilized nations of Europe which may cause them to present a united front in demanding that such atrocities cease at once and forever.

The United States and Turkey.

In the debate in the House of Representatives it was affirmed by those supposed to be in the confidence of Secretary Olney that Turkey had consented to grant exequaturs to the consuls we appointed and sent out to the interior of Turkey last year, but who got no farther than Constantinople for lack of recognition by the Porte. It also was asserted in the same debate that Turkey had agreed to satisfy the demands of the United States for reparation for the damage done to the property of Americans—almost exclusively that of the American Board and its servants. This is good news if true, but what does it amount to if, after the exequaturs are issued, protection for the consuls while they are traveling inland is denied? Of what avail a pledge to make restoration? It is hard cash and permits to rebuild buildings immediately that are needed.

Great Britain Deserts Armenia and Repudiates Treaties.

Bismarck once described Lord Salisbury as being a "lath painted black to look like iron." There have been times when this character analysis seemed to be unjust. The present is a time when it fits exactly. Never did a prime minister of Great Britain make a more pusillanimous, craven, ignoble, lamentable declaration respecting British foreign policy than that made by Lord Salisbury in addressing the London Nonconformists on Jan. 31. We are told by cable that they cheered him. We prefer to believe that they hissed him. If they did not then they are not the Christian patriots we take them for. Liberals and Unionists denounce the speech. Tory journals scarcely know what to say of it, and a storm of wrath has been generated that will break as soon as Parliament opens. Distrust of Lord Salisbury's management of all of Britain's foreign interests must follow such a confession of weakness in Constantinople, and British foes on the Continent will take courage. Lord Salisbury is condemned for what he did not say as well as for what he did. He did not say that the British Foreign Office was laboring for a peaceable and honorable solution of the dispute with Venezuela and the United States. He contented himself with the statement that Great Britain had no opposition to the Monroe Doctrine as interpreted by Monroe. Hon. John Morley, in a speech earlier in the week, reflected the average Englishman's position better when he said that the Foreign Office had blundered lamentably in refusing to arbitrate with Venezuela. Lord Salisbury discussed the affair in the Transvaal as if it were a comparatively trivial affair, to be settled along lines of state policy and not those of principle. As for Armenia, Turkey and British treaty obligations, he denied that Great Britain by the Treaty of Berlin was bound to maintain or restore order in any Turkish provinces save by the use of moral suasion, and declared that, as that had failed, to enter upon war was not its duty. The atrocities he ascribes to the passions of race and creed. The sultan has had no share in causing the massacres, and his authority is the only possible means of restoring order, the return of which Lord Salisbury detects, and yet as late as Dec. 28 3,500 Armenians were killed at Oorfa.

No wonder the London Daily News, commenting upon this speech, says:

The little monster who gloats in Constantinople over the butcheries and worse than butcheries which he orders and rewards will receive this announcement as glad tidings of great joy. It will come as a last message of death, misery and despair to those Armenians who have not yet suffered death by torture for worshiping Christ. Unless we are much mistaken, it will be read with inexpressible shame and disgust by thousands of decent men and women in England. . . . What Lord Salisbury says is not true. It is a hideous and ignoble distortion of the truth. This country is bound, as one of the great Powers, by the treaty of Berlin and by her own special agreement with Turkey, commonly called the Cyprus Convention, besides, to protect the Armenians and to guarantee their security against Circassians and Kurds. Lord Salisbury's speech will be considered by the sultan as a definite recantation of all the warnings which the prime minister had previously addressed to him and an apology for uttering them.

A Permanent Anglo-American Court of Arbitration.

At a conference held at Sion College, London, Jan. 14, the Bishop of Durham, Dean Farrar and Canon Wilberforce, representing the Anglican Church, Cardinal Vaughan of the Roman Catholic fold, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, president of the Free Church Congress, Dr. John Clifford, president of the London Nonconformist Council, Rev. Dr. Matthews, secretary of the Alliance of Presbyterian Churches, Rev. Dr. John Brown of the Congregational Union, Dr. Adler, the chief rabbi, Lady Henry Somerset, president of the W. C. T. U., Mr. W. T. Stead and others of like quality met to further the cause of human brotherhood by setting on foot a movement intended to create a permanent court of arbitration for Anglo-American disputes. They signed a declaration expressing their deep conviction that "all English-speaking peoples, united by race, language and religion, should regard war as the one absolutely intolerable mode of settling the various differences of the Anglo-American family"; that "any appeal to the arbitrament of the sword in disputes between English-speaking nations is reprehended by the conscience of the race," and, that, therefore, "without expressing any opinion upon pending controversies which may be regarded as sub judice, they hoped that the British Government would recognize that the present is a fit occasion for giving effect to the resolutions in favor of arbitration passed by the House of Commons and by the United States Congress." They determined to proceed to secure signatures to the declaration—the essence of which we have given—from as many of the influential citizens of Great Britain as possible, to hold meetings and special services throughout Great Britain, to enlist the press in behalf of the movement and to present the declaration when signed to the British Government. Ere long prominent citizens of this country and lovers of peace will be called upon to co-operate in this movement along similar lines, and it seems hardly necessary for us to say anything inciting all Christian patriots to co-operate heartily when the opportunity comes.

Professor Rontgen's "Cathode Rays."

We are evidently a long way yet from full knowledge of the wonderful world in which God has placed us. Added to recent advances of knowledge are further discoveries about light announced by the German Professor Rontgen and verified by other chemists of Europe and America. The power of photographing substances through a hindering medium, which is the essence of the discovery, depends upon invisible rays; that is, heat and not light rays, produced between the positive and negative current points in a Crookes tube, which is a tube in which both currents are produced in a vacuum. Certain substances offer resistance to these rays and are photographed, while others admit the passage of the rays as glass does that of the light rays by which ordinary photographs are taken. To these "cathode rays" flesh and wood and, in a somewhat less degree, the metals are practically transparent so that the bones of the living hand may be photographed through the flesh or other substances through a sheet of iron. Aside from the theoretical interest in this new glimpse of nature's secrets there is a probable side to this discovery which promises to be very helpful in the sphere of surgery. If it becomes possible to photograph the internal organs of the living body so as to locate exactly the obstructions, or the centers of disease, both the physician and the surgeon will have extraordinary help in their diagnosis of difficult cases.

NOTES.

One hundred city officials of Iowa met last week to organize an association to secure better legislation governing municipal affairs.

Another uprising in Formosa is a proof of the plottings of the former rulers, the Chinese, and reveals the magnitude of the task which Japan has entered upon.

The New York Stock Exchange has shown a fine sense of propriety in compelling the withdrawal from a firm wishing to do business on its floor of a recently-acquired partner who wrecked a bank in Boston.

Chief of Police Conlin of New York city agrees with the police commissioners that the police stations should cease to be lodging houses for vagrants. During 1895 these station houses accommodated 65,556 inmates, only two per cent. of whom were the worthy poor.

The concession made by the Greek Government to the American School of Classical Studies in Athens, granting it exclusive permission to proceed with excavations at Corinth, is especially gratifying to archæologists and students of the classics, but it pleases all Americans, for it is a tribute to the standing of American scholars in Athens.

Ex-President Harrison's frank, unmistakable declaration that he will not permit his name to come before the St. Louis Republican national convention as a candidate for renomination clears the field for other men, and should be interpreted as Mr. Harrison's expression of a natural desire to regain once more the legitimate privacy of a private, though greatly honored, citizen.

Thirty-nine and a half millions more passengers traveled on the electric railroads of Massachusetts during 1895 than traveled on them in 1894. Nearly 150 miles of new track were laid. The railroad commissioners of the State in discussing, in their annual report, these and other like interesting phenomena oppose resolutely those who are urging municipalities to sell franchises to the railway companies.

It is not unexpected, but none the less gratifying, to have such men as Hon. Edward J. Phelps, Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, Hon. William C. Whitney, Capt. A. T. Mahan and Mr. G. L. Rives report that Lord Dunraven's charges against the American gentleman and yachtsman who sailed the Defender last summer are "completely disproved and that all the circumstances indicated by him as giving rise to his suspicions are entirely and satisfactorily explained."

No conclusive proof of the existence of a treaty between Russia and Turkey has come to light during the week, but that an understanding has been perfected between the two Powers is accepted in every European capital. Bulgaria seems liable to be a storm center before long, the deposition of its nominal ruler, Ferdinand, being expected almost any time now, and then the revelation that Russia is in control there as well as at Constantinople and in the far East.

The game of politics in the Dominion of Canada is won or lost by the use of such loaded dice as the following telegram sent last week by the Bishop of Charlevois to all the Roman Catholic clergy in his diocese: "We do not wish to interfere in politics, but there is a matter of conscience involved in the question of remedial legislation, and it will be the duty of Catholics to vote only for the candidate who has pledged himself to a remedial bill which shall have been approved previously by ecclesiastical authority."

The world moves! A joint resolution has been introduced, and probably will be passed, in the legislature of South Carolina, committing that State to leadership in a movement by the Southern States to join in the erection of a statue of George Peabody, the great philanthropist, to be placed in the rotunda of the Capitol at Washington. The reason assigned is that "South Carolina and the other Southern States have, since the organization of the Peabody Educational Board, received and are still receiving continual and most helpful aid from the annual distribution of the income from the fund."

IN BRIEF.

We have put one of the choicest books—Ian Maclaren's Bonnie Brier Bush—within reach of every one of our readers. See announcement on page 204.

Many and enthusiastic are the expressions we have received of the beauty and value of our itinerary, New World Pilgrims at Old World Shrines.

Lord Salisbury asks for patience with Turkey. "O Lord, how long?"

Bostonians will miss the First Parish meeting house, the oldest landmark in Dorchester, which was destroyed by fire Feb. 3.

Immigration places heavy burdens on public charity. Out of 6,123 families helped last year by the Chicago Relief and Aid Society more than 5,000 were foreigners, the Irish heading the list with 983.

In the minutes of an ecclesiastical council lately held in one of the Interior States appears the following: "Individuals, Rev. —— ——, D. D., who sent letter of regret, and was therefore reckoned as if present." This surpasses Hon. Thomas B. Reed's skill in counting a quorum.

The genius of the Scotch has made many and great contributions to literature, but none, we think, more precious and none that comes closer to the heart than the prayer that Robert Louis Stevenson wrote for his family the night before he died in distant Samoa, which we print this week in Closet and Altar.

The New York Tribune deserves credit for making some of the leading literary and society women of New York city realize what they were doing in countenancing the indecencies of Yvette Guilbert by their presence at her concerts. "Art for art's sake" is a most dangerous phrase to adopt as a guide in conduct or thought.

An interesting question of ethics as well as etiquette is suggested by the fact that four vice-presidents of the New England Cremation Society were not cremated. Relatives protested and won. Seemingly a man who believes enough in a cause to stand sponsor for it during life should be permitted to advance the cause by the disposition of his remains after his death.

The National Woman's Suffrage Association came to its senses ultimately, and by a vote of fifty-three to forty repudiated the so-called Woman's Bible. The resolution of the association declares that:

> This association is non-sectarian, being composed of persons of all shades of religious opinion, and that it has no official connection with the so-called Women's Bible or any theological publication.

The photograph on the cover, just received from Trebizond, tells its own story of the blessed work being carried on by our missionaries in Turkey, in the "daily ministration" of food and clothing to the starving survivors of massacre and famine. Fuller accounts of this and other scenes in Turkey will appear in the "Conversation Corner" of next week, through the letters of children and others connected with the Turkish missions.

In view of the interesting work of the A. M. A. among the mountain whites of Virginia, Kentucky and neighboring States, the region in which Abraham Lincoln spent his boyhood, that society proposes that the churches observe Feb. 16 as "Lincoln Memorial Sabbath," and join in an effort to cancel its debt. Next October the association will celebrate its jubilee year with an anniversary meeting in Boston. If its burden of debt could be lifted, its rejoicing at that meeting would be great.

Elsewhere we discuss the effect that Russia's control of Turkey would have, probably, upon the fate of Armenia and the work of the American Board. It is interesting to note that Mr. Hagop Bogigian, the leading Armenian merchant of Boston, in a letter to the Boston Transcript, expresses the wish that Russia may enter in and take possession of Armenia. He says that the Armenians under Russia would be safer, happier and more prosperous. Mr. Bogigian also seems to believe that England has been entirely outwitted by Russia, and deservedly.

The imagination of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes of London "reels with delight at the mere prospect of happiness so great, so widespread, so enduring," as would follow the establishment of a permanent court of arbitration between Great Britain and the United States. Hell opened beneath his feet and he shivered as he realized what might follow, "the savage yells," "the inhuman riot," which he thinks we indulged in here after President Cleveland's "rude," "shocking message." Mr. Hughes should master his emotions.

It is significant that even projectors of new magazines state that by so doing they hope to help usher in the kingdom of God. Thus Cosmopolis, the new quarterly which publishes English, French and German contributions, says in its prospectus:

> Cosmopolis has inspired the hope in its originators that, by its independence and partiality, by its moderation and urbanity of tone, it may, in some slight measure, help to bring about a sense of closer fellowship between the nations—a larger sympathy making slowly, no doubt, but effectually, for the far-off goal of perfect culture, peace and concord.

Our Baptist brethren deserve much sympathy. A million dollar fire in Philadelphia Feb. 2 destroyed, among other properties, the building of the American Baptist Publication Society. The loss is estimated at $250,000 on the stock and machinery and $150,000 on the building. Whether the plates of publications stored in the vaults were destroyed or not is not known now, but if they were $300,000 more must be added to the loss account. Most serious of all, however, was the destruction of the valuable library of the Baptist Historical Society, including documents and books which can only be replaced, if at all, with the utmost difficulty.

---

The promises of the Bible mean something n the land of the Bible, in the midst of such perils as our missionaries are exposed to now in Turkey. A lady missionary leaving her home to go alone to the aid of the station at Trebizond writes in a private letter: "We are always accustomed to reading the Ninety-first Psalm when starting on a journey. I turned to it now, and it never impressed me before as so very appropriate. 'Neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling.' Had I not closed and left my dwelling with the thought of what had occurred to so many homes in this land in the last few weeks? 'A thousand shall fall at thy side' (how literally true), 'but it shall not come nigh thee.' I am not afraid."

---

Dr. Parkhurst, learning of a Presbyterian home missionary born on the same day, month and year that he was, sent the missionary some acceptable presents. The missionary wishes to reciprocate and has asked Dr. Gray of The Interior whether Dr. Parkhurst would appreciate a red-stone Indian pipe and hatchet as a gift. Dr. Gray thinks that Dr. Parkhurst would.

The doctor has a large assortment of hatchets in all varieties, from the mere ornament and emblem up through the battle-ax to the pole-ax. The peace pipe attached to the home missionary's weapon will be a constant and needed reminder. He can wipe the gory blade when he comes in from his day's labor, fill the opposite bowl with Kennickenic and puff peace and good will over the city to all good willing men.

All very good, but quite imaginative, inasmuch as Dr. Parkhurst does not smoke.

The publisher of the Chicago Despatch is on trial for publishing "certain obscene, lewd, lascivious matters in print." His counsel in challenging jurors ruled out as many church members as he could, which is direct testimony that if the devil should happen to come to Chicago he would encounter opposition from church members, Mr. Stead to the contrary, notwithstanding. It is gratifying to note that the attorney for the United States in his opening plea said:

If the family be corrupted, if the young be tainted, over the doors of the government is written the condemnation of its speedy fall. And it ought to fall! Any government which would establish such a gigantic system as the mail service of this country, and then suffer it to be put to base uses; which would permit that great arterial system to run rotten and reeking with the low sayings and worse imaginings of vile men—any such government ought to fall!

---

Among the brethren on the other side of the Atlantic, who are as strenuous for peace between Great Britain and the United States as any of our own religious leaders, is Dr. James Stalker of Glasgow. In a meeting of Free Church people in that city not long ago he deprecated every attempt to foment strife, and his words, if we may judge from newspaper reports, struck a responsive chord in the hearts of his listeners. From a private letter recently received from Dr. Stalker we quote these generous words, referring to warlike threats in the newspaper press: "The earnest desire here is that the memory of these may be wiped out in the proceedings of the future by friendliness and conciliatoriness on the part of our government. The glory of the United States is almost as dear to us as our own, for we regard the great and deserved influence of your country as one of the principal guarantees of the progress of the world."

---

Only a strong, self-controlled and divinely led man could have done as Mr. Moody did at his mother's funeral last week. His address was not only a most beautiful revelation of filial love, but it also abounded in details of an autobiographical nature that revealed the man's character and gave glimpses of the family and church life of New England's hillside towns. The first money Mr. Moody ever earned was in the way of reward for tending cows and the remuneration was at the rate of one cent a week, but even that pittance had to go into the common family treasury so bereft of worldly goods were the mother and her nine children after the death of the father. Mother Moody believed in the proverb: "Spare the rod and spoil the child," and Mr. Moody is glad that she did. He believes that the whippings which he received were a means of grace. Going to church was not a debatable question in the Moody family and many a time Mr. Moody when a boy trotted to church barefooted, carrying his shoes in his hand to save wear and only putting them on when near the sanctuary.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM NEW YORK.

The Congregational Club.

The January meeting was devoted to hearing Dr. Bradford, just returned from Japan, on the social and religious outlook of that country. President Marples and Dr. Virgin both pleasantly introduced the speaker, explaining why the ever sensible American Board came to the club when it had need of special wisdom. Dr. Bradford began by comparing our St. Denis entertainment with his first dinner in Kyoto, consisting of eleven courses, soup, seaweed, green turtle and rice, served by pretty Japanese girls, bowing profoundly to the floor every time they entered. One pair of chopsticks served each person from the beginning to the end of the meal, the remains of which were taken home in small boxes for the guests for breakfast—if one having sat on his underpinning for hours could recover the use of it in time for breakfast.

Leaving San Francisco on the first of July and traveling until Dec. 1, the deputation had not a single accident and scarcely a detention. The beauty of the approach to Yokohama, with the Fuji Mountain, over 12,000 feet high, he claimed could never be exaggerated. Yokohama is like a European city, but the people are very different—the men doing horses' work and the houses seeming like miniature chicken coops. Japanese politeness he found something wonderful. Two schoolboys meeting on the street bow so decorously that one might think them to be two kings. A Japanese on the scaffold would turn to the executioner and thank him with a smile or bow. Of their railways much the same may be said as of the New Jersey "D. L. & W." (Delay, Linger and Wait), but with their electric motors they kill nearly as many as do the Brooklyn trolleys (which have this week slain their 136th victim). They take their form of government from Great Britain, army from France, educational ideas from Germany, their notions of practical affairs from America, and their form of religions from "all over." What they need is more scholarly people to teach them Christianity, when they will soon be able to do their own missionary work.

Dr. Storrs on Long Pastorates.

The Manhattan Ministerial Association held its January meeting with Dr. Storrs, who spoke by request on the Conditions and Advantages of a Long Pastorate—a matter on which in his fiftieth year of service he could speak from experience and with authority, having seen eight pastors come and go, meanwhile, in one of the principal churches on the Heights, and more than thirty in neighboring churches. Among the conditions he named: a patient people; good health, preserved by avoiding night work and worry; sincere interest in his church, people and city; resolution, patience and a habit of measuring his work's success more by its quality than quantity. Drs. Virgin, Lyman and Bradford also made addresses.

Brooklyn Church Extension.

The Congregational Church Extension Society held its third annual meeting in Clinton Avenue Church on Thursday evening. Supt. William T. Stokes reported an advance all along the line over last year. Twenty-five churches and missions are now under its care, only four of which are ten years old. Membership in nineteen churches directly helped, 1,618; in their Sunday schools, 3,876; their benevolent offerings, $1,726; home expenditures, $38,237; church property paid for, $210,000. Every month is illustrating the benefits of this society to the denomination and the churches at large.

Greater New York.

This is still the chief matter of excitement on both sides of the river, and scarcely less lively in the legislature, where a joint committee, with Senator Lexow at the head and a decided majority in favor of consolidation, was appointed to hear both sides and report. There was much talk to hear, the strongest of it urging, as before, a new reference of the question to the people. Dr. Storrs spoke for many when he said: "I am not fully committed in my own mind whether consolidation is or is not the best thing. But on the question of resubmission I am as solid as the county courthouse. Neither I nor my friends have ever accepted the vote of 1894 as anything more than an expression of opinion." The final hearing is to be held on this side on Saturday, to hear the New Yorkers' closing arguments on the question, and Mr. Lexow says the decision will soon thereafter be reached.

A New Comer.

Rev. J. C. Wilson, since August, 1892, with the Center Church, Meriden, Ct., has formally accepted the call of the Puritan Church, Brooklyn, has been looking for a home there, and is expected to begin his new pastorate next Sabbath, Feb. 2. He was born in Philadelphia about thirty years ago, was graduated from Amherst in 1885 and Yale Seminary in 1888, after which he was settled in Stonington, Ct. The Puritans will afford him an abundant field for his best services. HUNTINGTON.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

Japan and the Congregational Club.

It was Japan night at the club Monday. E. J. Bennett, Esq., a member who has traveled extensively in Japan and gathered many pictures of its life and scenery, entertained the club with their exhibition through a stereopticon. But excellent as were the pictures the interest centered in the report given by Dr. J. G. Johnson of the New England Church of the results of the visit of the deputation sent to Japan by the American Board. Dr. Johnson was singularly felicitous in his statement of affairs as they came under his observation. Upon the whole the report was encouraging. One could but feel that the missionaries have done a work among the Japanese over which the constituency of the Board has every reason to rejoice. The conditions under which the property of the Doshisha has been held and other property occupied by our missionaries in the interior were fully explained as well as the attitude of the leaders in the Doshisha toward the fundamental doctrines of Christianity. It was made very clear that our churches cannot continue to furnish money to support an institution whose trustees will not affirm their belief in the personality of God or the immortality of the soul. No one present could help being glad that at last the missionaries are left free to push the work of evangelization or thankful that the churches and their pastors have so universally held fast to the truths revealed in the New Testament. Dr. Johnson convinced his hearers that the estrangement of a few brilliant men, who naturally attract a good deal of attention at present, will only be temporary and that ere long the fundamental truths of the Christian religion will be maintained and defended in Japan more earnestly and successfully than ever. At the Ministers' Meeting in the morning Dr. Johnson also spoke on the same subject, having the hour to himself.

Booker T. Washington and the Negro Problem.

Chicago Christians have had the rare privilege of hearing this distinguished colored educator describe the condition of his race in the South and set forth the results of his own work at Tuskegee. A week ago he was in Milwaukee, where he received a warm and appreciative welcome. Sunday evening he delivered a noble and instructive address to a very large audience in the Union Park Church. The story of what he has done in fourteen years sounds like a romance, yet, as he tells it, it seems to be the simplest thing in the world. Certainly he has discovered a way to reach the colored people and encourage them to make something of themselves. With a property under his control worth not less than $225,000 and 750 students in training, industrially as well as in the ordinary branches of study, he cannot fail to exert an immense influence for good in that "black belt" where his institution is situated. Monday morning the Presbyterian ministers gave him a hearing, and Tuesday at noon he addressed the students of our seminary.

Gifts for the University Library.

This time they are in books. First and most important is the so-called Buddhist Bible in 400 volumes, half of them corresponding to our Old Testament and half to the New Testament. They were sent to Dr. Barrows by Buddhist priests in appreciation of his courtesy toward them at the Parliament of Religions, and by him have been transferred to the university. They will be kept in the building, now nearly complete, erected for the Haskell Oriental Museum, where they will be accessible to all Oriental scholars. Five thousand volumes of translations and original manuscipts illustrative of Biblical scholarship, gathered by the late Dr. C. C. Conant of the American Bible Union, have been brought from the Morgan Park Academy and added to the university library. They form an exceedingly valuable collection. Mrs. W. S. Everett of Chicago has made the university a present of 120 volumes of American history. In them will be found all, or nearly all, that has been written concerning our late Civil War. The university has just received from Germany a splendid copy of the Koran, one of three known to have been made in the fifteenth century.

Another Woman's Temple.

We have one already erected, by the energy of Mrs. Matilda Carse, for the W. C. T. U. and serving the purposes of this organization admirably. Another temple for the use of women is to be erected by Potter Palmer, Esq., in honor of his wife and in memory of the World's Fair. It is to cost not less than $200,000. It has been proposed to connect it with the Art Institute and make it a museum wherein may be found all that is of interest to women; also that it be brought into connection with the university, be used as a down-town building for university extension purposes. Another plan is to have the building entirely independent of any organization, to place it on what is to be our Lake Front Park, and so construct it as to make it the home for women's clubs and the center of all their benevolent and educational efforts. Great care is to be taken, wherever it may be placed, to make it worthy of the objects it will seek to further. Both Mr. and Mrs. Palmer have given it a great deal of thought, and are obtaining advice in regard to its architecture and its location from those most competent to give it.

Dr. Gladden's Lectures.

These came to an end Friday night with a lecture on the church. The positions taken have been reasonable and Christian. There has not been the least hint of prejudice or of an unwillingness to consider facts from whatever source they may come. The Tuesday evening lecture on railways advocated control by the people on the ground that the railway is a semi-public corporation, depending for its existence and its powers on the public. The state should protect stockholders in their property, should prevent unjust discrimination in railway charges, and gradually prepare the way for government ownership, or such absolute control as will render them the righteous servants of the people.

Dr. Gladden's views on the city, the theme of Wednesday evening's lecture, are well known. The city is a corporation—one of the most necessary corporations of the time. The city has grown because of the social instinct, because it has been made a point of convergence for railways and water traffic, because many who want to live at other people's expense find better opportunities for doing so in the city than in the country. Its weakness is in its government. There is no reason why American cities should not be as well governed as those in Europe. They will be when our best men are willing to give their time to them as the best men in Europe are. On the subject of the church, discussed Friday evening, Dr. Gladden was at his best. He would use it as the great and divine agency of reform and, through it meet and remove the evils which now threaten society.

Day of Prayer for Colleges.

This has been observed with much earnestness and faith by our Christian institutions in the West. In our colleges there is a conviction that the blessings which have followed its observance in former years may, if we will, be realized anew. The faculty of our theological seminary met by themselves at eleven o'clock in the morning for prayer, the students by themselves at the same time. All came together at three in the afternoon in the chapel. This meeting was led by Professor Taylor. Dr. Johnson spoke of his impressions of what missionary life means as it was revealed to him in Japan and expressed his conviction that to us the Holy Spirit can come only as we are entirely obedient to God and willing to make use of all our powers in his service. Professor Dewey spoke for the public schools of the city, in which an army of hardly less than 220,000 children are gathered, which faithful teachers, five hours a day, five days a week, are training for good citizenship, striving to give them a character which will be ready for the truths which are spoken from the sacred desk. Reports were made from the German University and from Redfield College, whose main edifice has just been destroyed by fire, and a collection taken in its behalf. Requests for prayer for various other colleges were presented and prayers offered by President Fisk, Vice-President Blatchford of the American Board, Mr. Herbert Gates and Dr. Goodwin, of great tenderness and power. The meeting was very long but full of interest. Professor Mackenzie spent the day with Washburn College, Topeka. In many of the churches the Wednesday evening meeting was entirely devoted to prayer for students in our academies and colleges.

Dr. Ide Returns to Milwaukee.

Dr. Ide of the Grand Avenue Church, Milwaukee, received a royal welcome on his return to his pulpit Jan. 26. Dr. Ide has been laid aside for nearly four months, but seems now to be in perfect health. At the formal reception in the church parlors, Wednesday evening, Jan. 29, the congregation were present in large numbers, vying with each other in the expression of their gratitude over their pastor's restoration to health. Mr. Bridges, on behalf of the trustees and the whole church, made the address of welcome, which was as hearty and appreciative as any pastor could desire. Dr. Ide replied tenderly and gratefully. The rooms were crowded all the evening with the friends who were anxious again to grasp the hand of their pastor and look into his face. The excellent condition of the church is largely due, as Trustee Bridges gladly acknowledged, to the service rendered by Rev. H. T. Sell, who has acceptably supplied the pulpit during Dr. Ide's absence. Both Mr. and Mrs. Sell were present at the reception by special invitation.

THE BOSTON OF TODAY.

Dear Deacon Upright:—Here your pastor is at Old's Hotel. Being white they admit me, for, you know, black men, however intelligent and Christian, have difficulty in finding lodgings now in Boston's hotels.

In walking across the Common to the hotel from the station, I thought of the chaos out of which the cosmos evolved. Piles of dirt, high board fences, an elevated railroad and all the débris incident to constructing a great subway make the historic and beautiful breathing place at present very unlike its former self. Nor is this the only change. The new Tremont Temple and the new office building on the site of the old Tremont House make Tremont and Beacon Streets seem, in this vicinity, like Colorado Cañons. The doctors here say that such new conditions are sure to injure the health of people who use these streets or occupy adjacent buildings. If so, all the good people in the Congregational House are subject to deterioration.

You know you told me once that Boston was a good place to live and die in as well as to be born in, and that when a man once settled here he never left it; but men come and go here, even clergymen, much as in other places. 'Tis true that a Protestant Episcopal church in Brooklyn, N. Y., has just tried to steal Rev. Leighton Parks away from Emmanuel Church here and he has declined to go, but Rev. M. J. Savage will leave Boston for New York soon, to become the assistant and ultimately the successor of Rev. Robert Collyer of the Church of the Messiah in that city. If half of what they said about Mr. Savage at a farewell dinner given to him the other evening is true, New York has won a first-class missionary, for Mr. Savage says that the reason he goes to New York is because they need the liberal Unitarian doctrine there more than Boston does. I suppose Dr. John Hall and other men of like caliber in New York will have to take a back seat now!

The Roxbury Presbyterian Church has just installed Rev. G. L. Robinson, a graduate of Princeton Seminary. He seems to have traveled and studied more than most young clergymen, and although long exposed to the alleged deadly virus of German theologians in Berlin and Leipsic Universities he passed muster in orthodoxy, and President Patton of Princeton was on hand to give him a true blue Presbyterian send off. Dr. Gordon's former pulpit at the Clarendon Street Baptist Church is to be filled presumably by Rev. Cornelius Wolfekin, now of Brooklyn, N. Y. At least, he has been called. We never heard of him in Zionville, and the reporters and editors here in Boston don't seem to know much about him, but those who do say that he is a fit successor to the lamented Dr. Gordon.

It seemed to me as I read the paper this morning that everybody in Boston the night before must either have been dining out or attending a meeting summoned to help set the universe right. Prison reform, divorce reform, cremation, municipal betterment, eulogies of Stepniak—it amazes my wavering rural soul to see how many subjects there are on which Bostonians have firm convictions. We leave some things unsettled in Zionville, and trust in the Lord.

According to Major R. W. McLaughry and Dr. F. H. Wines of Illinois, the expert penologists who spoke at the prison reform meeting, our Massachusetts prisons are not as well managed and reformatory in their character as they should be. Of course Massachusetts pride is humbled by such criticism, but I fear it's true. The National Divorce Reform League, through its secretary, Rev. S. W. Dike, LL. D., seems to be doing valuable work without making much fuss about it. Through influence brought to bear upon legislators, through lectures by its secretary before theological seminaries, colleges and preparatory schools the society is molding public opinion, and while the treasury is leaner than it should be I know it must be because people are ignorant and not indifferent to the work the society is doing.

We and our fathers before us have buried all our revered dead up among the pines on the hillside, but there are many folks down this way who favor burning instead of burying, and among them are Mr. E. D. Mead, editor of the New England Magazine, Rev. Stopford Brooke, pastor of the First Unitarian Church, Dr. Conrad Wesselhoefft and Mrs. Margaret Deland, the novelist, all of whom spoke at the meeting held the other evening. The society controls and owns a crematory at Forest Hills Cemetery and cremated more bodies last year than in any previous year. It will be some time before we see a crematory up our way, but I incline to the idea. How does it strike your conservative mind?

They look mighty sharp after their public officials down here, what with their municipal leagues and other similar organizations, and although a man may get office by favor of the "boys," yet when he has secured the office he becomes circumspect. The new mayor, Mr. Quincy, is going to have an advisory committee of representative business men to help him keep things straight while he is in office. They will have no legal authority, but much moral influence.

The new public library and its branches are to be brought into more intimate relation with the public schools of the city if the plans of the board of trustees, the present librarian and the school authorities bear fruit. Why not? It seems to me that our town library and our school might follow the example with advantage. Perhaps you will speak to the selectmen about it.

Sunday I am going to hear Dr. Gordon of the Old South, for they say he is the strongest thinker we have now among our younger clergymen, and he preaches doctrinal sermons, too. Think of that! You who sit in the pew every Sunday can't understand how much I am counting on tomorrow's treat. Salute the brethren, give Brother Bones-on-fire a large congregation and a hearty welcome next Lord's Day, and believe me,

Faithfully yours, PASTOR GOODMAN.

CURRENT THOUGHT.

AT HOME.

The February Review of Reviews contains two articles written by experts on the present marvelous increase of gold output. "The prediction of an impending outpour of such a quantity of gold as the world has never seen —1,300 millions in the five years of the century that remain, with a production of more than 300 millions for the year 1900, would seem not wholly unreasonable. Will it be possible for our monetary systems to survive the addition of such an overwhelming flood? Our present system was framed to meet exactly the opposite conditions which now present themselves. Its authors had in view a scarcity, not a glut, of gold. Could they have foreseen the future they would have been frightened. . . . The mechanism of finance may some day have to be remodeled or readjusted to meet a situation not merely novel to this generation but unique in the history of trade. And this will come about, not through the fiat of a government, but through science and invention grappling with nature for her hidden store of gold," says Carl Snyder.

Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward, in the February McClure's, tells of Emerson's surprise at finding a Chaucer Club in Andover and other revelations of culture. She proceeds to consider his attitude as typical of the Unitarians of that period toward "the Orthodox," an attitude which she describes thus: "So by virtue of one's religious views the man or woman of Orthodox convictions, whatever one's proportion of personal culture, is regarded with a gentle superiority as being of a class still enslaved in superstition and therefore per se barbaric. Put in undecorated language, this is about the sum and substance of a state of feeling which all intelligent evangelical Christians recognize perfectly in those who have pre-empted for themselves the claims belonging to what are called the liberal faiths."

The Interior waxes sarcastic. "Two or three of our Presbyterian contemporaries have objected strongly to the course of the 'official organ' in committing the church to a vigorous foreign policy against the aggressions of England. We see no objection to the course of the Assembly Herald in speaking for the Presbyterian Church on any subject. The establishment of the paper was a part of the policy of centralization and absorption of the functions of synods, seminaries and presbyteries, which has been pushed so vigorously by our now complaining contemporaries for the last four years. If the legislative rights of the presbyteries, the judicial rights of the synods and the freedom of private benevolence to establish, own and control educational institutions are to be invaded, the liberty of the press ought to go with the rest. The Assembly Herald has not exceeded its limitations. An Assembly Church ought to have an organ of its own."

The Christian Guardian (Toronto) urges: "A Supreme Court of Arbitration for Great Britain and her colonies and the United States, consisting partly of English judges and partly of American judges and partly of colonial judges, is a step forward in the interests of peace which nothing should prevent and every one support. Will our Parliament in Ottawa turn its attention from internal affairs for a brief space and speak respectfully to the British Government on this matter?"

Most of the Boers are members of Reformed churches that are Calvinistic in doctrine and Presbyterial in polity, and they are devout and scrupulously particular in adhering to their doctrinal tenets or ritual practices. Rev. Andrew Murray is one of them. Rev. W. T. Cousins, writing in the Independent and Nonconformist concerning them, says: "They are verily children of Nature, and of Nature in her sterner moods—but they are exempt from the charge of a careless and ease-loving spirit in regard to matters of religion. To those who all their lifetime are living in the open veldt, in the midst of warring elements, rushing torrents, overshadowing mountains, and fierce winds and storms, such influences must enter largely into their religious life. The cold, stern doctrines of hyper-Calvinism have a special charm for the Boers, and they delight to read, above everything else, of the judgments of the Lord and his readiness to punish evildoers. They have been trained in a very severe school, and the pangs and heart-throbs of their forefathers still have an abiding place in their memories and hearts."

George B. Smyth concludes a highly interesting and finely illustrated article in Harper's Weekly on the massacre at Kucheng, China, and the work of the Kucheng Commission, thus: "There is not a foreigner in China who does not hope that England and America will repudiate the old despicable method of settling anti-foreign riots, accepting a money indemnity, the receiving of so much money for the spilling of so much blood. This is one of the principle sources of all our troubles in China; it brings us into contempt with the people, and has led them to feel that whatever they do can be settled for without serious results to any one. We have reached a critical time in our relations with China, and upon what is done now much in the future will depend. If drastic measures are not taken it is safe to say that in the very near future the residence of foreigners in the interior will be impossible. Vague promises of protection from Peking are worthless, and wherever it is possible the Chinese ministers mean that they shall be."

From the Scenes of the Massacres.

By Rev. H. N. Barnum, D. D., Harpoot, Turkey.

In such a disaster as has come upon this country it is impossible to secure accurate information. Even where an attempt is made to secure reports in a village they are sometimes much exaggerated, and in some cases there is an underestimate. The reign of terror is not yet over, and many of the prominent Christians whose lives are spared scarcely venture from their hiding places, and oftentimes do not know what has befallen some of their nearest neighbors. The desolation is almost universal. Even the Christian villages that have been spared have suffered so much in one way and another that in ordinary times they would be considered to have met with calamity. The reports of deaths in our own field that have reached us amount to some 16,000. We now know that in many cases they have been much exaggerated, but there are large numbers of villages from which we have heard nothing except that there has been plunder and massacre, and we are confident that if we had all the facts our reported aggregate would be less than the reality.

There is another feature of the case of which we are just learning, and that is the death of children. This has not previously been reported. Men, when they found their own death was inevitable, have killed their daughters to save them from a fate worse than death. Even mothers in their flight cast away young children, and some were thrown into streams to save them from the Turks. In some cases families who had secreted themselves strangled their infant children lest their cries should reveal their location.

The forcible conversion to Mohammedanism is perhaps the darkest side of this awful picture. Many men have died as martyrs, Gregorians as well as Protestants. They would not for a moment listen to the proposition to save their lives by changing their faith. A still larger number, some through the natural fear of death and some out of regard to their families, have professed a conversion to Islam, and have submitted to its rites and are practicing its worship in the confident expectation that relief will come from this pressure. Some of this latter class are among our best brethren, and our hearts are rent and torn by the recital of their distress. They say: "We die daily. If our wives and children could be kept from the hands of Turks and Kurds, or if they could be killed and so put out of danger, we would welcome death with great joy, even were it accompanied with torture."

The pressure in the cities is not open and strong, although in the hight of the massacre it was severe, but in the villages it still abides, though I believe the government has taken some mild steps to relieve it. When I hear of the awful condition of families that have been bereft of their natural protectors, it is not in my heart to pass severe judgment on these poor people who are now in such distress of mind. To many of these poor stricken ones Christ is more precious than ever before. They are more faithful in maintaining private and family prayers. On the other hand, there are many who have little care for religious things, who are fully committed to Islam, and who try to persuade others to follow their example. Christian public worship is suspended almost everywhere. Even where the Christians have not changed their faith, and where churches and chapels are not in ruins, they are afraid to meet lest their coming together might invite attack. Very few houses of worship remain uninjured. Where they have not been burned they have been badly damaged and are unfit for use. Some have been converted into mosques.

Five pastors and four licensed preachers have been killed, another preacher is wounded, a pastor is in prison, and most of the remainder are fugitives from their places of labor or are afraid to show themselves in public. There seems to be special animosity against Protestantism. It gives too much light and cultivates too much liberty of thought. In some places the Turks declare that they will not tolerate Protestantism any longer — that they will recognize hereafter only one Christian community. There has also been a large sacrifice of Gregorian priests. Many places have neither priest nor preacher. In some cases the priests have accepted Mohammedanism. In one instance of which I have heard an old priest was tied to a post while he was circumcised, and one of our Protestant preachers was dragged from his sickbed and held by two men while the rite was performed. In the same village the chief man of the community, a Protestant, was informed by his Turkish neighbors that he must accept their faith. He replied that he could not do it. He told them they were welcome to his house and all his property if they would spare his life, but if they would not do that he was ready to die for his faith. When he was sorely pressed he bared his neck and begged them to kill him. They said "We do not want to kill you. This is only a form. You can retain your own belief, only pronounce the formula, 'There is no God but God, and Mohammed is the prophet of God.' If you will do this others will follow your example, and in this way we can turn the Kurds away from the village and you will be the means of saving the village."
